K-State Police: no comment on Rohypnol

JEREMY KELLEY
staff writer

With all the rumors circulating about the alleged use of the date-rape drug Rohypnol at a fraternity party Oct. 5, many students are asking to find the real truth of the issue.

"The real truth is that we have no report at this time," Brian Ansay, Interfraternity Council president, said. "It is all an assumption right now."

Ansay said K-State Police are investigating the situation about a possible use of the drug, but he has no knowledge of the results of the test, which were taken from some K-State students.

"The results, whether positive or negative, are confidential to the individuals," Ansay said.

Ansay said he wanted to kill any rumors floating around among students about the situation.

"There is no evidence or proof of any drug used thus far," Ansay said. "It is all pending further investigation."

Dr. Guy Smith of Lafene Health Center reported in the Oct. 11 Collegian that there were some K-State students who came into Lafene about two weeks ago saying they thought they had ingested the drug Rohypnol.

Blood and urine samples were taken from the women to determine whether they had been under the influence of Rohypnol or a similar drug. The samples were sent to an out-of-state lab for testing.

However, at press time, Smith was not available for comment for follow-up questions about the results of these tests.

Inside

The editorial board wants the results of the Rohypnol testing made public in order to confirm or squelch speculation regarding the so-called date-rape drug's making an appearance at K-State.

Supreme Court upholds dismissal of gay Navy officer

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Clinton's "don't ask, don't tell" policy on gays in the military survived its first Supreme Court test Monday as the court rejected the appeal of a former Navy officer dismissed for declaring his homosexuality.

The justices rejected former Lt. Paul Thomasson's argument that the policy is unlawful discrimination and a violation of homosexual service members' free-speech rights.

Thomasson was forced to leave the Navy last year after writing a letter to his commander that said, "I am gay." He had served for nearly 10 years.

The court's action was not a ruling on the issue's merits and does not preclude the justices from reviewing the policy in the future. The court let stand a lower court's decision that upheld the rule barring openly homosexual people from serving in the military.

The Clinton administration said the government has a legitimate interest in prohibiting homosexual acts in the military to avoid a risk to military effectiveness and to protect service members' privacy.

"I'm tremendously disappointed," said Thomasson, who now manages a restaurant in Washington, D.C. "I know this injustice will someday be set right."

Gay-rights advocates said they were not surprised by the court's action because Thomasson challenged only the part of the policy allowing the discharge of people who say they are gay.

"This policy says absolutely no sexual ... activity anywhere as long as you're lesbian or gay," said Matt Coles of the American Civil Liberties Union's lesbian and gay rights project.

Background

Clinton's "don't ask, don't tell" policy was a compromise that resulted from congressional repudiation of his pledge to lift a longstanding ban on gays in the military. The policy is intended to let gays serve as long as they keep their sexuality private.

CATS FOR CANS

"Since Cats for Cans began, we've been able to make sure every holiday basket has a chicken or a turkey and is appropriate for the family's size."

SCOTT FOSTER, sophomore in architecture, piles more cans on the Cats for Cans pyramid with the help of Mason MacGarvey, freshman in architecture, and Aaron Cross, sophomore in architecture. The pyramid is on display in the Manhattan Town Center.

Can collection calls for collaboration of student, faculty organizations to reach goal

Bigger and better.

That's what best describes this year's Cats for Cans food drive.

Cats for Cans is a large group of K-State students whose goal is to bring additional happiness to Manhattan residents throughout the holiday season. This is the fifth consecutive year the group has gathered to collect thousands of nonperishable food items to help eliminate local hunger.

This year, the participants hope to collect 70,000 pounds of food. The goal is almost 18,000 more cans than the total collected last year.

Dustin Schafer, junior in architectural engineering and Cats for Cans chairman, said he knows the goal is a high one but has faith it will be reached.

He said a lot more groups are getting involved this year and the publicity has been much better.

Every year, the committee has managed to top the previous year's total.

"Even if a group can collect 100 pounds, it helps out," he said.

Shirley Bramhall, executive director of Flint Hills Breadbasket, said Cats for Cans has answered her prayers.

The group helps reinforce the holiday food distribution program. Last year, 3,485 baskets were dispersed for Thanksgiving and Christmas.

"Since Cats for Cans began, we've been able to make sure every holiday basket has a chicken or a turkey and is appropriate for the family's size," she said.

Ruth Ann Wefald is the K-State administration's representative for the Cats for Cans group. With her help, the group is able to reach its goals. The group could not do it without her, Schafer said.

"In a country as affluent as ours, no one should go hungry," Wefald said. "There's an abundance of resources and, if we all share, there should be enough for everyone. I'm grateful for students who choose to do their part and make this program work."

Other student groups will also join forces with the Cats for Cans committee. Greek organizations, residence halls and honorary societies are among those who have volunteered their time to collect cans.

The Department of Architectural Engineering is helping out in an unusual way. The students will have a large can sculpture on display Oct. 18 until Saturday at Manhattan Town Center.

Mall visitors can guess how many cans are in the sculpture. The closest to the actual amount will receive tickets to the K-State vs. the University of Kansas football game. It costs $1, and anyone can enter the contest.

Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity is also helping out. The fraternity has set a house goal of 15,000 pounds of cans. Last weekend, it took bags to about 3,000 homes around Manhattan. The bags, hopefully full of food, will be collected this Sunday.

The fraternity will also be sponsoring the main food drive, which will be Saturday before the K-State vs. Oklahoma game.

Members will be positioned at the stadium gates to take cans or cash donations. Cans will also be collected at basketball games.

"Each organization, group or college takes on a small part," Bramhall said. "And when you put all of the food drives together, it becomes one colossal event. It's incredible what K-State does."

KENT GLASSCOCK and Robert Littrell, candidates for Kansas House of Representatives in district 62, debated in the K-State Student Union on Monday.

Jeff Dougan, engineering senator; Maggie Keating, arts and sciences senator; and Jason Dechant, president of Young Democrats, asked the candidates questions.

"We discussed a lot of issues that were important to students," Dechant said.

"It wasn't a divisive debate, so you can't really call a winner," Dougan said.

The Collegian will present Glasscock's and Littrell's positions Friday on issues as part of the "Issues you want addressed" series.

The candidates for 3rd District Riley County Commission disagree about the county administrator position.

Karen McCulloh, a Democrat running for re-election, said the county administrator position is necessary. Republican candidate Bob Newsome said he opposes it.

McCulloh said her platform in 1992 supported adding a county administrator or manager.

"The county commission is basically a policy board," McCulloh said. "We make the decisions and are responsible for making sure they're executed."

She said the county needs a manager to implement the commission's plans.

"You've got basically three people working half time, running a $16 million business," she said. "It doesn't make sense."

She said the position would pay for itself.

"It will help us cut legal costs, and it will help us cut consultant costs," she said.

Newsome said he opposes this position because it would increase the cost of county government and citizens and taxpayers would have less contact with a county administrator than they do with their county commissioners.

He said the county administrator would be doing what county commissioners should do.

"If the county commissioners are not willing to do the job, the taxpayers should not be paying them $20,000 a year," Newsome said.

Jim Williams, a Republican running unopposed for the 2nd District County Commission seat, said he supports a county facilitator or administrator, but not a county manager.

He said a county facilitator would be a daily link between the commissioners and people who need to talk to them. The facilitator would also do research for them and be someone they would all report to.

He said this would let the commissioners be policy-makers rather than facilitators.

Newsome also challenged the incumbents' decision to put the Riley County

24 HOURS IN REVIEW

NATION WORLD

• PALESTINIANS WALK OUT OF HEBRON TALKS. Deepening a sense of crisis in Israeli-Palestinian peace talks, Palestinian negotiators unexpectedly walked out of talks Monday night in Jerusalem. The walkout came hours after U.S. mediator Dennis Ross announced that he was returning to Washington.

Israelis and Palestinians blamed each other for an impasse after two weeks of talks. The latest round of talks began in response to a plea from President Clinton following a week of violence in which Palestinian police and Israeli soldiers opened fire on each other, killing 79 people.

At a summit in Washington, Clinton persuaded the two sides to negotiate nonstop until they reached agreement.

• GM STRIKE AFFECTS U.S. WORKERS. On the brink of a deal to end a costly strike, the Canadian Auto Workers and General Motors ignored a deadline and worked into the night Monday in search of an accord.

The 20-day strike by 26,000 Canadian workers has shut down General Motors operations in Canada and idled thousands of workers in the United States and Mexico because of disruptions to the flow of parts. GM announced new strike-related layoffs Monday in the United States, raising the number of affected U.S. and Mexican workers to more than 18,000.

• OUTBREAK OF LEGIONNAIRES' DISEASE. An outbreak of Legionnaires' disease has killed two people and sickened at least 22 more, and the only thing investigators know is the victims lived in, worked in or passed through a six-square-mile area of suburban Detroit.

The number of cases rose Monday to 24 from 12 during the weekend. At least two hospitals awaited test results to see if patients recently admitted have the disease. A 74-year-old woman died Oct. 8 and a 76-year-old woman died last week.

• NORTHEAST STORM FLOODS HOMES, KILLS FIVE. Flooding kept hundreds of people out of their homes today in the Boston area as a slowly moving nor'easter, blamed for at least five deaths, poured more heavy rain on New England. The storm that began Saturday had knocked out power to hundreds of thousands of customers from New Jersey into Maine, flooded out the first game of the World Series and canceled a rowing regatta that had brought entrants from 16 countries.

An airliner made a belly landing at New York's LaGuardia Airport during the storm. Some 4.35 inches fell on New York's Central Park by the time the heaviest rain stopped early Sunday. At the storm's peak in Connecticut on Saturday, more than 100,000 homes were without electricity.

Power was cut to 45,000 northern New Jersey customers and 8,000 in Massachusetts. Around 100,000 lost power Saturday in the New York City and Long Island area.

CITY CAMPUS

• LOU DOUGLAS LECTURE SERIES. The Lou Douglas Lecture Series and the K-State College of Education will present Michael Apple, professor of education from the University of Wisconsin-Madison today in the Union Little Theatre. At 7:30 p.m., he will present a lecture called, "Education and the Conservative Restoration" and from 2:30 to 3:30 p.m., he will be addressing university issues in "Changes in Higher Education: Which Changes Does K-State Want?"

• LECTURE TO OFFER SCIENTIFIC PROOF OF GOD. Scientific proof of the existence of God and the Omega Point Theory will be discussed Wednesday by Frank Tipler, professor of mathematics at Tulane University at 7 p.m. in K-State Student Union Forum Hall. His lecture titled, "The Physics of Immortality: Scientific Proof of the Existence of God," is based on theories explained in a book authored with John D. Barrow. Tipler has also been published in "Nature, Physical Review Letters," "Physical Review," "The Astrophysical Journal" and the "Journal of Mathematical Physics."

SPORTS

• DAVIS, HESS NAMED BIG 12 PLAYERS OF THE WEEK. Iowa State running back Troy Davis and Nebraska linebacker Jon Hesse were named Big 12 Conference players of the week. Davis gained 238 yards on 36 tries with a pair of touchdowns in the Cyclones' 28-27 loss at Oklahoma State. Hesse made 11 tackles in the Cornhuskers' 24-10 victory over Texas Tech.

• MCGRATH UNDERGOES KNEE SURGERY. Kansas, which lost starting point guard Jacque Vaughn to a wrist injury before practice started, lost another on Monday when backup C.B. McGrath underwent arthroscopic knee surgery. The surgery to repair torn cartilage in McGrath's left knee was successful, but doctors were unsure how long McGrath would be out.

• NEBRASKA TO RETIRE NO. 15. Nebraska will retire former quarterback Tommie Frazier's jersey before the Kansas game Saturday in Lincoln. Frazier, the Heisman Trophy runner-up last year, led Nebraska to two straight national championships. He played with the No. 15.

• MCQUARTERS INJURED. Oklahoma State safety R.W. McQuarters will miss the rest of the season after breaking a bone in his lower leg. McQuarters suffered the injury on the first play of the second half of Saturday's 28-27 victory over Iowa State.

▶ PROPERTY TAX

Proposal might change refunds

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Nearly 18,000 more Kansas households likely would qualify and file for refunds of up to $950 on the property taxes they pay on their residences if the Legislature adopted two proposed changes in the state's Homestead Relief Program.

The estimate came from the Department of Revenue, which administers the program, during testimony today before the Legislature's interim Property Tax Committee.

The committee took no action on the proposals today.

Two of its members, Reps. Nancy Kirk, D-Topeka, and Bruce Larkin, D-Baileyville, asked for figures on the effect if the state were to increase to $25,000 the maximum annual income a household can have to qualify for property-tax relief under the program.

They also asked for the effect if the program were made available to all property taxpayers regardless of age, disability and dependent status.

According to the law, enacted in 1970 and last expanded in 1988, persons 55 and older, or with dependents younger than 18 years of age, or who are blind or disabled qualify for refunds of up to $600 on property taxes they pay — or are presumed to pay if they rent — if they have household incomes less than $17,200.

Shirley Sicilian, director of the Research and Revenue Analysis Bureau in the Revenue Department, said raising the income threshold for qualification would necessitate raising the maximum refund to $950.

She also told the committee that raising the threshold could be expected to add 7,800 households to the number that now qualify for the property-tax refunds, and making all families below the proposed $25,000 threshold eligible would add another 9,900 — a total of 17,700 new eligible households.

The cost of adding that many, she estimated, would be $4.8 million to $5 million.

She said raising the threshold alone would add $2.06 million to the cost of the program.

The state paid out $8.7 million in property-tax refunds under the program in fiscal year 1995, but the number of people qualifying and filing has been declining, and that figure dropped to $7.2 million in fiscal 1996, which ended last June 30.

The Revenue Department said 44,210 households filed for and received refunds in 1995 and only 39,119 in 1996.

In the current fiscal year, just 38,500 are expected to file, and the cost is expected to drop to $7.1 million.

GAMMA seeks maturity

SPEED

▶ This week is designated National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week and is intended to encourage the responsible consumption of alcohol.

DARCIE MCCONKEY
staff reporter

Twenty-four college-aged persons died in alcohol-related accidents in Kansas during 1995. K-State's chapter of GAMMA is trying to prevent numbers from being added to that statistic.

GAMMA, which stands for Greeks Advocating the Mature Management of Alcohol, is promoting National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week until Sunday.

GAMMA was installed on the K-State campus to encourage awareness of alcohol-related issues and promote safe and responsible drinking.

Bill Arck, GAMMA adviser, said about 86 percent of college students drink alcohol, making it a prevalent problem on college campuses.

"This week is not to tell students to stop drinking," Arck said. "We want to encourage those who drink to do so responsibly, as well as create support for the non-drinkers."

The week also provides information to students who have problems stemming from alcohol and allows them to seek help for their problems, Arck said.

GAMMA, comprised of two elected representatives from each sorority and fraternity, is working to create a positive image of K-State's greek system to dispel many of the negative images.

"I hate to characterize all greeks as abusing alcohol, but they are very visible on campus," he said. "Anything negative that occurs within the greek system tends to stand out."

Kimberly Johnson, assistant director of Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service and GAMMA adviser, said one goal is to put more information out into the community.

"I don't think the K-State greek system has had a negative image in the past. Just like anyone else on campus, they have had positive and negative things happen. This week is centered around promoting responsible use, and maybe it will change a few people's perceptions about alcohol," Johnson said.

Greek members can use their visibility to their advantage during this week, however, when they are active in promoting the mature management of alcohol.

Stacey Chapman, junior in elementary education and representative for the Chi Omega sorority, said she thinks GAMMA is starting to gain attention and support for its active role in alcohol awareness.

"Being a part of the awareness week allows us to help make students aware of problems related to alcohol," Chapman said. "By no means are we telling them not to drink, but we do want them to drink maturely."

Although a variety of people make up the group, they are united by a common interest to educate students on the dangers of drinking, as well provide relevant information, said Edee Fisher, sophomore in accounting and finance, and representative for Kappa Alpha Theta.

"I think GAMMA brings about awareness of mature drinking," Fisher said. "We don't mean to tell students not to drink. We just mean they need to use good judgment."

Although GAMMA is only in its second year on the K-State campus, Fisher said she believes the student organization has created a positive image for the greek system.

"I think it shows that the greek system is trying very hard to promote responsible drinking," she said.

Aside from K-State students' wearing blue ribbons to show support for the week, local sororities and fraternities will display luminaries, which will be lighted from 5 to 8 p.m. Wednesday in remembrance of the 24 alcohol-related fatalities.

Thursday, "Friendship in the Age of AIDS" will be presented, featuring T.J. Sullivan and Joel Goldman. The program focuses on Goldman's fraternity experience, as well as the risks of combining alcohol and unprotected sex.

They will speak at 7:30 p.m. in McCain Auditorium as part of the Greek 101 series, sponsored by KSU Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils.

However, no speaking will take place during the 24 seconds of silence at the K-State football game Saturday. Coach Bill Snyder will deliver a public service announcement regarding drinking and driving and request the spectators observe 24 seconds of silence for those college-aged persons who died in 1995.

GAMMA is also sponsoring a campus volleyball tournament from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday and encourages students, faculty and Manhattan community members to participate. People interested in participating in this fundraiser can obtain an entry form at Lafene 232. The cost is $40 per six-member team, and the deadline for team registration is Wednesday.

"It's very important that people are made aware of the problems regarding alcohol use," Chapman said. "These activities are an excellent way to involve everyone in the community."

TWA, Boeing named in New York lawsuit

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A lawyer who said he knows what caused TWA Flight 800 to explode in the sky filed a $100-million lawsuit Monday, accusing the airline and Boeing Co. of failing to design and maintain the plane properly.

Federal investigators have not yet been able to determine whether a bomb, missile or mechanical malfunction caused the Paris-bound plane to explode July 17 shortly after takeoff from New York City.

But Lee Kreindler, an aviation lawyer who won $500 million for victims' families after the 1988 Pan Am jet explosion over Lockerbie, Scotland, said his experts have figured out the cause — from press reports, because they have not been allowed to examine the wreckage.

Kreindler said he filed a $100-million federal lawsuit Monday on behalf of the survivors of Leonard Johnson of Virginia, accusing TWA and Boeing of willful misconduct and negligence.

TWA spokesman Mark Abels found it incredible that a lawyer would declare the mystery solved before investigators reach a conclusion. He also said the plane was well-maintained.

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

The tests should be back by now; rumors need to be confirmed or denied

An injustice has been committed at K-State. Maybe.

It's been in the papers, and it's been through the rumor mill. The police have investigated, and the medical community has run its tests.

But no one knows what happened.

WHY WE CARE

It's time to either confirm or squelch rumors and recent speculation of the so-called date-rape drug making an appearance at K-State.

We refer, of course, to the alleged use of Rohypnol or GHB at a fraternity party several weeks ago. Representatives from the K-State Police and Lafene Health Center confirmed that tests were done to see if a crime was committed.

But the results should be in by now — and no one is talking.

We hope the results will be negative. The thought that anyone could victimize their fellow students in such a way is something we don't even want to consider.

But the rumors still fly, and they will until evidence is presented to clear the record.

If the results are negative, the greek community is being unfairly maligned by the uninformed. They have said they want the rumors stopped.

But they will never stop until the test results come back and are made public.

If the results are positive, several K-State students have had a crime committed against them. And until the perpetrators are forced to take responsibility for their actions, there will be nothing to prevent this crime from being committed again.

But we will never know until the test results are made public.

The results are confidential medical records between the patients and their physicians. And we understand the difficulties involved with making those results public — no matter what they are.

But that's why the student support community at K-State is so strong. We understand that no one wants to be singled out. But names don't need to be involved. Those involved should release the results to an official of the greek community or the dean of student life.

Students want to know — and, dependent on the test results, their honor or their safety hinges on knowing.

We get scores of letters and phone calls. We hear it talked about in classes and at parties. Now we, the Collegian, add our voice to the cry.

If the test results are in, let the campus know. All anyone wants is the truth.

Sentence-structure lesson earns student teacher student's respect

MY

Christy LITTLE

With some amusement, I can recall my 10 Point Discipline Plan I wrote for Pat Staver last year in my Language Arts Methods class.

These well-intentioned Holy Commandments included some of the following disciplinary gems: A busy student doesn't have time to misbehave. Always be fair. Be consistent about positive reinforcement. Get outside help when necessary.

In my mind, no classroom situation could arise that my 10 commandments could not master. Besides, being their teacher, I would have students' utmost respect as well as unvarying attention at all times. Right?

Well, it took my well-intentioned but conceited ego a short while to discover that what I had to say did not necessarily fascinate my students as much as it did me. My first teaching unit was a week-long plan on sentence structure for my senior English classes. I had perhaps a hint of reservation that grammar is rarely a student favorite, but surely my classes would grow to revel in subject-verb agreement and marvel at the difference a strong, active voice could make.

I think my own enthusiasm, as well as the novelty of observing my first teaching experience, maintained mild student interest throughout the week. I showed students headline bloopers with misplaced modifiers. I wrote passages about the Chiefs' latest game in entirely passive voice and had them rewrite them. I entertained them with sly compound sentences.

By the end of the week, however, a mild rebellion had erupted in the slightly unruly fifth-hour class. Watching Miss Little conquer the overhead projector and talk passionately about since versus because no longer held my students captive. I could not make it more entertaining, useful or interesting than I already had.

My cooperating teacher firmly upheld that belief. It was grammar, and there would be five days of it. We would have to bear it out.

By Thursday, an excerpt of my fifth-hour class sounded a little like this:

"So, as I was saying, because denotes a — Jake, be quiet — cause-effect relationship, while — sssshhhhh — since — hey, I'm serious, here — represents more of a time element. Kristen and Eddie, stop talking. Josh, stop talking. So, does this mean we can use since and because interchangeably?"

> "In that week of trial and torture that was sentence structure, I had been tested, and I had passed."

Silence.

"Matt, do because and since mean the same thing?"

Silence.

"Matt?"

"What?"

"Matt, do because and since mean the same thing?"

"Ummm..." (meanwhile, mayhem has broken out in the back). "Well, I use them the same."

I was fairly patient, it being early in the hour. "Yes, I think we all do sometimes, but should we? What if I — QUIET! — What if I said, 'I'm staying home tonight since I'm feeling sick.' Would that be OK?"

"Sounds OK to me," Matt said.

By this time, my unvarying attention to Matt, who most willfully did not want to learn the difference between since and because, had allowed the rest of the room to go bananas.

After this brief intellectual exchange with Matt, I spent two minutes settling everyone down again before presenting them the question yet again.

I viewed the unit as a mild defeat, even though I wasn't prepared to quit student teaching, as I thought might happen after my first long-term encounter in front of the room. I was not so inherently fascinating a person as to keep everyone's attention. This crushed me. But I had an interesting experience working with the same group a few weeks later with "Beowulf."

They were fine.

Well, a few rebels refused to read aloud in class, but when I forced the question, I could see why: They were poor readers.

In fact, one of the students who refused me approached me immediately after class.

"Miss Little," he said anxiously. "Miss Little, I didn't mean to be rude. I'm just not a good reader. I wasn't trying to be rude, Miss Little."

It dawned on me that this student cared what I thought of him. He certainly wasn't concerned about his grade, which was terrible, and upon which I had nearly no effect. In that week of trial and torture that was sentence structure, I had been tested, and I had passed. I had not lost my temper. I had not assigned detentions. I had not embarrassed anyone. I had continued to smile at my students in the halls and congratulate them on their debate tournament, their football game.

This had done more for my discipline plan than 101 Holy Commandments. If the students genuinely liked me — and respected me; let's not forget that — I think discipline falls into place.

I will soon teach Chinua Achebe's "Things Fall Apart." I expect the title to take a whole new meaning for me on occasion. That's the nature of a 22-year-old trying to direct a roomful of high-school seniors, all of whom brandish brochures for a Cancun spring break trip in as early as September.

Still, I think I have learned all the commandments I need.

Give it to Keely

Keely'll eat it

She'll eat anything ... she likes it

As a little girl, I used to run home from the neighbor boys' houses or turn off an afternoon's worth of Super Station TBS reruns right at 6 p.m. to eat supper with my family.

Meals, it seemed, were meant to be shared in brotherly love.

During the meal, my older brothers would tease and kick, or worse, they'd look at me.

I hated that!

And there was never any telling whether Mom would scold them for doing it or me for squawking about it.

As you can imagine then, I was usually quite relieved to be sitting alone at the kitchen table long after everyone else had finished and gone. The only thing that lay between me and sheer peacefulness was the cold slab of meatloaf still on my plate.

Then mom would return, set the oven timer very deliberately to five minutes and tell me I had exactly that much time to get it down.

How I wished she would leave again!

There was a perfectly good schnauzer under the table who wanted that meatloaf more than I did.

She stuck around and trained me well, though. These days, I'll eat pretty much anything that isn't dirty or rotten. I've eaten baby-goat tacos.

I've eaten a soup called menudo which, incidentally, is a great cure for a hangover, because the chunks of cow stomach lining in it absorb alcohol like so many slimy little sponges.

> "Disgusting or simply uncommon, I can also indulge my little food fetishes. Right now, I think lime juice makes the world taste better. I squeeze it on my apples and bananas, on my pasta, into my beer, on my salads and on my refried beans."

For two whole semesters I contentedly ate at Derby Food Center. The only problem was, one of my regular supper companions used to point at my tray and say, "Ugh! You're not really going to eat that, are you?"

Yeah, I really was going to eat it.

Then I moved into my sorority house for two years, and meals became an exercise in listening to picky eaters whine.

With such a history of, shall we say, less than pleasant company at meals, you'd think I wouldn't mind eating alone.

This year, I'm getting my chance. I live in a big white house with three roommates, and it's rare that any two of us will happen to be seated at the table at the same time — even rarer that we will be sharing the same meal. We do try to fix and eat supper together once a week, but we are four college students with four unique schedules.

MY

Keely SCHIELDS

The majority of the time, I find myself cooking for one and eating alone.

It's not without its advantages.

For one, I don't have to worry about my culinary ineptitude. I'm a lousy cook, but what does it matter when I'm the only one eating it and I eat indiscriminately?

Disgusting or simply uncommon, I can also indulge my little food fetishes. Right now, I think lime juice makes the world taste better. I squeeze it on my apples and bananas, on my pasta, into my beer, on my salads and on my refried beans.

With the possible exception of washing the dishes alone, supper alone is not such a terrible thing.

So why do I catch myself trying to simulate the presence of others?

People make noise when they eat together, so I turn the stereo on. People are something to look at when you're eating, so I open up a magazine and flip through the pictures.

When they're not complaining, people sometimes say interesting things at meals, so I start reading any articles that catch my eye.

Then, when I'm completely stuffed, I see I've made enough pasta or rice to feed four or five. That's when I start feeling like a little hermit who's doing strange and unnatural things with food by virtue of the fact that she's eating it alone.

That's when I wish someone were staring steadily at me, kicking me under the table or even wrinkling up her nose and pointing at my plate in disgust.

'Roofies' scare was overblown

Editor,

Well, now that the Collegian has successfully created a roofies scare on our campus and published numerous unfounded articles about this alleged appearance at fraternity parties, let's see some evidence. The laboratory results are now back, so why is it that we have not heard what was uncovered? I would venture to guess that this is because the tests were negative. What we seem to have here is a case of underaged and unexperienced drinkers who had a few too many and got sick. The Collegian's articles and the many untruthful rumors have been extremely damaging to the reputation of the fraternity involved. As a member of a sorority at the University, I also have to admit that I was rather amused by the notion of a greek cover-up. If there was a date-rape drug floating around the campus, why would we want to cover it up? Do you actually think we would want to put our friends and fellow students at risk of being assaulted? I think as writers for the Collegian, it is important to leave out personal biases about greeks or any other group when reporting the news. I understand the intent was to alert the public to alert the public about of the facts before going going ahead with the articles.

No one has ever died from not having any leather products

Editor,

Not to be picky or anything, but after reading two responses to Page Getz's column, I think there is a need for some clarification.

First of all, a small point which Aaron Carman bases half of his letter on, the catchy title that had nothing to do with the column was written by an editor for that reason — to be catchy. Getz didn't trick you. The editor wanted to bring your attention to the column.

But I digress.

There are many more errors embedded in the combined efforts of Ryan Edelman and Scott Harvey.

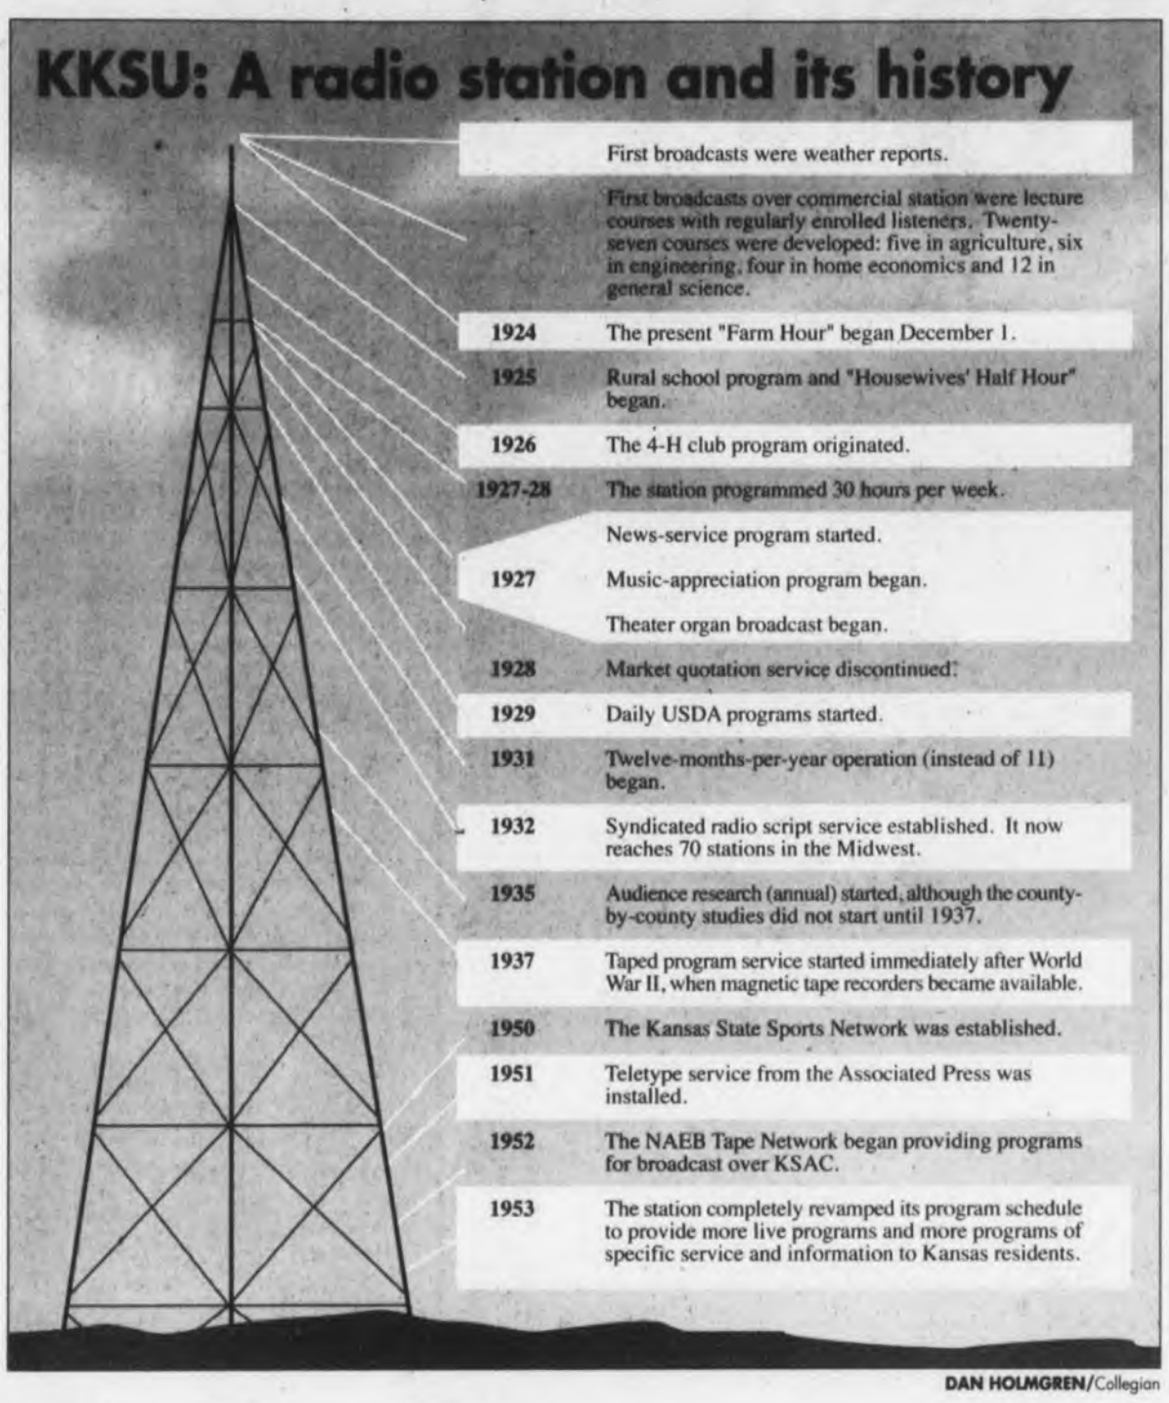
Although it is true that range lands and forests "cannot be farmed to produce a crop such as corn," they have many varieties of vegetation fit for human consumption. Granted, you can't just grab a handful of whatever green stuff you find, but it is possible to live off the vegetation if you know how to look for the the things you need.

I would submit to you that leather products and pharmaceuticals are not really necessities. I find I am still able to live without cow hides over my own flesh. Necessities are oxygen, food, water and shelter; when you are lacking in one of these, you might die of asphyxiation, starvation, dehydration or overexposure. I would find it strange if "lack of leather goods"were listed as a cause of death somewhere.

As for the over-produced pharmaceutical industry, most of its wears are consumed by people who do not take care of their bodies by eating the right (yes, plant-based) foods, and so they need to repair the damage done by bad habits. It might be argued that before these drugs were used, disease and death were widespread. Take a look at the Middle Ages. What is rarely discussed is the fact that changes in sanitation levels are much more responsible for the increase in the average human life span.

By the time you need a cure, it might already be too late. Prevention is the key. Why don't we put money into research for preventive measures? It won't make anyone rich. If a clove of garlic a day can help one stay healthy, why would any of the drug companies support that research? (True, if toothpaste and mouthwash manufactures had the money, they'd probably support that research.)

Anything that is prehistoric cannot be "cited" (though it might be "sited" if one were to find it at an archeological site.) Prehistoric means it happened before a written record was made. As such, all we know about prehistory comes from educated guesses.



Quotes from the Bible are always safe. You can interpret them any way you want, though it should be noted that it is not a good idea to attach God's name to any biblical quote. The Bible was not written by God, but by the hand of man (men, maybe a woman). If you decide to attach God's name to words from the Bible, you might be liable in the highest court in the universe.

The question I have about the particular quote: "Let us make man in our image, in our likeliness, and let them rule over the fish ..." Is that if "rule" equals "among other things, have the ability to eat," are kings and queens able to eat their subjects? If this is the case, then I'm doubly glad I'm living in the United States.

Perhaps a short story about Ben Franklin will clear up a few things. Franklin was a vegetarian until he went on an ocean voyage and some members of the crew caught a large fish, sliced it open and found a smaller fish of the same kind inside of its stomach. Ben reasoned thus, "If you can eat fish, then so may I," and he did.

So it shouldn't be any surprise to a meat eater if another were to decide to have him for dinner.

Radio Days

Kansas' first educational broadcasting station, KKSU-AM 580, continues to serve students, public

ALIESA GOOD

The first educational broadcasting station in Kansas is on the K-State campus. KKSU-AM 580 is a pioneer radio voice in the United States.

Radio at K-State began with experiments in the Department of Physics in the early 1900s. In 1912, the physics department installed a transmitter with 100-watt power. The station was licensed 9YV and was the first weather broadcasting station west of the Mississippi River.

"The weather report was popular with farmers, and they considered it necessary to learn Morse code," Ralph Titus, retired general manager, said.

In 1924, after K-State had experienced great success at broadcasting extension courses by radio over KFKB in Milford, the college went on the air with KSAC, standing for Kansas State Agriculture College, a 500-watt station at 880 kilocycles.

In 1928, KSAC received permission from the Federal Radio Commission to change from 880 kilocycles to 580 kilocycles.

In 1929, Capper Publications of Topeka asked to be part of the frequency for its commercial station, WIBW-AM, an arrangement that remains in effect.

"KKSU and WIBW are one of a few stations in the United States that share the same frequency," Titus said.

KKSU is one of the nation's most powerful radio stations. It covers all of Kansas and reaches into Missouri, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Iowa.

"Its signal covers more of Kansas than any other station in Kansas," Titus said.

KKSU is part of the Department of Communications and is funded by the Cooperative Extension Service. Titus said he thinks it is the only station in the country funded this way.

"During the '20s, a lot of educational stations didn't survive the Depression," Titus said. "KKSU survived because of federal extension money."

"Take the University to the people" is the mandate placed on KKSU as part of the Kansas Cooperative Extension Service.

In 1984, the call letters were changed to KKSU to reflect the change from Kansas State Agriculture College to Kansas State University.

The KKSU twin radio towers, built in 1924, are thought to be the last of their kind in the country.

They are near Calvin and Nichols halls. At the base of the north tower is a fountain and rest area built by the Kansas Association of Broadcasters as a memorial to pioneer broadcasting.

"The towers are no longer used," Titus said. "They serve as part of history today and were placed on the National Register of Historic Places."

The future of the station is tied to on-air broadcast and delivery of K-State expertise to other stations.

"We need to keep our finger on the pulse of trends, future technology and people in Kansas," Larry Jackson, station manager, said.

"The station must be on top of trends during programming and off-air activities."

Crew members sterilize facility after slaughters

MATT BASLER
staff reporter

The processing room in Weber Hall is filled with blood, bones and animal remains.

However, this room has to be cleaned and sterilized in order to comply with USDA standards. Who would take such a job?

Enter the K-State meat lab cleanup crew. Its job is to make sure every machine, tool, hose and basin are free of blood and other leftovers from the day's cutting.

Many people have the wrong impression about the meat lab cleanup crew.

Most think that at the end of the day, there are decapitated heads and legs lying around. This is not the case.

"It's not too bad," Craig Mayo, junior in construction science, said.

"We clean up the lab after they have processed the meat."

Mayo, who is the meat lab cleanup crew supervisor, said most of the gory parts are already taken care of before the meat gets to the processing area.

"When they kill, they'll take most of the major byproducts, like the heads and skins, and put them away," Mayo said.

He said there is a cooler where all the byproducts are kept.

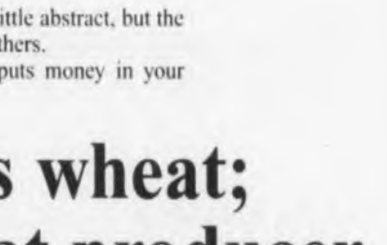
"You've got all these expanding stomachs and heads in there, and when you're cleaning that room up, it gets to you sometimes," Mayo said.

Mayo and the rest of the cleanup crew then go through and clean all the floors and the equipment used to kill the animals.

John Wolf, meat lab manager, oversees the cleanup and makes sure the processing rooms meet USDA standards.

Wolf said a typical day of work in the life of a cleanup crew member starts at 5 p.m.

The crew does a pre-rinse of all the machinery and equipment.



Because the equipment is waterproof, the crew can spray everything directly.

After everything is hosed down properly, crew members begin to scrub every inch in the meat lab to make sure all the blood and grime is cleaned off.

Crew members uses a chlorine-based sterilization agent to scrub the machines down, Wolf said.

When everything has been scrubbed down, crew members then hose off the equipment with 180-degree water.

Mayo said that after cleaning up all the floors and other odd jobs, he has to fill out paperwork for the USDA.

He said the USDA inspector comes to check the facilities periodically.

The facilities have to meet certain standards before meat can be brought out and cut in them.

If the inspector has any complaints, he tells Wolf.

"I hear about it when the inspector tells him about it," Mayo said.

In addition to getting wet while cleaning, Mayo said the worst part about the job is cleaning the killing floor.

He said crew members sometimes have to clean out a machine called the Hog Scalder.

This machine takes all the hair off of the hogs. Crew members then have to clean this hair out.

Mayo said another aspect of the job that isn't the greatest is the smell.

"It gets really bad, especially at the beginning of the school year when its still warm and there's no air conditioning."

Mayo said there are many misconceptions people have about working on cleanup crew.

"It's usually right away — 'Yuck, you clean up all that nasty fat and that ground-up meat,' but it's not that bad," Mayo said.

Mayo said the hours are the best part of the job.

"You come in for a few hours a day and work until 7 or 8 p.m. You get done with work and get home and have plenty of time to study."

Five days a week, Mayo said working on cleanup crew is a good job.

He said he admits it is a little abstract, but the good aspects outweigh the others.

"It works out well and puts money in your pocket," Mayo said.

Corn, sorghum surpass wheat; North Dakota top wheat producer

HEATHER HJETLAND
staff reporter

Move over, Kansas wheat. Corn and sorghum production is much higher this year.

Kansas might be known as the wheat state, but wheat is not the most abundant crop in Kansas this year.

"This is the first time in a long, long time that there has been a greater production of corn and sorghum than wheat," said Gary Paulsen, professor of agronomy.

Kansas corn and sorghum production are both at a record high because of good weather since May.

"During the summer, temperatures were close to optimum for both crops, and the rain was timely," Paulsen said.

Paulsen said livestock feeders could benefit from the increased production because sorghum and corn are used as an energy source in feed grains for hogs and cattle.

"Cattle prices are down, and feed prices are up," he said. "Cattle feeders are under a lot of pressure, and this should help them."

Despite lower corn and sorghum prices, farmers should also benefit from the large crops produced, said Harvey Kiser, a K-State agricultural economist.

They should have a higher gross income when yield is multiplied by the price, he said.

According to the Kansas Agricultural Statistics Department, Kansas ranks first in the nation for sorghum production. Kansas sorghum grain production is forecast at a record high at 349.6 million bushels, which is 101 percent larger than last year.

The department also reports Kansas corn production is expected to total a record 340.8 million bushels, up 39 percent from last year's crop.

The final estimate of the 1996 Kansas wheat production is 255.2 million bushels, 11 percent smaller than last year's crop.

Typically, Kansas is the top-producing wheat state, and North Dakota is second.

However, Kansas is second to North Dakota in wheat production for the second straight year, according to a department report.

The wheat crop can be attributed to weather-related crop failure, Kiser said.

JEREMY KELLEY

The K-State men's soccer club took part in the KSU/Ed Chartrand 18th-annual Memorial Soccer Tournament this past weekend at Frank Anneberg Park.

Eleven teams competed, including five from the Big 12 Conference. Vying for a spot in the national tournament in Phoenix, the Cats took to the field in hopes of being one of the top two Big 12 teams in the round-robin tournament.

The Cats' first match was a sunflower showdown against the KU Jayhawks, a team which had beaten them a week before.

"KU really hustles," Andy Francis, senior goalie, said. "They are rough, and they are physical, and they are going to play physical until they get on top."

Down 2-0 at halftime, the Cats were determined to get back into the game, and a strong defense would be the only weapon to stop the Hawks attack.

"We play a high-pressure defense, and we take some chances," Todd Wallentine, sophomore defender, said. "Most teams tend to lose control against it, but KU didn't."

The defense was strong, allowing only one shot on goal throughout the first 25 minutes of the second half. However, it only took one defensive slip for the Hawks to score on a errant cross to the near post and win the contest, 3-0.

"We had chance to win," Francis said. "But we were not talking, and we looked flat."

KU's ball control hurt the Cats the most as they pushed their way up the field.

"The short game is our type of game," KU coach Carl Eaton said. "We move in short triangles up the field and usually control the ball."

The Cats would later find out the short passing game wasn't only used by KU. In their second contest against Iowa State, K-State saw the same style of play.

"Iowa State did the same thing as KU did, and probably even more so than KU," Francis said.

It was the control game that hurt the Cats again, and they lost to Iowa State 5-0.

In their final match of the round robin tournament, the Cats squared off against the Missouri Tigers.

"We just wanted to go out and make a good showing," Francis said.

K-State controlled much of the first half and kept the ball on their own offensive end. With 15 minutes left in the half, K-State scored on a shot from 25 yards and recorded their lone goal in the tournament.

Looking to maintain the lead, K-State poured out onto the field and concentrated on defense. However, as the half progressed, the defense collapsed, and the Tigers scored four goals winning the game, 4-1.

"We had a tough time in this tournament due to injuries," Wallentine said. "But there is definitely room for improvement here."

The Cats were plagued with many injuries as the tournament progressed.

"Those who of us who were injured seemed to play more sporadically. We had a tough time," Wallentine said.

K-State seemed to lack leadership because they were without their president and defensive whiz, Eric Fitzwater. Fitzwater couldn't make the tournament because he had to attend an ROTC field exercise at Fort Riley.

"The loss of Eric hurt our leadership on the field," Wallentine said. "He gives our team an air of confidence."

Fitzwater, a senior from Stillwell, was the recipient of the 1996 Ed Chartrand Memorial Soccer Scholarship. The $500 scholarship is presented each year to a K-State soccer player and is funded by private donations as well as donations from the Chartrand family.

ABBIE BROWN, K-State true freshman volleyball player, was Iowa Player of the Year last season, her senior year at Eldora HS. She's brought her winning ways to K-State where she is quickly making a name for herself.

Winning is nothing new for true freshman Brown

▪ Wildcat newcomer Abbie Brown comes to Manhattan from Eldora, Iowa, where she was Iowa Player of the Year her senior season.

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

Sure, K-State volleyball coach Jim Moore is going to have good things to say about freshman swing hitter Abbie Brown.

Brown

When a successful coach takes over an unsuccessful program, it's not uncommon for top recruits to earn play time in an effort to revitalize the program.

But this — this is something special.

"For sure, at the net she's the best player I've recruited in my career," Moore said of Brown. "She hits as well as anybody, and she blocks really well too."

High praise indeed, considering Moore coached Stacy Metro, a two-time national Player of the Year and now a an assistant coach for the Wildcats, during his tenure at Northern Michigan.

But Brown has proven she's worthy of such accolades. She ranks third in kills for the No. 25 Wildcats, behind only seniors Kate DeClerk and Toie Young. And though her hitting efficiency of .234 is not among the team's best, Moore said it is still impressive for a freshman who gets most of her attacks from the outside and the back row.

The move from the middle to the outside was just one adjustment Brown had to make coming from high school.

"The block is so much bigger in college," Brown said. "In high school, I could just hit over most blockers, now I have to go around them."

But Brown has been working on using blocks to her advantage since the first days of practice. She's also been working on her serve, a powerful top-spin jump-serve that might be one of the most potent in the Big 12.

"Her serve was really bad when she got here. It was a slow top-spin serve that didn't do anybody any good," Moore said.

"But I knew she could jump-serve because I'd worked with her in camp, so we gave her that as a weapon."

One thing that isn't new to Brown is winning, something she became accustomed to at New Providence High School in Eldora, Iowa, where she was named Iowa Player of the Year as a senior.

That, she said, helps take away the pressure of being the only freshman starter on a nationally ranked team.

"In high school my freshman year, I started, so I don't really feel that much pressure," Brown explained. "Volleyball has always been fun, so if I start to feel I'm not having fun, it's time to stop."

> "Being a freshman, I expect to win. It's not that I don't think that's a worthy goal, but I wasn't here when things were bad."
> — ABBIE BROWN, WILDCAT OUTSIDE HITTER

And although the team's goal of earning an NCAA berth would mark a first for K-State, Brown said she expects nothing less.

"Being a freshman, I expect to win," she said. "It's not that I don't think that's a worthy goal, but I wasn't here when things were bad.

"I expect to win, and now that we're winning, I expect to keep winning."

Michigan hurts Wildcats

JEREMY KELLEY
sports writer

K-State's cross country teams battled the northern tundra as they competed in the Wolverine Inter-regional Invitational Sunday at the University of Michigan.

"We didn't run very well Sunday," Coach Terry Drake said. "We were up against some tough competition."

The Cats also had to battle some of the nation's top competitors in Georgetown, North Carolina State, Bowling Green and Michigan.

"There were a lot of good teams in this tournament, and we didn't run well enough to beat them," Drake said.

The men's team finished seventh in the tournament, and the women's team tied for sixth but were only 20 points out of fifth place.

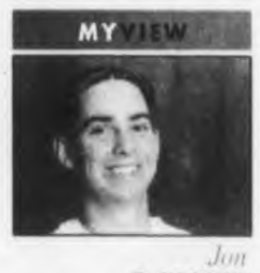
"There were some good things about this tournament," Drake said. "Our girls ran very well, considering that we lost two out of our top five runners."

Kathryn Wolfram, just coming off a hip injury, finished well, Drake said, and despite the bad finish, the team is still looking forward to more competition.

"It wasn't a total loss, but we still have a way to go to compete with these bigger teams," Drake said.

Samantha McNamara had the best finish for the Cats' women, finishing in 19th place.

"Samantha ran a really good race and beat some very good runners," Drake said. "I was disappointed about getting beat like this, and I sure both squads were too. But we will make improvements and move on."



Wrestling, wigs, Rodman: NBA predictions for 1996-97 season

A couple days ago, while kicking back on my bed contemplating whether to do homework before or after "Buzzkill," a commercial for Dennis Rodman's new MTV show popped onto the screen.

This sudden barrage of multicolored hair and tattoos forced me to ponder the age-old question, "What will the 1996-97 National Basketball Association season bring?"

Well, Wildcats, after an extensive session of Mountain Dew-fueled research that led to enough roundball info to fill Madison Square Garden, I have conceived a select number of concrete predictions for the upcoming season. Some will be expected, but others will force you to ask, "Just how much caffeine did this kid consume?" Well, you're about to find out, 'cause it's time to open the envelopes and gaze into my world of hoop predictions.

MY VIEW

Jon BALMER

■ The talent-laden Orlando Magic will fall to the Los Angeles Clippers at home in a midseason showdown. The real excitement will come late in the game, when enraged Magic coach Brian Williams accidentally crushes Magic guard Penny Hardaway's close friend and Nike ad sidekick Little Penny. Claiming he was just trying to fire up the team, Williams is soon boycotted by the National Puppets Association.

Attempting to win back public favor, Williams attempts to rebuild Little Penny out of twine and Legos. Hardaway refuses Williams' gift, and Magic team morale hits an all-time low.

■ In the midst of an 11-game winning streak, the Los Angeles Lakers discover they will be without the services of center Shaquille O'Neal for the remainder of the season.

While filming another pointless, plot-lacking movie, O'Neal is hit in the head by a loose light fixture. The blow causes Shaq to believe he is the genie Kazaam, a character from one of his previous movie flops. Refusing to participate in "a pointless contest of bouncing leather," as he calls it, Shaq walks out on the Lakers and announces his goal is now to battle the genie from "Aladdin" for the title of "Head Turban Wearer." Disney immediately purchases the movie rights and signs O'Neal for $100 million. The Lakers plunge from conference leader to basement-dweller.

■ Continuing to lead the league in rebounds, Chicago Bulls forward Dennis Rodman agrees to endorse Kool-Aid as his official hair dye. Then, during a late December clash with the Indiana Pacers, Rodman's hair unexpectedly falls out because of the overwhelming amount of chemicals rubbed into his noggin.

Realizing his endorsement deal is now over, Rodman frantically searches the United Center crowd for help. After locating a Chicago super-fan, Rodman borrows his rainbow wig and wears it the remainder of the contest. Deciding he likes his new image, Rodman agrees to a new endorsement deal with Galoopanopsee Rainbow Wigs of Galoopanopsee, Ill. Nike soon follows the announcement with a new "Rain-Rod" ad campaign, and soon adolescent Bulls fans across America are sporting the Rodman look.

■ Attempting to raise Canadian interest in basketball, Vancouver center Bryant Reeves agrees to wrestle team mascot Gus the Grizzle in a no-holds-barred, 12 round pay-per-view special. Airing Feb. 24, the epic match-up takes third in the Canadian TV ratings, finishing behind a rerun of a Canucks-Maple Leafs hockey game and an encore screening of "Strange Brew."

■ Facing serious lack of fan interest, the Dallas Mavericks agree to sign ego-inflated Dallas Cowboy Deion Sanders to a 10-game contract.

The promotional strategy goes awry when, after attempting a dunk against the San Antonio Spurs, Deion's enormous amount of gold necklaces become tangled in the net. After gnawing through the net with his own bare teeth, Sanders frees himself and vows never to play "in a league this hazardous again."

And there you have it, my crystal ball of NBA insight. I know I might have left out some minor details, but the predictions made were just too vital to cut for something as meaningless as who'll win the championship (Hint: They come from the land of Hendrix and Griffey).

So lace up your old school Converse, strap on your rainbow wigs, and get ready for some roundball, 'cause these predictions, as well as the entire NBA season, are coming faster than a Barkley technical.

Folk singer legend to fans

staff writer

Ani DiFranco. Though a legend in her own right among her thousands of fans, DiFranco is not a household name. She is one of the still-hidden treasures in folk music who has remained preciously unearthed.

live. music REVIEW

But to the thousand or so followers who attended DiFranco's earth-shaking concert at The Paseo Academy in Kansas City on Saturday night, she is more than another folkie.

She is a woman, a friend. She is a leader (whether she likes it or not) and a pusher of the unconventional.

The modest stage was bathed in pastel light, a color that sharply contrasted DiFranco's songs.

Her following of fans, an unshaven, patchouli-scented mass, leapt to their feet when she took the stage.

Song after song, audience members got down and funky in their own little section of their row. Row after row, shoulders and hair shuffled and bobbed to the primal beat of DiFranco's music.

Through both sets of her performance, DiFranco continuously played off the crowd's shouts of "I love you, Ani!" and "Would you buy me a beer after the show?" that lent a comfortable degree of intimacy to the show.

It was just Ani and a thousand of her close friends. One fan shouted "Ani, tell 'em to turn down the house lights!" She responded, "You got somethin' to hide?"

It's the content of DiFranco's songs that creates this bond between herself and her listeners. Her gripping and brutally honest lyrics answer to their thoughts and feelings in a way that provides assurance that there are others out there with the same inner-churnings.

DiFranco played her guitar as if she was acting out the contents of her songs. Her delicate hands flew furiously across the strings, communicating her bare inner thoughts to the willing crowd of ears. Like everything else DiFranco created, she played the guitar with stark honesty, which was a welcome sound in this day of digital everything.

Another thing that keeps DiFranco so accessible is her unwillingness to sign with any big label. Rather, she publishes her work on her own label, Righteous Babe Records.

Because she doesn't have the backing of a big label, she relies mainly on word of mouth to sell her records. This tactic has worked extraordinarily well for DiFranco. She plays at sold-out shows all over North America. Her recent release, "Dilate," started at No. 87 on the Billboard chart, a feat which is virtually unheard of for an independent label.

DiFranco's ear-blasting, body-boogie concert showcased her unmatched talent in the folk circuit. Throughout the two hours, she became a part of the audience, and they became a part of her. Afterward, satisfied listeners gathered outside for a cigarette.

Student seeks soul mate, not just another one-night stand

Dear Cassandra,

In the somewhat recent past, I went through what I would call a "dating phase" in which I sought a high quantity of experiences over high-quality experiences in my search for a soul-mate. Fortunately, I was fairly successful and enjoyed many experiences, although most were pretty shallow and short-lived.

I've since matured in my ways and now seek something on a higher level, or at least more meaningful than a one-night stand. The problem is my "success" rate has declined dramatically.

Please help me with this perplexing irony.

Blue

Dear Blue,

The answer you seek lies within the question itself. What are you looking for?

Your previous "success" was based on your desire to live in the here-and-now, and an unbelievable number of people in Manhattan seek the same thing.

It's not hard to go to Aggieville and find someone of the opposite sex (or the same sex, I suppose) who is willing to share an evening of prurient activity. And with that end in mind, both the means and the level of selectivity take on very little meaning.

Now you're thinking about the future, and the rules have changed. By your own admission, you are no longer going to be satisfied with the first person willing to do the horizontal bop — neither is your partner.

Finding someone worth spending a life with is far more difficult than finding someone to spend the night with. Some are lucky enough to be smitten at first sight, but most have to spend a great deal of time to make a real relationship work.

There is probably going to be heartbreak in your future. But when you find that perfect soul mate, the time and energy will seem well-spent.

Training exercises, cold weather challenge cadets learning to play war

The cold M-16 rested in the cadet's gloved hands. He lay in the thick brush fully camouflaged, waiting for the enemy so he could empty his clip into the chilly night air.

No, we're not at war. The K-State ROTC Battalion conducted its annual field-training exercise at Fort Riley this weekend. The FTX exposes cadets and officers alike to the rigors of field life.

Cadets either slept in their two-man tents Friday night or braved it under the stars. The entire battalion was up and running at 5 a.m.

"This weekend is meant to boost morale and promote teamwork," Mike Flentie, senior in geography, said. "The coldness is just another challenge to overcome."

The battalion was picked up from the Bramlage Coliseum parking lot by three UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters. The helicopter flight exposed the cadets to an actual air-lift.

For juniors, the FTX is designed to get them ready for advanced camp. All cadets between their junior and senior years go to advanced camp at Fort Lewis in Washington.

While the juniors took classes Friday night, the sophomores and freshmen were introduced to firing the M-16 assault rifle through a simulated battle.

"The rush of sitting there with a M-16 waiting for the enemy makes it worth the cold," Craig Schobert, freshman in architecture, said.

The freshmen and sophomores practiced offensive and defensive battlefield tactics before the simulated battle. The freshmen took the defensive side of the battle while the sophomores attacked.

"We're here to train our cadets on the battle drills associated with light infantry," Capt. Brad Duffey, military science instructor, said. "A battle drill is no different than a football team practicing a certain play."

During the two-day course, junior cadets receive classes on how to conduct raids, ambushes and reconnaissance.

In their training squad tactical reaction assessment course, junior leaders are graded on their ability to lead and coordinate their squad.

The cadets also were introduced to each branch of the Army. The engineers, armor, infantry, mortars, artillery, scouts and the medical-service corps all formed a semicircle with their collective vehicles.

The cadets toured each station, getting an eyeful of Army armor. The armor division brought a M1A1 Abrams tank, and the infantry drove a Bradley Fighting Vehicle. In all, there were seven stations.

After the display stations, the cadets were taken to the firing range. The juniors attempted to qualify on the M-16, while most of the freshmen were firing live ammunition for the first time.

"It was kind of tense at first. I'd like to get better at it, though," Jay Stalter, sophomore in hospital administration, said. "I need practice."

The final strenuous event of the day was the obstacle course. The course was at least 600 meters, Cadet Lt. Col. Shae Weide, senior in secondary education, said.

Weide was the cadet in charge of FTX.

"All the planning involved can be intimidating. It's amazing to see your plan come together," Weide said. "It's just a great feeling."

TWO CADETS look at the turret of an M-1 Abrams. There was a large collection of vehicles, tracked and untracked, for the cadets to look at Saturday morning, ranging from the M-1, the most technologically advanced tank, to modified HUMMVs designed to scout.

ABOVE. ONE OF three UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters lift off from KSU stadium's west parking lot. The Blackhawks were loaded with cadets headed to Fort Riley.

JASON McINTYRE, junior in marketing and international business, crouches beside a road, in preparation of attempting an ambush. McIntyre is having his position critiqued by Chris Howell, junior in political science.

'Virus' to infect Bombers with Margin of Error tour

Margin of Error, a band that just finished its debut album, "Virus," in the Chicago studio owned by heavy-metal band Ministry, will play at 9 p.m. Thursday at Bombers.

Margin of Error is a Lawrence band originally from Wichita. It spent two weeks this summer recording a 12-track album in the same studio in which Nine Inch Nails, Red Hot Chili Peppers, the Cure, Public Enemy, Duran Duran and others have recorded big-label releases.

The new album is scheduled to arrive in Manhattan stores around Nov. 29.

Lead singer and guitarist Paul Christian said all the songs on the album were written especially for "Virus."

"Almost every one of them were written in the last year," Christian said.

For Thursday night's performance in Aggieville, Christian said the band will play mostly from "Virus" but will also feature some newer material not on "Virus."

On stage, the band likes to give its audience something visual and musical, Christian said.

He describes the band's work on stage as performance rock."

> "We have worked and practiced to make our stage performance much more flowing," Christian said.

> MARGIN OF ERROR LEAD SINGER

As for the band's sound, he said it ranges from a large, gothic sound to somewhat subdued — almost a lullaby.

After the release of "Virus," Margin of Error will be on the road playing across the Midwest.

"We'll take 'Virus' as far as it goes,"Christian said.

Next summer, Christian said the band hopes to record its second album and begin a tour of the East Coast.

Harm to unborn gets driver 16

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas — A drunken driver got 16 years in prison Monday for manslaughter in the death of a baby who was delivered prematurely after an auto accident.

SPEED

▶ A drunken driver's conviction touched on the question of when life begins and was watched closely by both sides of the abortion debate.

The case is one of the first in Texas to test whether a person can be held criminally liable for harming an unborn child. Because it touched on the question of when life begins, it was closely watched by both sides in the abortion debate.

Frank Flores Cuellar, 50, had faced up to 20 years in prison in the death of Krystal Zuniga, who was delivered shortly after a June 15 car accident.

Cuellar's blood-alcohol level was more than twice the legal limit when he drove his truck into a car driven by Jeannie Coronado as she returned from a late-night trip to the grocery store.

Coronado, 7-1/2 months pregnant, gave birth to Krystal by emergency Caesarean section. The baby weighed just 4 pounds and had extensive brain damage. She died within two days.

The jury took only an hour last week to convict Cuellar of intoxication manslaughter. It took six hours to decide on a sentence Monday.

Cuellar apologized after the sentence was read, saying: "I didn't intend for any of this to happen."

Pro-life activists hailed the verdict as a step toward tougher laws against criminals whose actions harm the unborn. Pro-choice supporters warned it could lead to a new determination of when life begins and, eventually, the outlawing of abortion.

Cuellar's attorney, Anne Marshall, promised to appeal, saying Cuellar should not have been prosecuted, because Krystal was not alive at the time of the accident. She repeatedly cited the state's legal definition of a person as an individual "who has been born and is alive."

The baby's grandmother, Rebecca Coronado, said, "She wasn't a fetus. She had a heartbeat. We lost her, but I know we won at the end."

Outside court, a female juror said several members of the seven-woman, five-man panel had held out for probation.

"Several jurors felt that 20 years was too much and that he really needed help," said the juror, who refused to give her name.

The same juror said the panel had no difficulty deciding to convict, despite the defense's argument that Krystal was not a person when the accident occurred.

"The baby was human," the juror said. "The baby had a birth certificate, a death certificate and died of injuries resulting from the accident."

Several states have laws giving legal standing to unborn children in criminal cases. Similar legislation has been proposed in Texas in past years but has not been passed.

A state appeals court considered a similar case in 1994, overturning the conviction of a woman charged with reckless injury to a child for smoking crack while pregnant. The court said the legislature has specifically limited the application of laws to conduct that injures a human being who has been born and is alive.

Cuellar is awaiting trial on drunken-driving and intoxication-assault charges from the same accident. The defense sought a separate trial on those charges so that Cuellar's three prior drunken-driving convictions would not be brought up during the manslaughter trial.

He could get up to 10 years in prison on each of those charges.

THE BRENTANO STRING QUARTET plays Monday night to a crowd in McCain Auditorium. The quartet is from Millbrook, N.Y., and was here as part of the McCain Series.

▶ REVIEW

Quartet provides good tunes

ASHLEY CELLER
staff reporter

An audience in a nearly filled McCain Auditorium Sunday evening enjoyed a program of beautiful chamber music performed by the Brentano String Quartet.

You didn't have to be a classical music aficionado to appreciate the extraordinary pieces they played.

The program included Schubert's String Quartet in G Minor, Chou Wen-chung's "Clouds," and Beethoven's String Quartet in B-Flat Major, Opus 130.

Schubert wrote the string quartet at age 18, the same year he wrote two other symphonies and almost 150 songs, a prolific amount of composing for someone who was also teaching.

The piece titled "Clouds," by Chou Wen-chung, was unusual and was an interesting contrast to the rest of the program because it was not written in a specific key signature.

Beethoven's Opus 130, in contrast to Schubert's youthful piece, was composed in the three years before his death at age 57.

The fifth movement, "Cavatina," Adagio Molto Espressivo, is moving.

The finale, the last movement of his String Quartet in B-Flat Major, was the last piece of music he completed.

Unlike most classical string quartets, which are very sedate, Brentano played with energy and passion.

The music seemed to flow through their bodies in a manner normally associated with rock musicians.

It captured and engaged the audience in a more personal way and drew them into the music.

The quartet consists of musicians Misha Amory on the viola; Mark Steinberg, violin; Serena Canin, violin; and Michael Kannen, cello.

They are all skilled musicians who have won several individual prizes and awards, and have all played with outstanding, world-renowned orchestras.

Police Department's law-enforcement Center on the ballot, but later he changed his mind.

In an interview Oct. 10, Newsome said he opposed the proposal for the law -enforcement Center.

However, on Oct. 12, he said he was neutral about it.

This proposal will be on the ballot Nov. 5.

It proposes a half-cent sales tax starting Jan. 1, 1999, to pay for building the LEC, which would be at Seth Childs Road and Fort Riley Boulevard.

McCulloh said the tax will be collected until the LEC building is paid for.

She said the building will cost $10.8 million plus about $3 million in interest.

She said it will probably take about six years to collect this, but that could change if the county's population changes.

Newsome said Riley County needs a new jail or an updated jail, but he is neutral about the proposal.

Williams said he thinks the LEC should be on the November ballot.

He said a buffer zone is created around the LEC by a highway the state would build next to the site at no cost to the county.

The location is the best one, Williams said, because it is visible in the community.

Newsome said that being a county extension agent for 16 years gives him a better understanding of county budgets and county extension programs.

He also said he wants to make county government a consumer-driven program.

"The county has one purpose, and that is to serve the public," Newsome said.

McCulloh said she wants to continue building consensus in the county commission.

"I'm very good at building consensus," she said. "I'd like to see a number of the things I've started become viable options."

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said this incident was being investigated by the campus police.

"If the police find some information, we will take our lead from the police," Bosco said.

Bosco said he would not necessarily be informed of the results of the tests.

"The analysis of the tests is between the individual and the physician," he said. "Whether the individual would release that information to the police is up to that person."

Capt. Robert Mellgren of the campus police said he had no new information about the alleged use of the drug, commonly known as roofies.

"I have not been informed of the results as of yet," Mellgren said.

Mellgren said he might not be informed of the results unless an individual directly involved with the situation were to file a report.

FBI manager charged with felony

RUBY REWIND

Ruby Ridge was a standoff between white separatists and the FBI in August 1992. The standoff resulted in three deaths, prompting an FBI investigation.

■ Federal officials file complaint against Kahoe for concealing an FBI headquarters document.

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A former FBI headquarters manager was charged with obstruction of justice Tuesday for allegedly destroying an internal critique of the bureau's actions at the deadly 1992 siege at Ruby Ridge, Idaho.

A one-count felony information was filed by prosecutors against E. Michael Kahoe, who was chief of the FBI's violent crimes section at the time of the siege.

A criminal-information rather than a grand-jury indictment usually is a sign prosecutors have reached a bargain for the defendant to plead guilty and cooperate with the investigation.

A Justice Department official requesting anonymity offered no reason to expect this case to be different from that normal practice.

Four other top FBI officials, including former Deputy FBI Director Larry Potts, remain under investigation in the coverup probe by U.S. Attorney Michael Stiles.

During the August 1992 standoff with white separatist Randy Weaver, an FBI sniper shot and killed Weaver's wife, Vicki, and wounded Randy Weaver and a friend, Kevin Harris.

The siege began after Weaver's son, Samuel, and a deputy U.S. marshal, William F. Degan, were killed in gunfire Aug. 21 as marshals tried to arrest the elder Weaver for failing to appear in court on gun-sale charges.

Kahoe

The government charged that between January and April 1993, Kahoe destroyed a written FBI after-action critique so that it would not be available to prosecutors in the trial of Weaver and Harris on charges of killing Degan. They were acquitted later of that charge.

The prosecutors wanted the document to prepare their case and to meet constitutional requirements to turn over to the defense any information that might help clear Weaver or Degan.

The government charged Kahoe not only destroyed his copies of the report but ordered a subordinate at FBI headquarters, who was not named, "to destroy all copies of the Ruby Ridge after-action critique and to make it appear as if the Ruby Ridge after-action critique never existed."

No immediate court date was set for Kahoe to answer the charge, which carries a top penalty of 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Kahoe was head of the Jacksonville, Fla., FBI office, when he and other top FBI officials were suspended in August 1995 as the case was referred to Stiles for possible criminal prosecution.

The probe has focused on whether headquarters officials lied and destroyed documents to cover up the bureau's actions during the siege.

The investigators also have reviewed the conduct of agents at the scene. The FBI sniper who shot Vicki Weaver said he hit her accidentally while aiming at Harris, who was armed.

Potts and the FBI's field commander at Ruby Ridge, Eugene Glenn, have disagreed under oath over whether Potts ordered, as Glenn said, that agents "could and should" shoot to kill any adult spotted in the open during the siege.

FBI Director Louis Freeh, while concluding that the FBI sniper did not follow such an order, has revised FBI weapons policies to preclude shooting except where necessary to prevent harm or injury.

Guest lecturer speaks of dangers and trends in education systems

ANDREW FRANCIS

Michael Apple, a professor of education from the University of Wisconsin-Madison, said he wanted to raise awareness of the problems facing education in the United States.

Apple spoke as part of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series on Public Issues Tuesday night in Forum Hall.

"While I will speak of dangers, I will not speak of pessimism," he said.

> PROFESSOR OF EDUCATION FROM THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN-MADISON

Apple said he wanted to raise awareness about where the United States' education systems are heading.

If current trends continue, educational systems nationwide are heading toward privatization, Apple said. Privatization of schools would lead to separation of gender, race and economic status.

Apple said there are four elements that pose danger to the nation's education system: the neo-liberals, the neo-conservatives, authoritarian populists and the professional/middle class. He said the four political movements will lead to the privatizing of schools.

"Neo-liberals want to blame institutions that cannot do anything about the problem," he said. "They are shifting the blame from economic structure to public structure."

Neo-conservatives want to raise standards in education, but are taking money away from programs needed to raise those standards, Apple said.

"They blame schools for problems but treat schools as black holes sucking out money," he said.

One member of the audience said she agreed there are other factors involved.

"School systems cannot be blamed for everything," Cindy Shuman, graduate student in adult education, said.

Fitzwater accepts offer to deliver 108th lecture

MATT SPURGIN
staff reporter

K-State alumnus and former White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater accepted an invitation to deliver the 108th Landon Lecture at 10:30 a.m. Nov. 21 in McCain Auditorium.

Fitzwater is the first K-State alumnus in the 30-year history of the lecture series to speak.

Debbie VanDeVelde, secretary for the Landon Lecture Series, said Fitzwater was recommended by Sen. Nancy Kassebaum as a speaker for the series. VanDeVelde said he was sent an invitation to speak and he accepted.

Fitzwater served as deputy press secretary to President Reagan from 1983 to 1985. He then served as Vice President Bush's spokesman until he became Reagan's press secretary in 1987. Fitzwater kept that position when Bush was elected to the presidency in 1988.

Fitzwater

Fitzwater is the author of the bestselling book "Call the Briefing," which is an account of his 10 years in the White House.

VanDeVelde said she was unsure what Fitzwater would lecture about, but she said the presidential election was a possible lecture topic.

House of Representatives candidates express concern about quality of state education

BREE BISNETTE
contributing writer

Support for education emerged as the primary concern of both candidates campaigning for the 62nd District Kansas House of Representatives seat.

Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, said quality education within the state was bedrock to him.

"There is no finer or more important issue than the capacity of Kansas to educate its brightest young people and prepare them for roles in our community so they can help build our collective future," Glasscock said.

Glasscock's opposition, local attorney Robert Littrell, said his No. 1 priority is also public education.

Littrell also said he challenges Glasscock's stance on education. He cites the 1995 legislation that resulted in a budget cut for 1996 Kansas Board of Regents institutions as support for this statement.

"One of the things I have accused my opponent of doing is a secret deal costing the regents $4.1 million and K-State $1 million," Littrell said. "It cost K-State a bundle, and that proves Glasscock is not the K-State supporter he claims to be."

Littrell said Glasscock knew votes were present to stop the budget cut from affecting the regents institutions but did not act on this information.

"I am not saying he tried to affirmatively take steps to take money from K-State, but he was given the opportunity to fight and declined to," Littrell said.

Glasscock said it is ridiculous to think he would not want the financial cuts reversed for regents institutions.

"All of the Democratic and Republican regents representatives were scrambling to get votes to stop the cuts, but the votes just were not there. That's why no amendment was offered," Glasscock said. "I never have done anything to hurt K-State, and I never will."

Gun control was another issue on which the candidates had differing points of view.

Glasscock said he has voted in the past for a concealed-carry bill because of the strong limitations placed on it.

NATION WORLD

• 20,800 TROOPS POSSIBLY EXPOSED TO NERVE GAS. The Pentagon is trying to contact 20,800 Gulf War veterans who might have been exposed to nerve gas during the destruction of an Iraqi chemical-weapons depot in 1991. In announcing the move Tuesday, the Pentagon also acknowledged hundreds more nerve gas rockets might have been exploded than first thought and expanded the time frame when exposure might have occurred. Letters being sent to U.S. troops and veterans now state the period of possible exposure as March 4-15 of that year.

• GM STRIKE SETTLED. General Motors settled a three-week strike with its workers in Canada Tuesday, resolving a power struggle about job security that had idled more than 46,000 workers across North America. The Canadian Auto Workers' 26,300 strikers were expected to ratify the agreement in a vote today, and they could be back at work by the end of the week. Once the Canadian plants resume production, GM should be able to start bringing back nearly 20,000 U.S. and Mexican workers laid off because of strike-related disruptions.

• OKLAHOMA CITY COUNCIL VOTES TO CLOSE STREET AT SITE OF BOMB BLAST. Bowing to the wishes of families of bombing victims, the Oklahoma City Council unanimously voted Tuesday to permanently close the street in front of the blast site. The council's vote came over the objections of a few merchants in the area, who maintained that closing the one-block stretch will hurt their businesses.

Victims' families want that section of Fifth Street included in a planned memorial to those killed when a bomb ripped through the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building. The April 19, 1995, bombing killed 168 people and injured more than 500 others. The chairman of the memorial task force, Bob Johnson, said he plans to start an international design competition for the memorial Nov. 15. In addition to closing the street, the city is buying some land across the street from the federal building site to be part of the memorial site. But the precise nature of the memorial has yet to be decided.

• AT LEAST 26 DEAD IN VENEZUELA JAIL FIRE. Flames consumed a cell in an overcrowded downtown prison early Tuesday, killing at least 26 inmates. It was unclear whether guards or prisoners started the fire. Three guards were detained for questioning after Antonio Marval, director of prisons, said the blaze had been sparked by tear-gas canisters that guards threw into the cell. But a lawyer with the Attorney General's office said prisoners told him they had set their own mattresses on fire.

• HUTU REBELS ASSASSINATE GOVERNOR. The Tutsi military governor of a province dominated by Hutu rebels was assassinated while on a campaign trip to rally villager support, a Burundi government spokesman said Tuesday. Lt. Col. Marcel Sinarinze was killed Monday as he was traveling in a convoy near the Zairian border town of Buganda, 25 miles northwest of Bujumbura, said Evold Banzbaze, a spokesman for Burundi's military ruler, Maj. Pierre Buyoya. Four soldiers and one civilian were also killed; another soldier was seriously wounded.

• PROSECUTORS ASK JUDGE TO REJECT CLASSIFIED DATA REQUEST. Prosecutors have asked a federal judge to deny Timothy McVeigh's request for a new search for classified information on possible Oklahoma City bombing suspects. In a brief made public Monday, prosecutors said they have given McVeigh voluminous information, including rumor, speculation and innuendo, on individuals he has identified as possible suspects.

McVeigh's lawyer, Stephen Jones contends the government halted its search for suspects prematurely when McVeigh was arrested shortly after the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building. Jones has asked for a range of classified government documents said he believes could prove others were responsible for the explosion.

SPORTS

• NOV. 15 DEADLINE FOR INTERLEAGUE PLAY. Baseball will abandon its attempt to start interleague play next season unless a new labor deal is in place by Nov. 15, acting commissioner Bud Selig said Tuesday.

Union head Donald Fehr and management negotiator Randy Levine are scheduled to resume talks Wednesday before Game four of the World Series. Selig said he will filter in and out of the bargaining.

• FLORIDA TO REQUEST NCAA RESTORE COLLINS' ELIGIBILITY. The University of Florida, after conducting its own investigation, said Tuesday it will request that an NCAA committee restore the eligibility of sophomore offensive tackle Mo Collins after the Nov. 9 Vanderbilt game.

The school looked into Collins' involvement with a sports agent and found he didn't sign an agent contract or agree to be represented by an agent.

The school found that Collins accepted $500 from someone associated with an agent but didn't accept any other benefits.

MICHAEL APPLE, professor at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, gives his lecture, "Education and the Conservative Restoration," Tuesday night in Forum Hall as part of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series.

Lecturer fields education questions

contributing writer

K-State must make decisions as higher education undergoes reform in the United States.

Michael Apple, a professor of education at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, appeared before a panel of five K-State faculty members to address questions on education reform Tuesday afternoon. He discussed what changes should be adopted or resisted and what is realistic.

John Exdell, professor of philosophy, asked Apple about the Kansas Board of Regents' plan titled Vision 20/20.

Vision 20/20 involves using existing resources to increase the quality of education, despite the projected 20-percent increase in enrollment in the next decade.

"It is a fiscal impossibility to do more with less," Apple said. "The expense of trying to do this will be intensification. Professors will have to work more — up to 63 hours a week. They will be mentally and physically exhausted and will have to sacrifice their research agendas.

"This will cause the quality of undergraduate education to go down."

Another topic brought up by Ron Trewyn, associate vice provost for research and a professor of biology, was the issue of whether to increase university and industry partnerships in the future .

An increased emphasis on university and corporate coalitions would cause a decrease in the humanities programs of universities, Apple said.

Because universities are only allotted so much money, the money will become unequally distributed, he said.

Agriculture, computer science, and certain chemistry and physics programs would receive additional funding and humanities, and social sciences would be viewed as frills, he said.

"The transformation of libraries that has occurred in universities is an example," Apple said. "Journals in the physical sciences and other high-tech subjects cost $3,000 a year, which means about 30 journals in humanities have to be dropped.

"What will count as knowledge is that which has economic payoff."

Warren White, a professor of special education, asked Apple about one of the latest revolutions in education — distance programs.

Distance programs include watching television or listening to the radio to learn information. Students then participate in tutorial meetings and take tests based on this information to assess the knowledge gained.

There have been some successes with distance programs, Apple said. However, he said there are some dangers to be aware of.

Apple said an academic proletariat may result, meaning a lower standard of education.

"There have been some cases of purchasing well-known professors," Apple said. "People never really interact with the professor. The college buys the course on interactive video for $2,000, and students watch it, and their only interaction is through e-mail. I think there should be time for serious conversation and argument."

Apple has written more than 20 books and more than 130 articles on education, education reform, curriculum policy, cultural reproduction and education politics.

APPLE

Apple said the conservative movement wants to take education back to earlier days of education, when there was a sense of cultural unity, but conservatives fail to realize the diversity of early education.

"To say that everyone has the same history in this nation is a misstatement," he said.

Apple said he disagrees with the authoritarian-populist movement, but is sympathetic to the movement only because many of its criticisms of bureaucratic policies are accurate.

But he said he still disagrees with groups only accepting someone because of beliefs and membership.

Schools should take time to consider the arguments made by authoritarian populist groups and not push away the groups' ideas because of political beliefs, Apple said.

"We are creating part of the enemy by not being responsive," he said.

Apple said the middle-class movement wants more tightly controlled school systems that will lead to a lack of innovative teaching because educators will have strict guidelines.

Apple said wisely investing money in education will improve the system and thoughtful parent interaction is crucial.

One audience member said Apple was speaking on a level everyone could understand.

"His facts were extremely precise. He didn't walk around any of the issues," James Sheerin, senior in elementary education, said.

Apple was on campus Monday and Tuesday speaking to students. He conducted a radio interview and spoke to graduate students about higher education.

The Lou Douglas Lecture Series deals with topics pertaining to human rights, social justice, world peace and international development. Each year four or five speakers are invited by the lecture committee to address issues of current interest.

Education making curriculum changes

ANDREA COREY
staff reporter

Entering freshmen for the fall 1997 may see some changes if they are in the College of Education.

Course and curriculum changes were passed by the College of Education faculty Tuesday and are on their way to three more University bodies for approval.

The changes should give future elementary and secondary education majors more choices in the classes they are required to take, Martha Kellstrom, assistant professor in elementary education, said.

"The elementary education program used to be very prescriptive," she said.

In addition to being able to choose more of their general education classes, Kellstrom said education majors will be able to switch from one program to another more easily.

At present, students may be in school one to two semesters longer if they decide to switch from elementary to secondary education, or vice versa, because the general education classes are very different for the two programs.

Kellstrom said the new system would make the general classes for elementary and secondary education a lot more similar.

Kellstrom added that the changes in the College of Education are all part of changes to fit into the new University system, the university general education program.

David Royse, who is on the implementation task force for the UGE and is also an associate professor of music, said the UGE was made so K-State students will have a broader range of classes to choose from.

"Students will have a greater selection of classes from other colleges," Royse said.

The UGE program was approved two years ago by Faculty Senate. The program is set up so students can choose from the set of classes in different colleges that have been approved by Faculty Senate for their general education credits.

The UGE says no matter what number of hours a department requires its students

Vendors, printers delay arrival of line schedule

Although the spring 1997 line schedules were scheduled to be out Monday, they have not been delivered yet.

The schedule could be out as early as today, depending on when they actually arrive, how long the verification process takes and when they can be delivered.

Gunile DeVault, associate registrar, said the company that prints the line schedule would deliver them as early as late Tuesday or today.

DeVault said she called the vendor, American Passage Media Corp., on Monday. The vendor talked to the printing company.

When the line schedules arrive, they have to go through a verification process. After the schedules are verified, they will be distributed to the departments, and then the schedules will be available for students.

"We're going to get them out as soon as we can get them verified so students can look at them," DeVault said.

The line schedule is already out on the World Wide Web. The address is (http://www.ksu.edu/courses/).

"The courses are out there. The hard copy isn't out yet like we thought it would be," she said.

Enrollment for the spring semester begins Nov. 4 for continuous students.

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

Remember what mom said: 'If it seems too good to be true, it probably is'

You might have already won a trip to Cancun!

Earn thousands of dollars stuffing envelopes at home in your spare time!

These are the mail-fraud schemes that entice the unsuspecting into parting with their money for lucrative offers and prizes that never materialize.

WHY WE CARE

Mail fraud is just one of the many scams that target and plague college students. Be on the look out for too-good-to-be-true offers in the mail.

College students fit into a target group of consumers who have cash and a penchant for purchases and who are increasingly becoming the darlings of Madison Avenue, television advertising and mail scams.

Senior citizens are also targeted for having few financial burdens, like family and house payments, but also having money to spend.

The U.S. Postal Inspection Service is working to eliminate this problem that has affected 416,216 people just this year.

The "Five Biggest Lies told to Consumers," according to postal inspectors, are:

1. "You are a guaranteed winner" of a prize.

This ploy asks the so-called winner to pay for chemically inert vitamins or water purifiers, or to contribute to a fake charity, before getting what turns out to be a booby prize.

2. "This chain letter is legal."

Sooner or later, everyone gets one of these, but after you pay for copying and mailing out letters, it's one of life's biggest disappointments. Also, any chain letter that asks for money is illegal when sent through the mail.

3. "Stuff envelopes at home and earn big money."

These scams ask victims to send money for a plan. Here it is: Send out letters asking people to send money for a plan.

4. "Your humble assistance is highly solicited in transferring millions of dollars, available from the Nigerian National Petroleum Co., to share with your good self. All we need is your bank account number."

The scam is to get some advance money from the victim. The good-faith money quickly disappears, of course. Formerly targeted at businesses, this scam is now turning to individuals.

5. "You've been selected to receive a fabulous vacation."

All you have to do is pay a one-time membership fee or handling charge the offer claims. But inspectors say the vacation can turn into a nightmare of scheduling problems, shabby hotels and nonexistent cruises that leave vacationers standing on the dock.

If you've received mail corresponding to one of these scams or one that sounds similar, throw it away. Don't waste your time or money only to get ripped off.

Columnist suggests ways to clean up crime on campus

MY

Russell FORTMEYER

I want to live on a campus where 18 year olds can drink alcoholic beverages without fearing they will be drugged.

I want to have the opportunity to walk across a campus where muggings and assaults are relegated to the athletic-department locker rooms or the play field.

I want to be able to leave my car in a parking lot without coming back to find squirrels humping on my trunk hood.

This is madness, people. We can't continue this self-destructive behavior that has gotten so gruesomely out of control. Just don't do it. We have to take back our campus.

Stamp out campus crime and the rampant prostitution in and around Eisenhower Hall.

We've had cameras on this campus for years, and yet we still average as one of the most crime-ridden campuses in the southern part of the central Manhattan area of Riley County. This is simply unacceptable.

To alleviate these wide-spread fears and general feelings of uneasiness among students (well, at least within Student Governing Association), we should divert our K-State Student Union remodeling funds to more worthy causes — such as a system of watchtowers.

Luckily, K-State's campus Gothic architecture permits many of these towers to be installed with little or no expense.

The Anderson Hall bell tower is nothing of the sort. It's actually a well-decked multi-media watch tower where each administrator takes turns keeping an eye on you. This is no secret, so I won't elaborate.

We do, however, need other towers in other primary locations.

We already have Gothic fortresses in Farrell Library and Nichols Hall.

How much would they change with a little barbed wire and some big search lights?

Can you imagine the excitement of walking through campus, dodging the spotlight, only to be stopped near Anderson and asked for your papers.

"Oh, yes, here they are."

"These papers are forged."

"Look at them again. I just had them renewed with SGA last Friday."

"The deadline was Thursday. You are in violation."

"It's not like SGA regulations were ever enforced before." (spoken while being pushed into a police car).

Having a police state on campus, as much as it is necessary, will, if history tells us, create a secondary society — an underground.

Lucky for us, K-State also has created and maintained a system of intricate, Paris Opera House-like steam tunnels. Students wishing to fight the system could kick the trolls out and use the tunnels for political purposes.

The only thing preventing this from happening now is the incredibly powerful troll lobby in Topeka.

This would require the instigation of some anti-tunnel regulations.

We could flood the tunnels with some mild acid — something strong enough to cause irritation, yet something that wouldn't sterilize people.

Let's not go too far.

All of this is child's play compared to the extreme criminal problems plaguing the parking lot B-3 up on the northern reaches of campus.

I was there just yesterday and overheard this conversation among two students, Zack and Zue:

Zack: "So, like, he was completely wasted and ... oh, Zue, watch it, duck ..."

Zue: "Jeepers H. Crackers, Zack, what was that?"

Zack: "It was, like, some sort of, like, bullet or something."

Zue: "Golly, gosh, darn, where are we? Topeka?"

Russell: "Get out of my way you two, or I'll be forced to use this gun again. It's my right. Bob Dole says it's my right. I'll show you two a bridge to the 21st century."

Troll: "You have no right to my land. We've been on this here property for dang near 35 years, and we ain't leaving. Oh, and, you'll have to guess my riddle to cross Claflin."

It is situations like these that have resulted in violence and given this campus the dubious title of "The Bogota of Kansas" over the past few years — although coffee hasn't become a cash crop, yet. Give Juan some time, he'll come around.

A watchtower and checkpoint into the campus could have prevented the entire ordeal.

The only drawback to this system is that it only affects the very surface of campus crime problems. Only a well-trained attack dog can penetrate the deeper, spiritual problems.

K-State, however, does not have a well-trained elite of dogs up at the old kennel north of Weber Hall, but we do have a more-than-ample supply of squirrels.

I challenge the veterinary medicine students to train and equip these squirrels with the technical knowledge and equipment to infiltrate campus-crime rings, and put a stop to this madness.

With these measures in place, I can go back to living in my normal, neurotic state of paranoia so common among us Kansans.

Columnist reflects on her first 21 years, celebrates without alcohol

Today I am 21 years old, and I would rather eat funnel cakes out of a Subway toilet bowl than have a sip of alcohol.

Five years ago this month, I had one of those very alcoholically glamorous moments of clarity with my knee in an ash tray, my hair cemented together with brandy, vomit clogging my nose and my ambition to make it to the toilet.

At this moment, I could no longer deny the correlation between drinking and being kicked out of high school, losing my jobs, not being able to pay my bills, alienating my family and running off every friend I had ever had.

And that began the uphill, against the wind, three-legged sack race called sobriety that I've been chasing and tripping over ever since.

So rather than toasting unrecognizable blurs, seducing bartenders and being carried home on this birthday, I'm preoccupied with gratitude for how far I've come, and disappointment for where I'm not.

Five years ago I could not have seen myself still among the living, or uninstitutionalized, much less in college. Years before that, I had every confidence that when the magic wand of grown-up-hood struck me, I would automatically turn 18 and not be afraid of responsibility, algebra would finally make sense and I would understand the stock market.

Birthdays resurface the voices of my inner-orphanage. This is how a friend of mine refers to these cries of unmet needs by the irrationally simple voices interrupting my plans with inconvenient demands.

These voices project a vivid ghost of who I wanted to be when I grow up, and I'm not. I'm not even close.

I'm not a Barbie Doll or a New Yorker. I never made it to the Olympics, and I still can't play the guitar. I'm still afraid of elevators and insects, and I never did learn the art of ice-skating or discretion.

I thought when I grew up I would have slumber parties every night, live on donuts and popcorn and decorate entire cities with toilet paper.

I am 21, and the best sleep incentive I can find is reading the Dr. Seuss "Sleep Book." I still eat with my fingers, throw my clothes on the floor, talk compulsively and am still afraid of my teachers.

So far I've learned that being a grown-up means I can pick a good head of lettuce, I can tell my mother what she's really interrupting when she calls, and I can admit to really embarrassing mistakes, attributing them to being young and naive or some odd phase.

It seems sometimes that being a grown-up isn't so much about being responsible as it is about learning how to gracefully get out of taking responsibility for being irresponsible.

Most grown-ups seem to believe that time spent looking at a sunset or smelling the roses is demonstrating poor time-management skills and that is what retirement is for.

For every rite of passage I stumble through, I have this imaginary middle-aged version of myself looking back on my life shaking my head and nostalgically regretting how much time I wasted.

Still, I can't help thinking that I am lucky. I survived my own self destruction young enough that I'm not so bitter I have to wrestle with blame, although I sometimes do.

At 21, I think I have gotten away with about every crime or just tasteless waste of time I would want to have gotten away with before I was old enough to be prosecuted.

I once rubber cemented the contents of my mother's feather pillows to a guy's car because he broke the heart of a girl I had a crush on. I slept in a cemetery and was chased by a police chopper. I once spent hours counting exactly how many licks it took to get to the center of a Tootsie Roll Pop (565 licks).

These are some examples of the kinds of things I think I would have felt incomplete to not have done before I had to learn about separating the laundry or how to smuggle words like existential or plethora into a casual conversation without sounding conspicuous.

At 21, I'm done with rebellion, which is dangerous because if I'm not a rebel, I must be — NO! It can't be! Not a radical in the Midwest!

At 21, there is nothing scarier than the prospect of quitting smoking, graduating, not graduating or being lynched by disgruntled readers.

At 21, I don't have to be drunk, and more importantly, I don't have time to be drunk. I don't have to debate with myself over whether it is right or wrong, or irresponsible to engage in the traditional rites of passage for turning 21.

At 21, I would rather babysit my inner-orphanage, trying to engage my emotionally malnourished soul in rhetoric of this and sociology of that than spend another night of my life looking up at a barstool.

Somewhere between graham crackers and a bonfire of SAT scores, I was initiated from the Bernstein Bears, Kool-aid and suicide notes, to iced Cappuccino, Bukowski and therapy.

Somewhere between graham crackers and a bonfire of SAT scores, I was initiated from the Bernstein Bears, Kool Aid and suicide notes to iced Cappucino, Bukowski and therapy.

Somewhere in between, I did a lot of dying, a lot of hating and a lot of hiding.

And I'm not going back.

Forum gives candidates chance to discuss issues

JASON WALLE

Chapter 11 of the Kansas Association of Public Employees had a political forum Tuesday night at the Thomas J. Frith Community Center.

Attending were Rich Vargo and Jan Galitzer, candidates for Riley County clerk; Bob Newsome and Karen McCulloh, candidates for Riley County commission; Sheila Hochhauser and Jeff Peterson, candidates for Kansas House in District 66; Kent Glasscock and Robert Littrell, candidates for Kansas House, District 62; Lana Oleen and Ruth Schrum, candidates for Kansas Senate in District 22; and Edward Pugh, Kansas House representative from District 61.

A thread running through the evening was taxation vs. government services.

"The most important issue facing Kansas voters is that we need to find a balance between the desire for services versus the desire to pay taxes," Glasscock said.

Glasscock said although he feels tax reductions are needed, they could have a negative effect on the quality of education in Kansas.

"It's important that Kansans decide what we want to pay for and make the proper decisions," Glasscock said.

Oleen said she agreed with Glasscock.

"Having a strong and vibrant economy is important, and how we deliver those services is very important," she said.

In relation to public services, Hochhauser said, "I feel my job is to make it easier for working families to make ends meet, whether it be through helping with education, health, taxes or other issues.

"To me, economic development is more than making roads. It's giving working families more opportunity in education and job training through a fair tax system," she said.

Peterson said he also believes education is the No. 1 issue facing Kansans.

"We have to find a balance between taxes and education," he said. "Education is truly an investment, and I will work hard to maintain a top-notch educational system."

Each of the candidates said issues facing public employees are wages, job security and being treated fairly through a positive working environment.

"When you boil it right down, three words come to mind," Newsome said, "job security, working environment and fair treatment."

All the candidates said they agreed family wages throughout the United States as well as in Kansas were not running congruently with the rising cost of living.

"Property taxes on real estate is going up, and it has been for a long time," Pugh said. "It's done without so much as an argument or even a vote."

Pugh said he believes government has too much control over voters' lives, and it is time for the people to be given individual freedom to make more decisions for themselves.

Supreme Court upholds state law requiring stamps on illegal drugs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — It came as no surprise to the Kansas attorney who argued the case when the U.S. Supreme Court left intact the state's law imposing a tax on the sale of illegal drugs.

The law, enacted in 1987, requires persons who sell illegal drugs in Kansas to purchase and affix state drug stamps to the drugs.

Those caught selling drugs without the state stamps are subject to imprisonment of up to five years and fines of up to $10,000 in addition to criminal conviction penalties.

The law was challenged in Ellis County District Court as unconstitutional double punishment by two men, Roy Jensen and Howard Simpson, who also faced criminal prosecutions. They argued the drug stamp prosecution in addition to criminal prosecution constituted double jeopardy.

U.S. Supreme Court justices, without comment, refused Monday to review a Kansas Supreme Court ruling that upheld the state tax law last April.

"I'm not surprised at all," said Glenn Braun of Hays, the Ellis County attorney who argued the case before the U.S. Supreme Court.

"Recent Supreme Court decisions have gone against the double-prosecution argument," said Braun, a candidate for the State Senate in the Nov. 5 election.

Lawyers for the two men relied heavily on a 1994 U.S. Supreme Court ruling in the Kurth Ranch case in Montana.

In that case, the nation's highest court said states might not heap drug-possession taxes on top of criminal penalties for people convicted of drug crimes.

That 5-4 decision to strike down the Montana law marked the first time the court concluded that imposition of a tax can amount to unlawful double jeopardy.

"The Montana case opened up a whole area broader than the court intended," Braun said. "I think they're now telling the states that Kurth Ranch didn't open it up the way some thought, because lower courts had expanded it.

"I think now we're going to see the end of the double-jeopardy arguments."

Since the Montana ruling, courts in Illinois, Indiana, Nevada and Texas have struck down drug taxes previously imposed by those states.

But Kansas argued its tax is different.

In briefs, the state said the tax is due and payable immediately upon possession and not just after someone is arrested.

The Kansas Supreme Court said payment of the tax does not bar subsequent criminal prosecution and doesn't impose a criminal penalty for purposes of double jeopardy under the United States and Kansas constitutions.

The two men were arrested separately for possessing marijuana.

Dedication of chapel brings Thatcher to Baker University

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALDWIN — Baker University, a small United Methodist school in this prairie town, has been bracing for the arrival Tuesday of former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

Thatcher

Thatcher, the conservative leader dubbed the Iron Lady, will join in the rededication of a 19th Century English Methodist chapel where her father preached.

She also will deliver the keynote address for university's fall convocation before the opening of the chapel. As many as 3,000 people, including the university's 850 students, are expected to attend.

The chapel was built in Sproxton, England, in 1864. Sproxton, a quaint tiny village of stone cottages, is about 100 miles north of London.

Workers in England numbered the stones when they disassembled the chapel in June 1995 for proper reconstruction on the Baker campus.

The chapel has about 25,000 stones and 19,000 clay roof tiles. It weighs about 250 tons. More than five tons of sawdust helped protect the contents of the 200 crates that were shipped to Baker, temporarily wiping out Britain's sawdust supply.

University officials said the chapel represents the direct tie between the early Methodist movement, which began in England, and Baker, which was founded by pioneer Methodist ministers in 1858 along the Santa Fe Trail.

"Institutions which have the greatest impact on society are those which take care to express their principle values in powerfully symbolic ways," said Baker president Daniel Lambert.

"This is a remarkable instance of a vision shared across many years and a great distance, a coming together of the people of the Kansas prairie and those of Oxford University where Methodism — one of the oldest Protestant traditions — had its beginning," he said.

The Sproxton congregation was formed in 1804, and members met in each other's homes for 60 years before it could raise enough money to build the church. The congregation grew to 34 members, but as families moved away over the years, the church was closed in 1988. It was dilapidated by the time Baker University bought it.

The cost of the entire project came to $1 million, provided largely by Olathe philanthropist R.R. Osborne.

About 30 people from England have traveled to Baldwin to join Thatcher in the dedication ceremonies.

Thatcher, 71, became Britain's first female prime minister in May 1979, following the Conservative Party's success in the general elections.

She was born in Grantham, which is near Sproxton. Her father, Alfred Roberts, a lay minister, preached on several occasions in the chapel.

Thatcher, who led England during the 1982 Falklands War with Argentina, was the first prime minister this century to serve three consecutive terms.

She resigned as prime minister in 1990. The following month, she was elevated to the House of Lords to become Baroness Thatcher of Kesteven.

Formaldehyde testing delayed until next week

ANDREA COREY
staff reporter

Testing on levels of formaldehyde in the air in the cadaver room in Ackert Hall won't be complete for more than a week, Steve Galitzer, director of campus safety, said.

Ann Stalheim-Smith, associate professor for the Division of Biology, said students will be studying muscle and respiratory physiology, but they won't be examining the cadavers for as long as had been done in previous semesters.

Because the cadavers won't be used as much, Galitzer won't be running tests on students to find their levels of formaldehyde exposure, because the numbers probably wouldn't be as accurate, he said

Galitzer did one set of tests last week and said so far the levels of formaldehyde don't seem to be too high for human exposure.

"From what I understand, it is no worse than other types of cadaver rooms," Galitzer said.

He said testing will probably be done by late next week.

"Hopefully, we'll be able to run everything we want to run next week, and then we'll know where we're at," he said.

Wildcats return experience with youth to 1996-97 men's squad

JOHN BERGGREN
sports writer

Most of the questions that center around this year's K-State men's basketball team are about its seven newcomers.

The answers to those questions could come from the team's seven returners, many of whom have proven at times they can be unstoppable.

K-State returns only one senior in center Gerald Eaker. Eaker started 25 of 27 games last year for the Cats and is the leading shot blocker from last year with 59 blocked shots.

Eaker also chipped in seven points per game last year. With his experience, Eaker is the only player on this year's team who is locked into a starting position.

"I'm going to like this season a lot," Eaker said.

"I'm not forced into doing anything I don't want to. I'm happy about all the young people on the team, and they'll need somebody to look up to, and I hope I can be a leader to them."

The Cats' returning leading scorer is junior guard/forward Mark Young. Young averaged 8.6 points per game a year ago. He is billed as a defensive stopper with the potential to become an offensive leader for K-State as well.

Young, who has been inconsistent in his first two seasons, said he admits he needs to show up to play every game.

"Consistency has been one of my big questions," Young said.

"I've been working on it along with being a leader on and off the court. I'm mentally prepared for the season, and everybody is going to have to contribute."

The forward position for the Cats is probably the most experienced and deepest on the team.

Sophomores Shawn Rhodes and Manny Dies both will be looking for playing time at the position, and last season as true freshmen, both proved they could play.

Rhodes is a player with a great shooting touch and range, hitting 10 three-pointers last year. Dies also brings good inside play and a middle-range shooting ability to the table.

The Wildcats also have depth at the guard position, returning three players from last year's NCAA Tournament team.

Sophomore Ayome May started 26 games last year and led all Big 8 freshmen in shooting with a .468 percentage from the field.

Junior Aaron Swartzendruber averaged 20 minutes a game and became K-State's go-to guy off the bench, averaging 6.3 points a game.

Walk-on sophomore Chris Marsh is the other returning guard, who saw time in clean-up action last season.

Marsh played in four games and attempted only one shot, missing a three-pointer.

Flexibility of players key to upcoming season

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

Defense has never been a problem for the K-State women's basketball team. In the last three seasons under former coach Brian Agler, the Wildcats established a reputation as one of the stingiest defensive teams in the Big 8.

It's the Wildcat offense that has produced question marks in the past.

This season, look for three people to step to the front to answer those questions.

In the post, senior Andria Jones, who averaged 13.1 points and a team-high 6.5 rebounds per game, will lead the K-State charge.

A finesse player by nature, Jones has spent enough time on undersized K-State teams to grow accustomed to pounding on the blocks with the league's bigger centers. But her more natural game is to take the 12- to 17-foot jumper, and she's not shy about shooting the three-pointer, where she's hit nearly a quarter of her shots.

"When we have players like Andria Jones, we've got the flexibility we're going to need this season," Patterson said. "She's got the ability to play both inside and out, and she'll have a greater range around the basket than some other forwards."

Junior Brit Jacobson returns as the Cats' top scorer (14.8 ppg, 5.4 rpg).

Although she stands only 5' 7", Jacobson's strength, quickness and amazing vertical leap make her a threat at guard or small forward.

From the outside, look for senior Missy Decker (10.5 ppg, 4.9 rpg) to bomb away with three-pointer after three-pointer.

One of the Big 8's most prolific scorers from behind the arc, Decker landed a career-high six treys in K-State's overtime victory over Oklahoma State last season.

Sophomore Jenny Coalson (5.4 ppg, 4.9 rpg) is the fourth returning starter. A power forward last year, Coalson is likely to make the move to small forward this season.

Senior Kayla Hester, another three-point ace, will add depth at center, while senior Kjersten Larson and sophomore Sara Munson will most likely make the move from the forward positions they played last year to guard spots.

"We're going to have to be a team that is very flexible in every situation we face," Patterson said.

"I think we have enough experience in our program where we can be creative."

Linebackers making big plays for Cats

SHANE MCCORMICK
contributing writer

Coach Bill Snyder said Tuesday confident players make big plays.

That has certainly been the case for the K-State linebacking corps this year. Its confidence has been growing with each game.

With 53 seconds remaining in last week's game, cornerback Chris Canty forced a fumble out of the arms of Texas A&M receiver Albert Connell. Chasing down the play was linebacker Mark Simoneau, who pounced on the ball to preserve a 23-20 victory over the Aggies.

"I saw the pass and chased it down," Simoneau said. "I just got on top of the ball so they couldn't kick a field goal."

In that game, Simoneau was credited with 13 tackles, including two tackles-for-loss.

Being in the middle of the action has been a trademark for Simoneau this season. As a redshirt freshman, Simoneau leads the team with 73 tackles. He also has three sacks, two forced fumbles and a fumble recovery.

"Mark is really mature for a redshirt freshman," linebackers coach Brent Venables said. "He works every day to get better. He is one of the most intense players on the field."

When asked about the play of Simoneau, a smile stretched across the face of Snyder.

"I'm really happy with Mark's play this season," Snyder said. "He's a very fine player. He is playing as well as anybody."

The Cats currently rank second in total defense in the Big 12, allowing just 3.9 yards a play. Before the season and during it, the talk has been about the tremendous secondary the Cats possess. Sometimes overlooked, the Cats' linebacking corps has stepped up and produced on the field.

With the loss of three-year starter and third-team all-American Percell Gaskins, there were questions about how this year's group would respond.

This season, three linebackers, Simoneau, DeShawn Fogle and Travis Ochs, rank first, second and third, respectively, in total tackles for the Cats. All three have combined for 20 tackles-for-loss, 76 yards to be exact.

"I have been awfully pleased with our linebackers this year," linebackers coach Brent Venables said. "They have really provided a lot of leadership on defense."

"DeShawn has really focused this season. He has dedicated himself to having a great senior season," he said. "Travis is Travis. He is just going to do the right things. He puts a lot of pressure on himself to perform every week, and the players really respect him for that."

So now the only question is how much better this linebacking crew can get?

"I would still like to see them be more aggressive in attacking the line of scrimmage and making the right key reads," Venables said.

When that happens, who knows what kind of records the linebackers will set?

Wanting to reserve tickets? Don't get started just yet

MY

Shana NEWELL

Don't begin celebrating, yet, Wildcat fans, but K-State still has a chance to earn a spot in the bowl alliance.

Why? It appears the Fiesta Bowl people are looking hard at K-State. Officials from the Fiesta Bowl were at the K-State-Nebraska spanking.

Just to check out Nebraska, you say? I don't think so.

Of course they were showing interest in the Cornhuskers. Who wouldn't? But by being at the K-State game, they were showing they had a whole lot of interest in the Wildcats, too.

Still not convinced?

Guess where the Fiesta Bowl people were Oct. 12. At the Arizona vs. USC game? Possibly, but I don't think so. At the Kansas vs. Texas Tech showdown in Lawrence? Possibly, but I don't think so. How about in Columbia, Mo., at K-State's 35-10 victory against struggling Missouri?

That's right, ladies and gents. The Fiesta Bowl sent people scouting at the Missouri vs. K-State game. It's true.

The Fiesta Bowl appears interested in the Cats. With an exciting 23-20 victory at tough-to-win-at Kyle Field, it's easy to believe Cat fans could soon have visions of tortillas dancing in their heads.

But hold your horses, folks. Don't go making your plane reservations yet. The Fiesta Bowl is still four wins away.

K-State will have to not only have victories against upcoming opponents Oklahoma, KU, Colorado and Iowa State, but they will need to be convincing wins.

Notre Dame will have to fall out of the top 10 in the polls. Remember, the Irish are guaranteed the at-large bid if they finish in the top 10.

In my opinion, the Cotton Bowl is looking more like reality.

Regardless of a Colorado victory against K-State, the Cotton Bowl will not invite the Buffaloes back this year. It was disappointed at the poor, poor fan-showing last year.

With a K-State loss in Boulder, Colo., the Cotton Bowl could easily justify the loss due to its locale — it's in Boulder, a tough place to play if you're not Colorado.

So, New Year's Day, here we come. Or maybe not.

Don't start making your reservations for Dallas yet, either, folks.

There's still a lot of football left to play, and only two of those games are at home.

Oklahoma this weekend could be an upset. The south is tired of losing to the north, and Oklahoma, is just plain tired of losing.

Upsets against supposed Southern powerhouse Texas at Dallas and against favored Baylor have set the Sooners on a roll. They'll be looking for their third win. I wouldn't be surprised if they manage the upset.

Two weeks later, the Cats travel to Lawrence. This game makes me sick to my stomach just thinking about it. I know K-State has the ability and the talent to gut the Jayhawks again for the fourth time in the last five years. But that's just it — for the fourth time in the last five years. The Jayhawks' season can only be salvaged by a win against their hated in-state rival, K-State.

Then, as Willie Nelson once sang, it's on the road again. This time to Boulder, Colo., to face my most hated Big 12 team, the Colorado Buffaloes.

And Iowa State, by then, might not matter.

Any way you look at it, the season is still up in the air. So get on out there and show your purple pride. Where we spend the postseason, if there is one, just might depend on you.

Commission discusses water-bill increase

SCOTT CONNER
staff reporter

Residents of Manhattan might soon be paying more for their monthly water bills.

The increase is intended to help the city maintain its stormwater drainage system.

The Manhattan City Commission discussed various plans on how to increase this fee at its work session Tuesday night.

Manhattan residents who own a single-family home pay a monthly fee of 25 cents, included in their water bill.

This fee helps fund the city's Storm Water Management Plan, which was implemented in 1995.

The plan was designed to create long-term planning and management of the city's stormwater drainage system.

In February 1996, the city commission adopted a charter ordinance, which allowed it to change the fee in the future.

After a petition against the charter ordinance was filed by Manhattan residents who did not want the fee to increase without their input, the commission decided to discuss the issue further at Thursday night's work session.

Manhattan resident Larry Plumlee said he signed the petition against the ordinance because as a landlord he couldn't afford another tax increase by the city, because he has seen a decrease in business during the past two years.

"Business is tight," Plumlee said. "We need the tax at a level we can handle."

At the work session, led by Jerry Petty, director of public works, and City Manager Gary Greer, commissioners were asked to come to a consensus on what is an acceptable increase in the fee and what the money should be used for.

Petty said many cities in the Midwest have a much higher stormwater drainage fee than Manhattan does. Wichita has a single household drainage fee of $1.21.

According to the proposal by Petty, the fee increase should include a $100,000-per-year budget for on-going maintenance of the system. Currently, the fund only budgets money for this year and next year.

"We need to do to maintenance, and we haven't done it," said Commissioner Bruce Snead about the current lack of maintenance.

EDUCATION

to have for general credits, one-third of them must be from classes higher than the 300 level.

For example, Royse said the College of Education has proposedboth elementary and secondary education majors take 18 hours of UGE credits, six hours of those credits at the 300 level or above.

"I think the strongest part of this is, indeed, you will have to take two classes at 300 level or above," he said.

There are at least 130, and possibly 150, classes that have been approved for the UGE, said Jennifer Colbert, an administrative assistant for the implementation and assessment task forces, and graduate student in marriage and family therapy.

Royse said more classes from different colleges are expected to be approved for the UGE program.

"It's all in the works," Royse said.

SUPPORT

Limitations on the bill included a background check on the person buying the handgun and mandatory training.

There are enough violent acts committed that average citizens are in fear, Glasscock said.

"Studies would indicate that in the 39 states with a concealed-carry law, personal crime actually goes down," he said. "The reason for that may be that if violent criminals are fearful that someone might be armed, they may tend to resort to criminal non-personal activities instead."

Littrell said he is familiar with another set of statistics. For every death resulting from self-protection, 43 homicides, suicides and accidental shootings happen because of the availability of handguns, he said.

"To take it one step further and say we could conceal weapons does not provide more safety for society," Littrell said. "I would hate to go down to Aggieville after a football game and think that half of the guys down there were packing a piece."

Littrell said he also rejects the general conservative platform regarding environmental issues.

"The conservative formulation would institute a system where the Environmental Protection Agency would have to do a cost-benefit evaluation before regulations are imposed," Littrell said. "How do you translate the value of the beauty of a national park into economic terms?"

Glasscock said voters must be careful about weighing jobs against environmental effect.

"We have to have a balance," Glasscock said. "We have to understand that we do not have a pristine environment in this world, but when we discover major problems, we have to correct them, like we have done with the strong water-quality initiatives in the state."

Both candidates said they were concerned about the effect of the new federal welfare-reform legislation.

This will give block grants to states to be divided among state programs as they choose. The decision of how much to allocate to the welfare program will be a difficult one, Glasscock said.

The new reform also said welfare recipients will receive benefits for two consecutive years before they must find other means, with a five-year lifetime maximum of receiving support from the program.

Glasscock said he agrees with the notions of the new legislation, but it will present some challenges. One of the challenges both candidates emphasized was the need to protect the children of families involved with the welfare program.

"How are we going to deal with children if they are a part of a family at the five-year lifetime limit?" Glasscock said. "We must find a way to step up and take care of the children of the state. We cannot let them fall through the cracks."

Littrell said there has to be compassion in certain situations, especially when they involve children.

"Will children have to be adopted or put out on the streets?" Littrell said. "This could create a large homeless population which would feed crime and social unrest. We have to make sure we don't get too punitive in these cases."

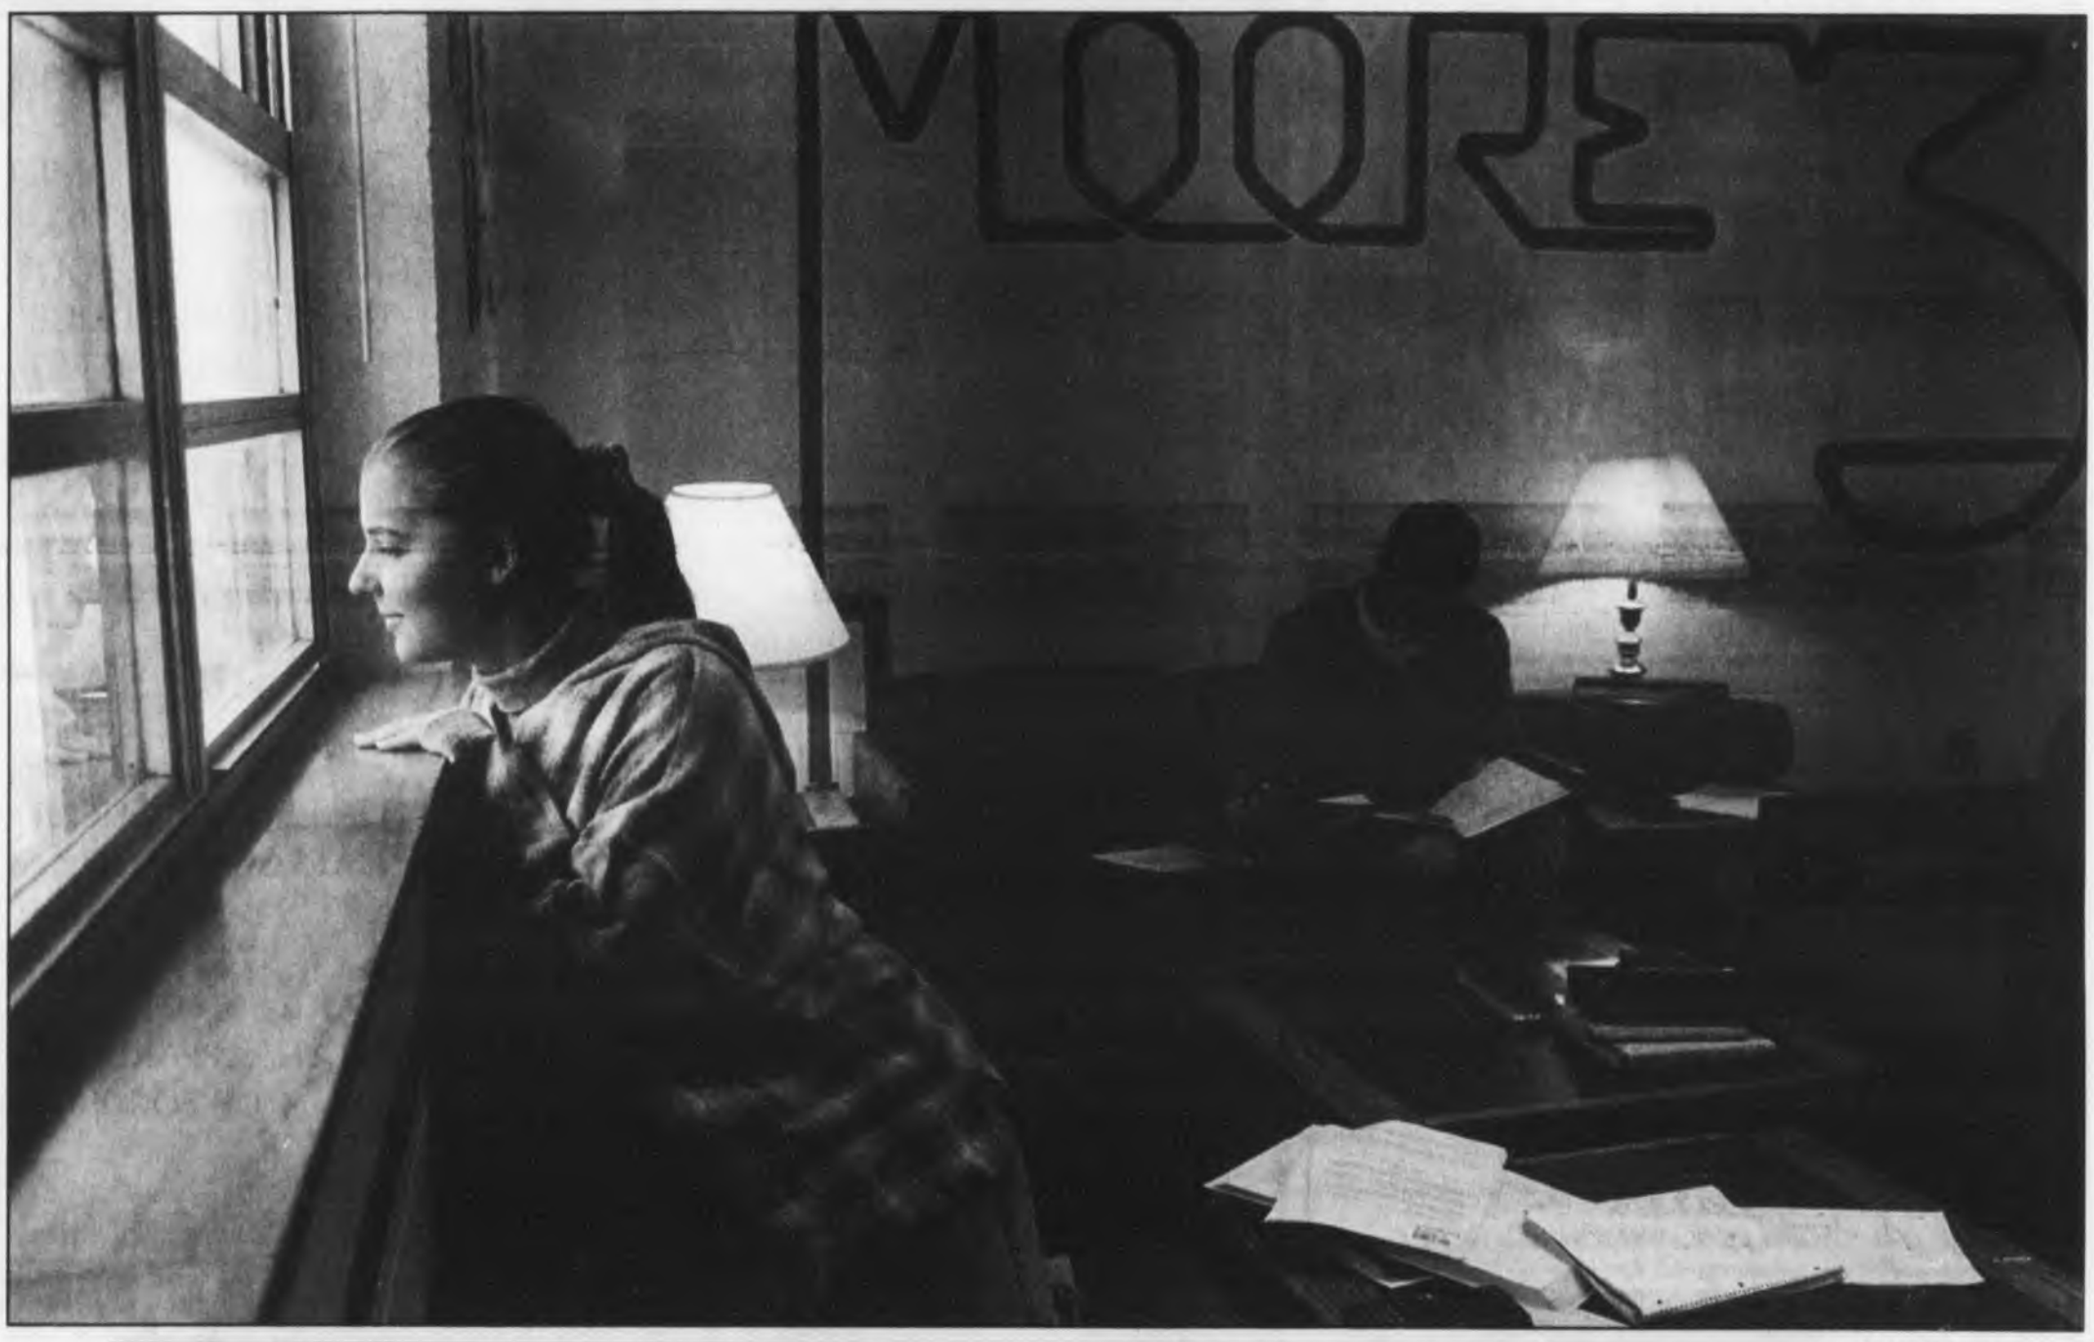
CRAMPED QUARTERS



Life in a residence hall is a funny thing. Many times, complete strangers are thrown together to live in harmony (hopefully).

The Collegian photo staff spent an hour Tuesday shooting photos in K-State's residence halls to portray that slice of community life. Living in a residence hall means sharing a bathroom with 70 of your closest associates, eating in a dining center every day, and going to the lobby to get some hard-to-find privacy. But that's not all.

Great friendships are made after a year of living together, picking up football games on a moment's notice, or looking for someone to walk across campus with you.

A HAYMAKER RESIDENT stands on a piece of wood on a chair while his roommate gets ready to saw the piece for a project the two were building.

Purple Masque Theatre's stage looks like the average college student's living room.

An ugly yellow, brown and orange afghan is spread over the back of a tan, 1970s couch. A wooden shelf is decorated only by near-empty liquor bottles.

An old TV rests on a rickety metal cart, and magazines are spread, fan shaped across a brown coffee table.

This is the set for this weekend's play, "Last." "Last" was written by Ken Wells, graduate student in speech, for a play writing class.

He said he began in January and finished the project in May.

His decision to direct what he'd written stemmed from his desire to write something and put it on stage so he could see it, Wells said.

The plot is an intricately woven scenario of people who are trying to exist within the same realm as their alter-ego; their other personality.

"I like the script a lot. I think it's very active and well-developed," Anne Martin, assistant stage manager, said.

There are two alter-ego characters in the plot. These two individuals represent, in some cases, what the real characters wish they were.

"The characters are looking for some degree of lasting in their relationships," Wells said.

The entire cast is six people, four of whom are freshmen.

"They have boundless enthusiasm. They really want to get this done," Wells said.

The cast of "Last" has been working in the theater for four weeks and Wells said they have been struggling with limited resources.

"The cast has been under significant stress," Wells said.

The play runs at 8 p.m. Oct. 24-26. Admission is $2 for students and senior citizens and $3 for general admission.

Leather, tatoos epitomized in Willard show

SPEED

▶ Bryon Bruening's show of paintings, "The Basics," is in the Willard Gallery until Oct. 25. Gallery hours are Monday through Friday 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Leather, tattoos, violence and motorcycles.

It's all rather forbiddingly rebellious.

It's all part of a rebellious Willard Gallery show — at least as much as that space can allow.

Bryon Bruening's new show of paintings, "The Basics," will be in the gallery until Oct. 25.

"It's very personal, but my images relate more openly to all kinds of people," Bruening, Manhattan resident and 1993 K-State master of fine arts graduate, said.

Bruening's personal images incorporate his own experiences with those of his friends to arrive at a subject matter that celebrates the motorcyclists' culture, with a few diversions into more psychological subject matter.

This mental state is most obvious in Bruening's work "Good Dog" in which a man is restrained, but not physically, to a chair next to a vicious-looking dog ready for the attack.

"The dog signifies the will and the desire to let go," Bruening said.

That may be, but the show can be seen, first and foremost, as a male artistic statement — a testosterone-laden show that extols a sort of aggressive, edgy lifestyle.

"This body of work seems to be aggressively male," he said. "Whether you're male or female, it can contribute to the art you're making."

> "The art can work on a comedic level in that each character wears a bit of a smirk on their face while they frighten us with a chair, a firecracker, or a mean dog — like the models don't believe what they are doing any more than we do."

This show lets you know, quite plainly, the artist is a male.

Once you get over this hump, one is left struggling to make some sense of it all.

Bruening's art has such a posed feeling that it practically overpowers any emotional response in the viewing.

Are these colorful characters really angry or dangerous? Or do they just want us to think that way?

The art can work on a comedic level in that each character wears a bit of a smirk on their face while they frighten us with a chair, a firecracker, or a mean dog — like the models don't believe what they are doing any more than we do. However, the fact Bruening pulls these stories from his life experiences shoots a hole in that theory.

Apart from the lack of genuine feeling, the work is technically accomplished.

There's a generous use of color, especially in the motorcycle bad-boy paintings.

Some of the color, such as in the biker portrait "End of the Line," is darker and more vibrant and has the appearance of a painting on velvet, which contributes to this perceived comedic effect.

That same color is muted when it takes on the qualities of a good drawing in Bruening's more erotically-charged, if not a little bleak, paintings such as "Face Down," suggesting bondage, and "Anything Not Nailed Down," in which the viewer is affronted by a man with a chair overhead.

The show may leave something to be desired, but credit must be given to an artist who isn't afraid to give us a show of only paintings.

Even Bruening will admit some student artists get carried away with poor experimentation.

"I rarely have a heavy desire to do more than the traditional three-dimensional art — painting and drawing," Bruening said. "I don't have a desire to start gluing shit to the canvas."

California wildfires cause injuries for firefighters

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CARLSBAD, Calif. — Fleets of helicopters and airplanes roared through southern California canyons Tuesday, dropping water on erratic, wind-blown wildfires that have burned 92 houses and seriously injured five firefighters.

Santa Ana winds turned dry brush and oil-rich eucalyptus trees into blowtorches, spreading flames across 30,000 acres.

By Tuesday afternoon, the biggest fires were less than half contained, and some flared up again as the devil wind shifted and gusted up to 41 mph.

Four firefighters working a flare-up in Malibu were seriously burned when their truck stalled and flames roared over them in Corral Canyon.

"This is life-threatening. These are very serious burns. We're looking at over 90 percent of their bodies," Dave Starr, Glendale fire marshal, said.

Another firefighter broke his neck in a traffic accident while rushing to a blaze, and another man suffered burns over 45 percent of his body.

Thousands of people fled their homes, schools and businesses in four counties Monday as flames exploded, propelled through the canyons by winds that gusted as high as 71 mph.

Carlsbad was the site of the worst fire, a fast-moving blaze that burned at least 60 houses and 10 other structures over 5,200 acres in the 65,700-resident suburb on northern San Diego County's seashore.

Just east of Carlsbad, authorities ordered evacuations early Tuesday for parts of San Marcos, a retirement community of 42,800 people.

In the celebrity seashore enclave of Malibu in Los Angeles County, at least 1,000 people had been evacuated as flames charred 13,000 acres and destroyed two houses and a mobile home.

A fire spread through the exclusive Lemon Heights section of Orange County Monday, destroying and damaging 29 homes.

Marine volunteers were sent from Camp Pendleton to help the firefighters.

Huge air tankers bombed the flames with water sucked from the ocean and reservoirs, joined by cargo-hauling helicopters fitted with big water tanks.

Eleven aircraft made repeated flights near Malibu.

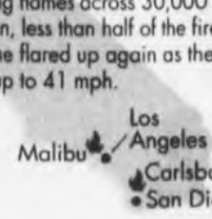
"As soon as the sun came up we were dropping water," said Steve Alvarez of the Los Angeles County Fire Department.

Gov. Pete Wilson declared a state of emergency in San Diego County. A similar declaration, letting the state reimburse local governments for firefighting, was expected for Los Angeles County.

The blazes started Monday as the seasonal Santa Ana wind blew from the high desert down through Southern California's canyons.

Tuesday, the wind eased in places, although steady 25 mph winds were likely through Wednesday morning.

Just three years ago this month, more than a dozen fires driven by Santa Ana winds raced across almost 300 square miles and caused more than $820 million in damage.



Three arson fires alone incinerated 800 homes in Malibu, Altadena and Laguna Beach.

Four people were killed and nearly 800 were injured.

Santa Anas are triggered each fall by high pressure over the Great Basin pushing air toward the coastline, where it becomes heated as it squeezes through mountain passes.

Wildfires rage in Southern California

Santa Ana winds turned dry brush into kindle, spreading flames across 30,000 acres. By Tuesday afternoon, less than half of the fires were contained and some flared up again as the wind shifted and gusted up to 41 mph.

Study indicates nicotine prevents formation of Alzheimer's plaques

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON D.C. — Nicotine is able to prevent the formation, in test tubes, of an abnormal brain cell plaque found in Alzheimer's patients, a study released Tuesday found.

The researcher who did the study, sponsored in part by Philip Morris, a cigarette maker, cautioned the findings have not been tested on humans.

Both researcher Michael Zagorski and an Alzheimer's research group warned people not to jump to the mistaken conclusion that smoking or other nicotine use lowers the Alzheimer's risk .

It must be determined whether test-tube findings reflect real events in human brains before any conclusions are drawn from this study, cautioned the Alzheimer's Association, another sponsor of the report.

"I wouldn't advise anybody to start smoking. Smoking is hazardous to your health," said Zagorski, a biochemist at Case Western Reserve University.

Tests indicate when nicotine is mixed with key brain chemicals, it can prevent the formation of beta amyloid plaques.

These plaques are found at autopsy in the brains of Alzheimer's disease patients.

Some researchers have suggested that the beta amyloid material causes the disease.

Still, it is not clear whether nicotine would have the same effect in the living brain as it does in test tubes, he said.

Midterms offer students chance to evaluate where grades stand

More Info

If you have any questions about tutoring or would like to sign up for tutoring, call Judy Lynch at 532-6492 at the Academic Assistance Center in Holton Hall.

AMY LAGRONE
staff reporter

Midterms.

This is the time of year when exams begin to pile up, and students are confronted with the reality of grades.

During this time, students begin to evaluate their performance in the courses they are taking. Most students will either be pleased with what they discover or realize they need to work a lot harder.

"If my grades were not going as I expected, I would simply reorganize they way I was studying," Tracy Dieckmann, sophomore in accounting, said. "I also tend to eat a lot of junk food."

One of the first steps a student can take when having problems is talking to the instructor of the specific course they are struggling with.

Nikki Isemann, graduate teaching assistant in German, said she usually suggests tutoring if a student is falling behind. The foreign-language courses are fast-paced and are often difficult to catch up in if a student falls behind.

"If a student is having a problem and doesn't come talk to me, I will seek them out," Isemann said.

Students can talk to their advisers. All K-State students, including those who have an undecided major, are provided with an adviser from their department. The adviser is there to guide students through their college career and to answer any questions they might have along the way.

Chuck Lubbers, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, is an adviser. He said when students comes to him for help, he compares their performance in one class with that of the others. This helps him to see if how they are doing at the University is across all courses or just specific to one particular course.

Will Stadler, freshman in pre-law and engineering, described midterms as a kind of realization period.

"It tells you whether or not you're going to make it in the class or not," he said.

K-State offers several types of programs to students who need the extra help. There are tutors, counseling services and programs available that teach people how to study. There is even a stress-management program offered at Lafene Health Center.

"It's only midterms. In most cases, it's not too late to turn things around," said Judy Lynch, associate director of the Academic Assistance Center.

She said most students need to double their study hours.

"Eight weeks of really intense work can pay off bigtime," Lynch said.

Students can still get tutors through next week at the tutoring center in Leasure 201. Students need to fill out an application to get tutoring.

Professor's research finds link with memory and depression

DEBBIE WOOD
staff reporter

Depression is a serious state of mind that affects not only the people who suffer from it, but everyone around them.

Charles Thompson, professor of psychology, has spent the last 15 years researching personal memory in the case of everyday memory and involuntary memory.

Thompson has his patients record one event in a diary each day for a period of time. There is a total of 450 diaries with the average entries lasting 2-1/2 years.

Later, when the patients are tested on their memories, Thompson found with non-depressed people the negative emotions faded faster than the positive. This is a healthy response for non-depressed people.

However, depressed people have problems with their positive memories fading faster, and they remember the negative emotions longer. "They really get hit with a double whammy," Thompson said.

> "We don't deal with clinically depressed people because they are in bad shape. You can't even get them out of bed, let alone do an experiment on them."
> — CHARLES THOMPSON, PROFESSOR OF PSYCHOLOGY

This same pattern holds in the case of involuntary memory, in which memories from the past are triggered in the mind by a sight or smell.

"If you look at positive memories, both subject groups say the memory has come to mind three or four times before," Thompson said. "If you look at negative memories, though, non-depressed people still say the memory has come to mind three or four times. For depressed people, it's three or four times that."

Currently, Thompson is working with his colleagues to find a method of treatment for depressed people. They only work with mildly depressed people.

"We don't deal with clinically depressed people because they are in bad shape. You can't even get them out of bed, let alone do an experiment on them," Thompson said.

Thompson also said any real solution would be many years away, and he is planning more research to help depressed people break out of their negative mold.

Thatcher visits Kansas

SPEED

▶ Margaret Thatcher, former prime minister of the United Kingdom, spoke Wednesday at Baker University in Baldwin City on curing societal ills.

VALERI CRENSHAW
contributing writer

Former Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher came to Kansas Wednesday and addressed such issues as the ideas that challenge members in a prosperous society.

Thatcher spoke in Baldwin City at Baker University as part of the Loreine C. Dietrich Distinguished Lectureship Series.

There were about 2,500 people in attendance, and 1,000 more watched on video remote in an auditorium.

While Thatcher spoke, about a dozen Irish citizens from the Kansas City area waved the Irish flag and yelled, "Go home, Maggie."

Thatcher

They accused her of being racist while they carried signs outside the building.

In a keynote address, Thatcher addressed the ills of society and how a prominent society should cure them.

"It's true that we have as many problems within a society as between societies," she said. "These are made even worse by the widespread availability of drugs."

Thatcher said she would like to personally pay for a bigger task force to track down drugs, and she said terrorists were just as much of a problem.

"They, too, must never succeed, and no effort should ever be spared to stop them," she said.

Thatcher said her concern for society's ills also included children living in what she called unorthodox homes.

She said when she was young only 5 percent of children lived in such homes, and now the percent is much higher.

"It has gone up to 30 percent, and we don't know if it is going to stop there," she said. "Base your lives on the children you have."

Task force organized to help protect college students from sex offenders

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAYS — A panel looking for ways to protect college students from sex offenders adopted a series of recommendations in a meeting attended by the parents of a murdered Pittsburg State University student.

Among its recommendations, the CAMPUS Task Force wants to amend the Open Records Act to allow Internet access to information on parolees, publish results of parole hearings, tighten security in student housing, and install more emergency telephones on campuses.

CAMPUS was organized by Kansas Attorney General Carla Stovall to find ways to protect college students from sex offenders after a Pittsburg State student was found dead in her apartment in March. A final report on the task force's findings is expected to be released early next year.

The adoption of the recommendations was witnessed Monday by Gene and Peggy Schmidt of Overland Park. Their 19-year-old daughter, Stephanie Schmidt, was murdered in July 1993 after accepting a ride home from Don Gideon, someone she and her friends knew.

Gideon later gave himself up and led authorities to Schmidt's body.

The Schmidts have helped pass five bills in the Kansas Legislature addressing sex offenders.

In March, Pittsburg State student Carrie Williams, 20, was found dead in her apartment. Nursing student Gary Kleypas is charged with rape and first-degree murder in her death.

Kleypas was on parole from a 1977 second-degree murder conviction when Williams died.

Dole urges Perot to quit, endorse GOP in attempt to save campaign

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — In a dramatic bid to revive his White House campaign, Bob Dole dispatched his top aide Wednesday to urge Ross Perot to quit the presidential race and endorse the Republican ticket, GOP and Reform Party sources said.

Dole campaign manager Scott Reed made the urgent entreaty at a meeting with Perot in Dallas, said several sources who spoke to the Associated Press on condition of anonymity.

Dole

Neither Dole nor Perot had immediate comment.

Shortly before the meeting, a Reform Party source said it was highly unlikely Perot would agree to abort his candidacy.

Perot

Perot spokeswoman Sharon Holman said she was not aware of any Perot-Reed meeting.

"Mr. Perot has no intention of quitting the race, no intention whatsoever," Holman said

Clinton aides cast Reed's mission as proof of Dole's desperation.

Clinton campaign spokesman Joe Lockhart said, "We believe that on the issues that are most important to Mr. Perot — the deficit, campaign finance reform — we have a stronger record."

The entreaty was evidence of the deep frustration within the Dole camp as the 1996 campaign entered the final 12 days with Clinton comfortably ahead in national polls and enjoying a similarly lopsided advantage in state-by-state electoral vote counts.

A new NBC-Wall Street Journal poll, for example, had Clinton at 52 percent, Dole at 35 percent and Perot at 6 percent.

In the view of some Dole advisers, a Perot endorsement could swing several states in Dole's favor, especially in the Mountain West. Texas and Florida are also two traditionally Republican states in which Clinton and Dole are running neck-and-neck with Perot garnering roughly 6 percent in the polls.

"Any time you can pick up a few points here or there it's worth the effort," said Florida GOP Sen. Connie Mack, who was traveling with Dole.

Inside

In state election news, an activist's stolen notebook creates questions for the campaigns of Senate candidates Jill Docking, Democrat, and Sam Brownback, Republican.

● Page 3

More significantly, the GOP sources, including a ranking Dole campaign official in Washington, suggested such a dramatic development would throw what has been a stable race into sudden turmoil, perhaps giving Dole one last chance to overtake Clinton.

Dole decided to go forward with the entreaty despite Perot's unpredictability and recent bad blood between the Dole and Perot camps.

It was Dole's campaign that insisted Perot be excluded from the presidential debates, drawing sharp criticism from Perot and Reform Party running mate Pat Choate.

Much of Perot's support in Florida, Texas, California and Ohio was described by Republicans as from voters who otherwise would likely vote Republican — or at least be motivated to vote against Clinton.

Even if Perot were to endorse Dole, however, it is hardly certain his supporters would heed his advice.

Even if Perot supporters did, only in a few states would winning most or all of Perot's support move Dole into the lead. And with the election a week from Tuesday, it is too late to get Perot off ballots.

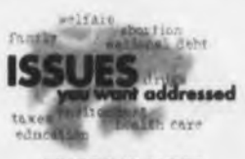
Education top priority for Peterson, Hochhauser

CECILY RODRIGUEZ
staff reporter

Jeff Peterson, former student body president, is challenging incumbent Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, for the 66th District Kansas House of Representatives seat.

Both have addressed issues of importance to student voters.

When it comes to lower property taxes or higher school funding, Hochhauser said she doesn't think voters have to make a choice between these two issues.



"This year in the legislature, I supported putting more money into school funding. I believe adequate funding for schools is the most important issue," Hochhauser said.

She said the growth in the economy and growth in appraisal of property made up the difference, so schools were not affected adversely.

"I'm not sure it's got to be an either/or," she said.

Peterson said he agreed education is top priority. He said he would not reduce property taxes that would be detrimental to education.

"My first priority is to have a strong public education system. We need strong leadership so we can protect this," he said.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the sixth part in a series of articles analyzing the issues and candidates that will be on the ballot Nov. 5.

On the issue of welfare, Hochhauser said several years ago the legislature passed a welfare-reform bill that would allow recipients to keep more of the earnings they made when they went to work and not have their benefits cut off completely.

"It wouldn't be a dollar-for-dollar down drain. Every time you made a dollar, you got a dollar of public assistance taken away, because then what's the incentive to stay and work?" she said.

Another topic Hochhauser discussed was the state's expanded flexibility.

"We need to make sure, since we're getting less money, that it gets to the people efficiently," she said.

Peterson said he supports extending the welfare program to the states.

"I think it will save money in the end. I think we know what's best for Kansas — better than the federal government," he said. "We should be able to take care of people's basic needs with welfare less expensively at the state level.

"It may take more state dollars than it did before, because we're picking up the whole program, but to the taxpayer, in total resources, welfare should cost less across America, because it's returned to the states," he said.

Abortion is another divisive issue in this campaign.

Hochhauser's position on abortion is that current government restrictions are enough.

"I am definitely in support of the freedom of women and their families and their clergy and their doctors to make this decision, and there should not be additional government-imposed restrictions on a woman's right to reproductive choice," she said.

Peterson's stance is survivability, or what is called the Kansas Law of Viability, defined by courts as 24 weeks or the second trimester.

Frieden, Ryun address taxes, government downsizing in debate

LILLIAN BEEBE
staff reporter

John Frieden, Democratic candidate for the 2nd District Congressional seat, and Jim Ryun, the Republican candidate, debated Wedensday at the Manhattan Seniors' Service Center.

The debate was sponsored by the American Association of Retired Persons.

Ryun said he supports the Medicare Preservation Act and said it would allow a 7.2-percent growth for Medicare.

Frieden said he disagreed and said the act would result in a $274-billion cut in Medicare and increase premiums $440 a year.

"What that meant to you is that many of the rural and small hospitals in this district would have been closed, unable to make it because of the severity of the slash," Frieden said.

Audience members asked questions about minimum-wage increases, tax increases and government reduction.

Frieden said he supports an increase in the minimum wage.

Ryun said he does not support a minimum-wage increase. He said small businesses only have so many dollars to spend.

One man in the audience asked both candidates not to raise taxes.

"I don't think we need to raise taxes," Frieden said.

He said the system needs simplification.

"Whenever taxpayers need a certified public accountant to fill out and complete tax returns, something is wrong," Frieden said.

Ryun said he signed a pledge not to raise taxes.

Government reduction to achieve a government that meets the needs of its citizens is something Ryun said he agrees with.

"I support the elimination of the Department of Education," Ryun said.

ONE VOICE ★ ONE VOTE

Interested in the upcoming elections? The Collegian keeps track of its Election '96 articles on the Web at (http://collegian.ksu.edu/election).

The money can be spent more wisely by the states, he said.

Ryun said he also supports a reduction in the Environmental Protection Agency.

Frieden said he disagreed with Ryun on both issues.

The Department of Education has a obligation to set national standards, Frieden said.

The EPA needs to be made more efficient, but it needs to exist, he said.

Less government could mean fewer taxes.

Ryun said the budget could be balanced with a 15-percent tax cut across the board.

He said those dollars need to go back to the states to give constituents better representation.

Disagreeing with Ryun, Frieden said a half-trillion-dollar tax cut would add to the deficit, increase interest rates, probably increase inflation and possibly lead to a recession.

The government should balance the budget first, he said. Then it should make tax cuts where they will help the most, for the working people whose real income has gone down for the last 20 years.

The debate was intended to inform local voters.

This gives the candidates a chance to answer questions and meet the people, Dor Bachtel, AARP 2nd District Congressional Coordinator, said.

"I though it was well managed," Cathy Mowry, Manhattan resident, said. "Each candidate had a chance to express his own views. It's good to see people out to something like this."

For some, it helped them decide who to vote for.

"I thought it was reasonably informative," Tom Gray, Manhattan resident, said. "It did help me decide who to vote for."

NATION WORLD

• JEWELL NO LONGER A SUSPECT. Richard Jewell is now only a former suspect in the Olympic Park bombing, a judge said Wednesday in ordering the FBI to release documents that describe how the security guard came under suspicion. Jewell, 33, was working as a security guard at Centennial Olympic Park when a pipe bomb exploded July 27, killing one person and injuring 111.

• PLANE CRASH IN ECUADOR. A Miami-bound cargo plane clipped a church tower and set an entire neighborhood ablaze, creating a wall of flames so hot that rescuers could only listen to the screams of the injured. The Boeing 707 destroyed a garage late Tuesday night when it smashed into a crowded neighborhood of Manta. At least 30 people were killed, including the plane's three crew members, an American and two Colombians. A priest at the church also was killed. About 80 people were injured, most with burns, and as many as 300 were left homeless.

• MAD COW DISEASE MIGHT TRANSFER TO HUMANS. British scientists say they've found a chemical signature of mad cow disease in the brains of people with a human brain-wasting illness, adding to evidence that the people got sick from eating contaminated beef. The link has not been scientifically proven, but many scientists believe it exists. Some believe British cattle developed mad cow disease after eating feed that included offal from sheep infected with the degenerative disease scrapie.

HOME AWAY FROM HOME PROVIDED FOR VISITORS TO K-STATE'S CAMPUS

HELEN BROCKMAN chats with Dennis Law during the Brockman anniversary reception. Law is a professor of architecture.

More than 10 years ago, Helen Brockman, former professor of fashion design, became K-State's unofficial hostess.

A house full of K-State deans and their spouses attended a private reception Wednesday evening. Brockman and Jim and Sharon Coffman were host to the celebration, which recognized the 10 years and allowed new deans to tour the facility.

"I can't express how nice it is to have a place for dignitaries to stay that has so much class and such an extraordinary hostess," Coffman said.

Brockman House has welcomed almost 200 University guests, half of which have been from foreign countries. The length of their stay has varied from three days to eight weeks, but the price has always been the same — free.

"Since it doesn't cost the college anything, they can easily invite people to come visit us," Brockman said.

In 1974, the KSU Foundation bought a small brick house across the street from campus. That same year Helen Brockman moved in. For several years the attic apartment was rented out by the Foundation, and the basement studio was rented out by Brockman. This arrangement, although profitable, became more of a nuisance than a money-maker.

"I wasn't too happy with what was going on up there," Brockman said, "I sat down my very good friend, John, who had been the vice president here. I told him I wanted to take over the upstairs, renovate it and use it to keep people who are coming to do good things for the college."

She got the idea for the project in 1972, when she stayed at Miami University in Ohio. She had been invited to give a presentation and lecture on fashion. Instead of spending the night in a hotel at the university's expense, she spent three comfortable nights in its guest house.

"I can't take the credit for their wonderful idea," Brockman said.

She presented her project to the Foundation, and it agreed to split the cost of renovations with her. Each put $20,000 into the apartment. Work began on June 7, 1985, and the entire place was gutted.

"I took everything — I mean everything — out, except the edges," Brockman said.

The last worker left 20 minutes before the housewarming party on Labor Day weekend. It took another month to work out some structural kinks, but by October the apartment was ready for its first tenant.

Harris Shore, the actor who played Truman in the first production at the reborn Nichols Hall, came in from New York. After him came John Guest, an English scientist who worked with NASA and helped put a man on the moon. K-State alumni such as Jerry Wexler, the man credited with coining the term "rhythm and blues," and Gordon Jump, the actor best known for his role on "WKRP in Cincinnati," have also stayed at K-State's guest house.

The first year Brockman House was open, it wasn't able to allow guests to stay for free. On top of the $20,000 she spent on renovations, she spent an additional $5,000 on furniture.

"I had to make back some of the money I'd put into the place," Brockman said. "I don't think visitors realize this comes from my pocket, not the University's."

For the first two years, the College of Arts and Sciences was responsible for booking guests, but in summer 1988 the Office of the Provost took over this responsibility. This change made the apartment available to the entire University for visiting scholars.

In 1989, the basement was restructured to accommodate visitors as well. Long-term guests, usually international, made it difficult to house short-term guests.

"I usually only have close friends stay downstairs, because it's also my studio, and when I'm working we have to share this space," Brockman said.

University guests are provided with a home-away-from-home atmosphere complete with housekeeping chores such as laundry and dishwashing.

"I provide everything — furniture, toilet paper and even good conversation. I expect them while they're here to keep house, though. This is not the Ramada," Brockman said.

Brockman said she enjoys the visitors who come to stay with her. Some send her thank-you cards, Christmas cards and even birthday cards. Others send her gifts from their homeland, such as Russian vodka and Japanese beads, to show their appreciation of her hospitality.

"She provides an excellent facility for visiting scholars. It's an atmosphere that can't be matched by any other facility. Brockman House gives the University a very distinguished place to bring our very distinguished guests," Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said.

Notebook mystery surrounds Senate candidates' campaigns

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Jill Docking's campaign is crying foul about an alleged car burglary in which the notebook of a political activist was stolen.

Docking, a Democrat, is running for the U.S. Senate against Republican Sam Brownback, the 2nd District congressman.

Matt Benin, an activist for Americans Against Political Corruption, has alleged two men broke into his car when it was parked outside during a Miami County fundraiser about two weeks ago. He said they stole a notebook with two months worth of campaign notes and contacts.

Benin and two other individuals were following a Brownback bus tour when the bus went to the event on private property on Kansas Highway 223. He said they were standing on the side of the road with a banner when a Cadillac pulled out of the farm where the fundraiser was held and stopped by Benin's parked car. The car was not locked, he said.

"The man on the passenger side of the car opens the front door," Benin said. "He was kind of bent into the car. I saw this and headed down to the car to find out what is going on. Then they jumped into their car and fled."

Benin filed a report with the Miami County sheriff's office.

His organization is working for campaign reform. The group had been following Brownback, trying to get him to sign a pledge supporting campaign reform.

"The theft of property from Americans Against Political Corruption is the latest in a pattern of political dirty tricks from the Brownback campaign," said Scott Swenson, spokesman for the Docking campaign.

Bob Murray, press secretary for Brownback, dismissed the accusations as baseless.

"Allegations that Brownback campaign workers entered the unlocked car of an out-of-state political organization and removed items from the car are false," he said in a brief statement.

"Following an investigation into the matter, I believe the Brownback for Senate Campaign did not remove any articles from any vehicle and would not condone such activity by an employee of the campaign," Murray said.

Swenson said he is not surprised by the response of the Brownback campaign.

Panel developed to ease tensions

KELLY FURNAS
staff reporter

To combat ethnic and gender tensions, Manhattan High School has developed a Heritage Panel, a group of 30 students and nine teachers who will deal with multicultural issues.

The creation of the panel stemmed from racial tensions that had been occurring over the past years.

"Manhattan High School isn't unique in the fact that there is a lot of diversity," Kathy Hund, coordinator of the Heritage Panel, said. "With that comes certain tensions based on gender, race and other multicultural differences."

Most notably, Hund said, was an incident when students wore T-shirts expressing opinions dealing with race issues.

"They were expressing opinions probably with good intentions, just not in the most effective way," she said. "That's one of the main reasons the Heritage Panel got started."

The group recently finished training with representatives from National Heritage, who sponsors Heritage Panels across the country.

Now the panel will make presentations to classes and other groups which discuss multicultural issues.

The presentations are given by four to five students and a teacher, who serves as a moderator. Each student talks about his or her own culture and family, including the holidays they celebrate and the activities they participate in. All the students talk about an incident of prejudice that occurred in their lives, and then say what they hope happens in the future.

"The students don't pretend to be an expert on their culture," Hund said. "They just talk about how different issues make them feel.

"We hope to make a small difference," she said. "If we all make a small difference, one day it might be a large difference."

In addition to the formation of a Heritage Panel, Principal Sylvester Benson said the school is teaching tolerance in the classrooms.

"We're spending a lot of time with students in class, teaching them to respect others," he said. "I think the things we're doing here have had an impact."

Benson said it was hard to compare tensions at Manhattan High to other schools, such as Garden City High School, which had to bring in a mediator from the U.S. Department of Justice to deal with racial tensions.

"Each community is a little different," he said. "If we thought there was a need to bring outside people in, we wouldn't hesitate to do that."

Nevertheless, Benson said the diversity of a high school is reflective of the diversity of its surroundings.

"We're a school of 1,900 students," he said. "We're just a small component of Manhattan, and of society.

"We just have to take things day by day."

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

Increase in the price of water will affect students' pocket books

The water from your faucet might soon take more money from your wallet.

In a Tuesday evening work session, the Manhattan City Commission discussed a proposal to raise a monthly fee included in water service bills.

WHY WE CARE

Most of us can see the need for up-to-date facilities, but the city should focus the tax on permanent residents rather than students.

Currently, residents who own single-family homes pay a 25-cent monthly fee with their water bill. This is used to maintain the city's Storm Water Management Plan, implemented in 1995 in an effort to rejuvenate the city's poor storm systems after the harsh lesson of the floods of 1993.

The poor storm system in this city is the result of too little planning by city leaders.

The fact this tax proposal and management plan have come after devastating floods shows the reactive nature of the city commission.

To residents of Manhattan who reside in houses, this fee increase would amount to an extra burden. It's like an increase in taxes.

For those residents, especially students, living in apartments whose water bills are reflected in their rent, this could mean an increase in monthly rent.

A landlord at Tuesday's session told commissioners he couldn't afford another tax increase because of declining business.

Manhattan already taxes residents with high city sales taxes designed to target transient residents like students.

Every time you buy a hamburger, you are adding to the city treasury.

But, do you live here year round?

Do your parents pay taxes in your hometown?

This water-fee increase amounts to another unbalanced tax. Students are forced to pay a fee without gaining as many benefits as local residents who own the homes and businesses that would benefit most.

It makes sense for water fees to pay for storm-water management maintenance, but in the unusual circumstances of a college town, this tax should be split between taxes aimed at permanent and transient residents.

A challenge should be made to the city commission to look for more appropriate sources of funding for water management instead of tapping student wallets.

A kinder, gentler world

A little bit of consideration, manners and courtesy should not be a thing of the past

MY VIEW

Erin
MANSUR-SMITH

A man came into the newsroom where I was typing recently. He walked to where I was sitting and watched me from behind as I tried to write.

I was unnerved by his presence. I had no idea who this man was. He could have been some right-wing, crazed member of the Heartland Revolutionary Guard who'd seen the number of the Beast in one of my columns and so had tracked me down to take me out with a can of rancid Cheese Whiz.

I checked him out from the corner of my eye. He didn't look crazy, and there were enough people in the room to stop him if he decided to go to the zoo on me.

After I had calmed my fears a little, I got peeved. I have too many younger brothers and sisters. I am used to getting tackled from behind in sneak attacks and get twitchy when people stand behind me like some old soldiers who, years after they have left the war, still jump three feet when a twig snaps.

Finally, I couldn't stand it. I turned to him and asked if there was something I could do for him. I guess there was something in my tone that startled him. He smiled sheepishly, apologized for bothering me and moved away. I found out later he read my columns and worked in Kedzie Hall.

Even though I apologized to him later for being so abrupt, I have been feeling ashamed about the incident ever since. There was no reason for me to be so cold in my approach and manner.

It made me think, and I realized that I have been rude to a great many people lately. It's not just me, either. I have begun to notice the brusqueness in others as well.

As the semester wears on and our nerves wear thin, we have allowed pleasantries to slip away and even the most basic of manners have taken a backseat to passing algebra and getting flu shots.

We can all make excuses for it. We're in a hurry. We can't hold the door open. We're too tired to wish anyone good morning or to thank the clerk for our change.

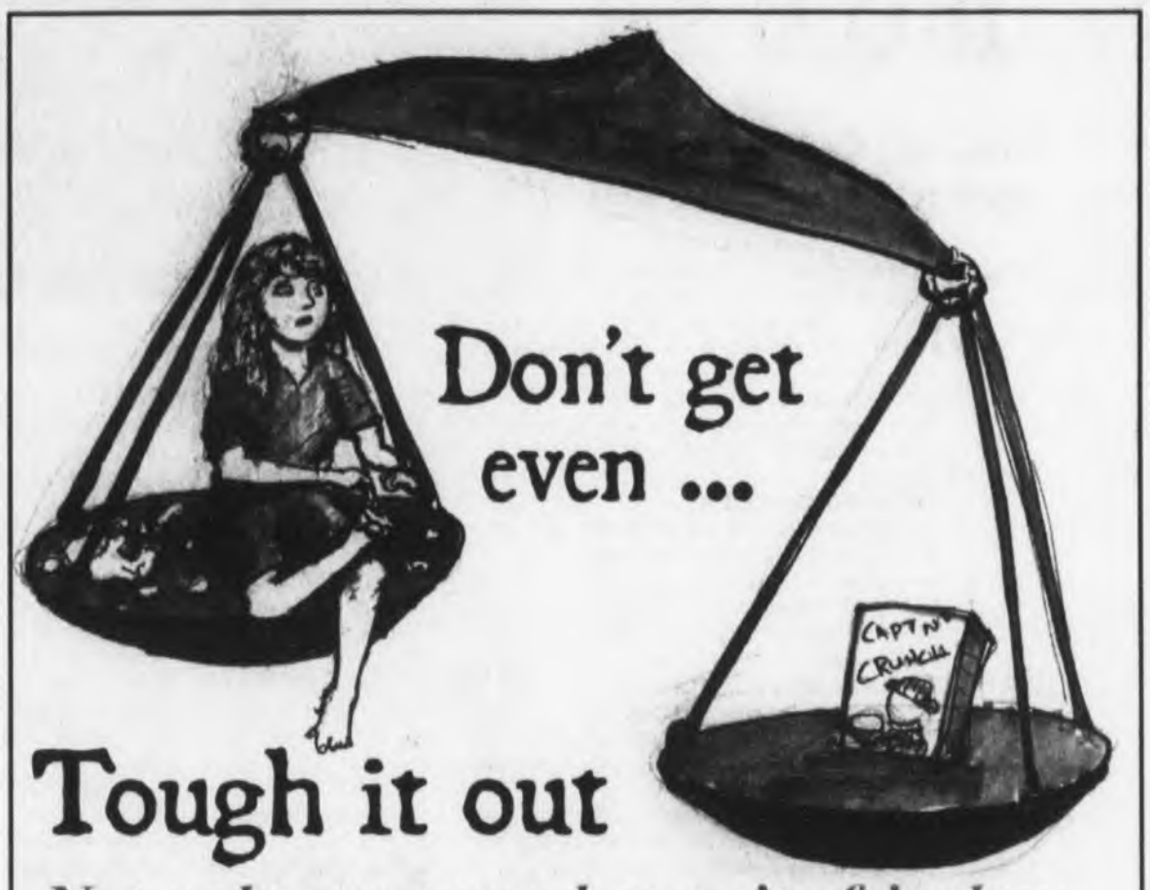
Some people have told me smiling at people as they pass me has become a dangerous practice. The world is in a far more unpredictable and strange place than it was in the days when men tipped their hats and women nodded their heads as they went about their daily business. My friends warn me that there could be some freak of nature who takes my smiling acknowledgement of his presence as an invitation to dinner.

I am not so crazy as to pass Tootsie Rolls out to every Tom, Juan and Shaquille I meet, but there is nothing wrong with meeting people's eye and nodding as they pass or at least finding out the names of the people you come in contact with the most.

How many of you have gone to the Office of the Registrar or the drop-add office more than three times in the last year and still have no idea what the names of the men and women who work behind the desk are?

While it's true there's no way of knowing what a small act of kindness could push a person to, being rude is undoubtedly worse. Nobody's day was ever ruined by a nod and a smile. Nobody ever wound up featured in some "20/20" report about the most discourteous people in America because they stopped their car for a pedestrian to cross or offered a friend a hug just because.

> "I am not so crazy as to pass Tootsie Rolls out to every Tom, Juan and Shaquille I meet, but there is nothing wrong with meeting people's eye and nodding as they pass or at least finding out the names of the people you come in contact with the most."



My old Southern grandmother, who is the guru of good manners, told me there was no reason, aside from insanity and contractions, for a lapse of old-fashioned niceness. She was of the mind that bad manners were not just a flaw of taste, but a flaw of character. If you could not say something or do something considerate for another human being, you weren't just uncouth, you were a complete waste of skin.

I had forgotten that until recently. I aim not to forget again.

So, I will attempt to be little more considerate of others in the future. I will return phone calls as promptly as possible and try not to dawdle in the crosswalk if you stop for me. And if you stand behind me to watch me write, I promise not to call security.

It doesn't take that much time or that much effort to be a little kinder. Even for me.

Tough it out

Not only are some law suits frivolous, a few others are absolutely ridiculous

MY

Nikola Maria
ZYTKOW

I had a near-death experience last week.

In the middle of a luxurious mid-afternoon bath, I was attacked by my shower door. Yeah, you heard right. The entire glass structure came tumbling at me just as I was about to submerge myself into a sea of pink bubbles.

Thud. Crash.

"Eeeekkkk!"

It nearly sliced off my left ankle, I tell ya.

After wading through the debris of shattered glass and metal railing, I spent the rest of the afternoon with a pair of tweezers picking glass chips from my feet and listening to some practical advice from my friend Lydia.

"Girl, you should sue," she said, matter-of-factly.

Sue? The idea hadn't even occurred to me.

"Huh?" I mumbled, extracting a carrot-shaped piece of glass from my big toe. I was surrounded by a little pile of glass flakes and blood-soaked cotton balls.

Remove, wipe. Wipe, remove.

"Look at you. You're a victim of another senseless crime," she said, shaking her head in disgust.

I guess I shouldn't have been surprised. Lydia was always on the lookout for some new get-rich-quick scheme. Lawsuits seem to be her newest pet project.

A couple weeks ago when she took a nasty fall in a Chuck E. Cheese restroom, she wanted to sue the owners. When she didn't find a prize in a box of cereal she wanted to sue Cap'n Crunch. (I'm not kidding.) And after developing a barking cough, which she swore she caught in a hospital waiting room, she was determined to sue the doctors. Lucky for all, Lydia is mostly talk and never goes through with her schemes.

But many people do. Suing has become a national pastime. Recently it surpassed fishing and the Macarena on the most-popular diversions list. Students are suing their teachers. Prostitutes are suing their pimps. And pets are suing their owners (well not yet, but I'm sure lawyers will soon cash in on this concept).

At the top of the list of sue-happy folks are prisoners.

Hey, these people have a lot of time on their hands — a lot of time to ponder life and its injustices. Not to mention access to some of the best libraries in the country and free legal aid courtesy of the U.S. taxpayer. So why not sue? Hey, it could delay that pesky execution date.

Here are a few of the more ludicrous cases to escape the bars of steel:

- In Nevada, a prisoner sued because he was served smooth peanut butter instead of the crunchy kind.
- A Mississippi convict filed suit because he didn't get a parole hearing. He had escaped from prison at the time of the hearing. (Damn the timing.)
- A New York murderer claimed a defective haircut caused him lost sleep and headaches.
- In Arkansas, a prisoner claimed cruel and unusual punishment because he missed a pro-football broadcast.
- In Florida, a convict sued because he was forced to endure network television when a satellite dish was damaged.
- One murderer sued more than 300 times, claiming he caught a savage cold from eating off of paper plates and wasn't given enough fruit juice. (Huh?)
- A serial killer on California's death row, who sexually assaulted, tortured and mutilated five teenage girls, sued prison officials for cruel and unusual punishment because they served him soggy sandwiches.
- A Missouri rapist, robber and kidnapper sued because he thought prisoners should be entitled to salad bars and brunches on weekends and holidays. (Enough of those soggy sandwiches already.)

According to Knight-Ridder news services, prisoner lawsuits cost taxpayers about $81.3 million a year to defend.

But let's not just pick on these so-called victims of the system.

- Two ex-soldiers brought a suit against the Department of Veterans Affairs before the Supreme Court, explaining they had missed the entire 10-year eligibility period for veterans' educational benefits, because they were too drunk to notice the deadline pass by.
- When a New York couple decided to have sex on a subway track, their romantic rendezvous was interrupted by an oncoming train. While the little lady was left unharmed, her gentleman friend suffered a dislocated pelvis, neck injuries and lost part of his left foot. The couple sued the transit authority for $10 million, alleging "carelessness, recklessness and negligence," because the transit authority allowed the train to enter a rarely used track without warning commuters of the change of plans.

And finally, it just wouldn't be a lawsuit if the media weren't involved:

- A beer lover named Richard brought a $10,000 lawsuit against Anheuser-Busch, claiming false advertising and failure to deliver on its promises. No matter how much Bud Light Richy boy drank, the scenes depicted in the commercials — of perky girlies with tiny bikinis frolicking on beaches — never took place. Feeling shafted, he sued, claiming emotional distress.

OUTCOME: A trial court threw out the case, but Richard took it to the Michigan Court of Appeals, which ruled in favor for Anheuser-Busch.

It doesn't matter that most of these psychotics lose their cases. They end up costing the legal system millions of dollars in legal fees and headaches.

Well, I refuse to be part of the problem. I'm not going to sue. I don't care if the rest of the world is getting rich off soggy sandwiches and risky train sex. I'm gonna tough it out.

I refuse to drag a sweet, innocent landlady to court, because a few screws came undone in that rickety excuse for a shower door.

No, I'm not bitter.

So what if what I experienced could be classified as cruel and unusual. So what if I could snag a quick million. I'll just wrap that foot up with a giant bandage and hop my way through life for a little while.

At least I'll be hopping guilt-free.

Museum provides serene surroundings

Editor,

I would like to add my voice to the recent Collegian opinions regarding the architectural merits of our new Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

I find the structure to be most pleasing to the eye, especially the lovely, winding, tree-lined walkway that leads to the gallery on the second level.

It seems to me that the architect seamlessly blended the surrounding landscape with the building's function in a most imaginative and inviting manner, even providing a series of observation areas that give a sense of serenity upon entering the art gallery.

But don't take my word for it. Stroll over, and look for yourself.

Enjoy a light refreshment in the lobby area sidewalk cafe and then treat yourself to the Beach art museum's opening salvo of a most impressive collection of Kansas artists.

Collegian coverage of so-called date rape drug attempted to inform campus

Editor,

I have grown tired of the recent letters on the subject of the so-called Rohypnol scare. The context of all of the previous letters has been that the Collegian was maliciously demonizing the greek system.

I would like to take a stand for the other side. I admit the editorial board was wrong to flat out state that Rohypnol was here before the results from the case involving the women at a greek function were in. But, waiting for the results before saying anything to the student body would have been idiotic and irresponsible.

Not even warning the student body would be akin to saying, "Well, we think Bossy may have anthrax, but we're gonna take her to the state fair anyway, because the test results won't be in for another week."

As results were not immediately available in this case the members of the editorial board were far within the bounds of their position to warn students that they need to watch out for themselves and their friends at parties. Especially those parties where there are a lot of people you don't know.

The evidence up to the point when the board wrote its editorial was heavily weighted toward Rohypnol being the cause of the symptoms displayed by the women at the party.

Jill Graham states in her letter, "What we seem to have here is a case of underaged and inexperienced drinkers who had a few too many and got sick."

Oh, this is obviously the case. If I could have a nickel for every time I saw a minor who hadn't had much drinking experience vomit blood and fall unconscious for nine hours, I'd be broke!

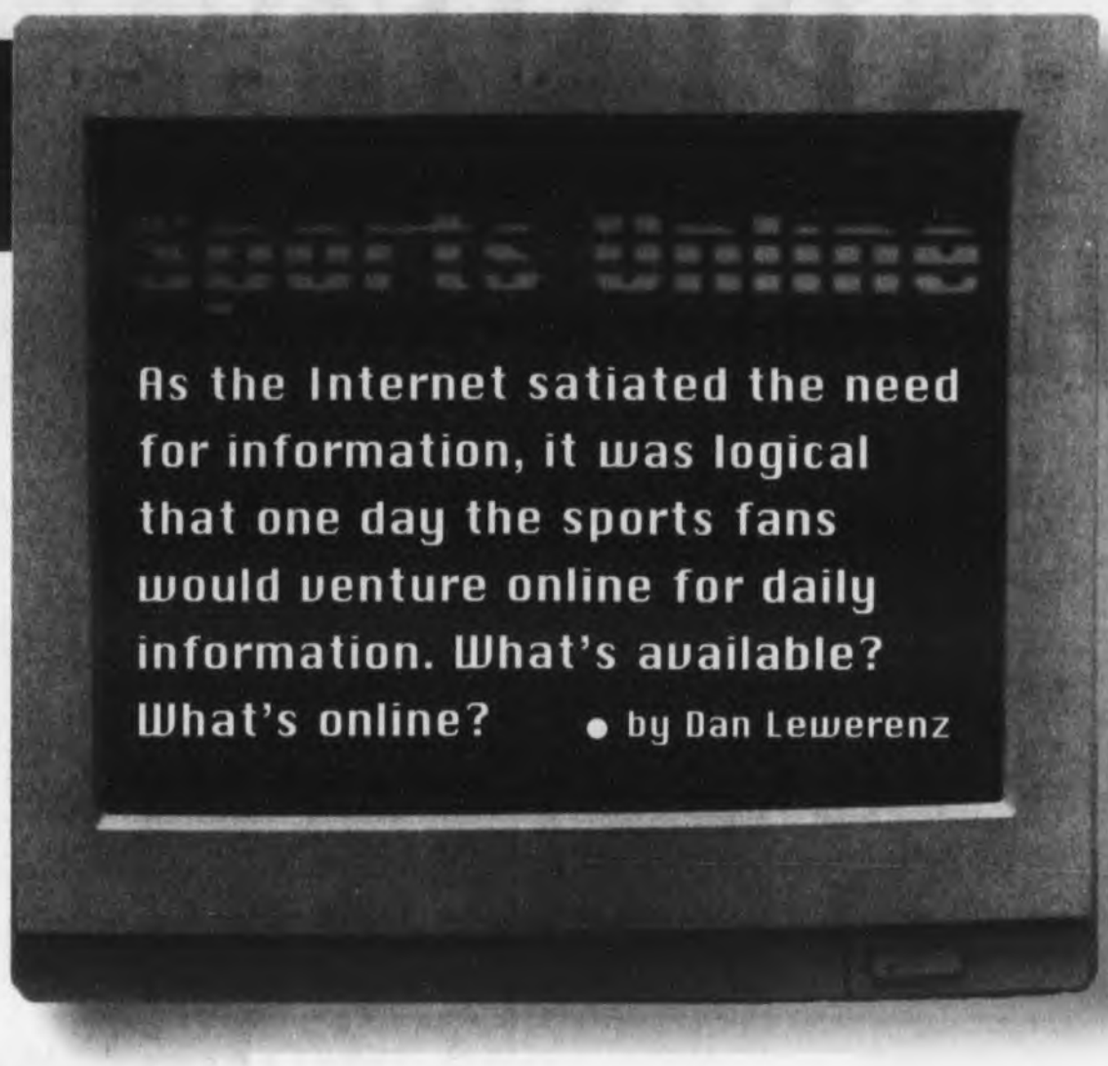
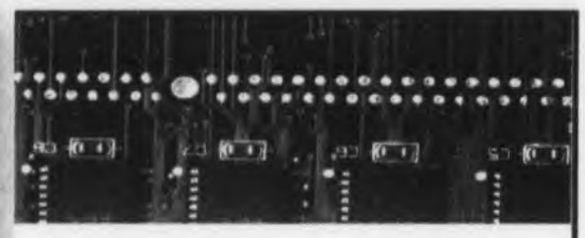
This is not a normal reaction to alcohol, especially not when observed in multiple victims. Unless they were doing tequila shots with Drano chasers!

Graham goes on to say these rumors have been extremely damaging to the reputation of the fraternity. Of course, because it has been stated in the Collegian numerous times which fraternity it was, I have really had to reconsider my perception of the fraternity. The public does not know which fraternity was involved!



The only people who know are the friends of the women and the fraternity members. The Collegian editorial board was simply doing its job by alerting the public.



Though it did slip up a little, it was still right to warn the students. Of course the aftermath of this so-called Rohypnol scare could take years to clean up.

You know, the riots, the looting, the townsfolk marching in single file to the fraternities with torches in hand, and burning the houses to the ground, the carnage, the bodies hung from trees ... Oh wait a minute, that was about pizza delivery was not it?

The Internet has brought about a revolution in information retrieval. And perhaps no segment of society has been more affected than the world of sports.

From coaches to sports writers to fans, the Internet has transformed previous notions of sports information.

For net-saavy fans, websites such as ESPNET.Sportszone and various university athletic department sites provide access to information, and e-mail LISTSERVS and chat rooms give fans a chance to interact with each other.

FINDING A FORUM

Wyldcat, a senior in landscape architecture, has been a frequent contributor to a K-State sports LISTSERV since summer. (Editor's note: Wyldcat requested his name be left anonymous.)

"I found the information on the Internet while searching through the KSU sports homepage," Wyldcat said, "and it sounded like there was some real opportunity to talk with people on a daily basis about K-State athletics.

"I've been to as many KSU football games as possible in the four years I've been up here and never missed a home game. I guess I feel that I've put so much into backing the Cats that the talk list was another way for me to express my love for athletics and of football."

Fans discuss previous games, upcoming opponents and even which cheers are appropriate. Wyldcat runs a contest to see who can guess the score of upcoming games the closest.

"They're a lifeline to home," John Cook, a K-State alumnus now living in Indiana, said. "The additional bonuses of immediacy and perspective are notable. Before I had access to the Web and before K-State broke into the top 25, I sometimes couldn't even find the score. The scores were never on the radio before they hit the top 25.

"I watched a whole Indiana vs. Illinois game one time to watch for the network to flash on the KSU vs. Nebraska score. Talk about boring. Now, I'll hit the Web a few minutes after the game — last week went to the KC Star and the Missouri University websites (the KSU site didn't have a story up) to see what the different perspectives had to say. It's kind of like an instant letter from home."

FORUM FAULTS

But those seemingly harmless conversations can have unintended effects. Boston College was crushed in an early match-up with Virginia Tech after someone watched a BC practice and posted a detailed breakdown of the Eagles' plays on a chat line.

Although the post can hardly take all the blame for the loss, Eagles coach Dan Henning was furious. And K-State coach Bill Snyder said he had a right to be.

"If someone who had access to our practices did something like that, you bet I'd be upset," Snyder said.

Many journalists also use the Internet as a means of gathering information and keeping the pulse of the fans. But most sports reporters remain anonymous, lurking on LISTSERVS, reading but never posting any messages, fearing others will not be as open with information if they think the media is listening in.

After the K-State vs. Indiana State game, Collegian sports editor Shana Newell wrote a column in which she chastised the student section for its criticism of quarterback Brian Kavanagh, a story she read on the K-State LISTSERV.

Although Newell said she confirmed the information with friends who sat in the student section, members of the LISTSERV said they were upset by the presence of the media on the LISTSERV and contacted Newell about the article.

Cook, a 1968 journalism graduate of K-State, was one member of the LISTSERV who objected to its use as a means of gathering information and said the amount and content of traffic on the list have changed dramatically since the realization the Collegian and other media outlets were paying attention.

"Without a free exchange of knowledge, a free society cannot exist," Cook said, "and lurking is an Orwellian intrusion on free exchange. The chill on the KSU sports list is a goldfish-bowl look at what happens when a journalist fails to observe ethical standards.

"I think that electronic communications, in general, are having a profound impact on journalism. Sports reporting is no exception. As a product of the 'Nam generation, I probably have some unrealistic ethical expectations, but I see a disturbing erosion of journalistic ethics. It's so easy to do a lot of things electronically, and competitive pressures are so great — aggravated by an accelerated pace that's fed by the electronic ease of delivery — that I see journalists rushed to judgment and making very bad judgments, even supposedly distinguished journalists of national reputation."

Weather hampers Wildcats

> "They started coming after us, and we just couldn't counter their aggressiveness."

> JUNIOR TENNIS PLAYER

SHANE MCCORMICK
contributing writer

The K-State women's tennis team fought against more than its opponents when it traveled to Indiana for the Hoosier Classic last weekend.

The team members were supposed to leave last Friday. They were supposed to arrive, relax and play their matches the following day at 9 a.m.

That's what was supposed to happen.

But it didn't. The team didn't leave for Chicago until 5:40 p.m. When it got into Chicago, bad weather forced the cancellation of its connecting flight, and the team spent the night in the airport. The Wildcats finally got to the Hoosier Classic Saturday at 3 p.m., having missed their first two matches.

Once they finally got a chance to actually play, the Cats served up some wins throughout the lineup.

Playing at No. 1, junior Yana Dorodnova won both her singles matches, taking each one in straight sets.

Junior Lena Piliptchak won her first match 6-3, 6-2 over Indiana's Candace Donahoe. Piliptchak won her second match by default.

"I thought I played pretty well," Piliptchak said. "I was pretty tired going into the match, but I was pleased with my performance."

In other singles action, junior Chris Schulte breezed through her first match, beating Courtney Genosi of Middle Tennessee 6-1, 6-0.

Schulte said she had to keep on top of her game throughout the match.

"You could tell that she didn't have a lot of tournament experience," she said. "I just had to keep being aggressive and keep going after her."

In doubles action, Schulte and senior Karen Nicholson dropped Rachel Fiset and Hally Cohen from Purdue in a tie-breaker thriller, 9-8. It was not the first time Schulte had seen the Purdue duo play.

"I played against both if them last year, so I knew what kind of play to expect out of them," Schulte said. "They both stay at the baseline and get balls back. We just got more aggressive and started putting balls away."

Schulte and Nicholson fell in the second round 8-5, but rebounded in their third match with a victory.

"In the second match, we were up 5-2," Schulte said.

"They started coming after us, and we just couldn't counter their aggressiveness."

In other doubles action, Dorodnova and Piliptchak rebounded from a second match loss to win their third match 8-3, and take third place in the draw.

After the Hoosier Classic, Dorodnova traveled to the Riviera All-American Championships in Pacific Palisades, Calif.

There, after losing in the first round of the qualifying singles draw, Dorodnova won her first two matches of the consolation draw, posting a 6-2, 6-3 win against Wake Forest's Maggie Harris and a 7-6, 6-4 win against Johanna Sones of William and Mary.

Next up for Dorodnova is Nebraska's Sandra Noetzel. Noetzel and teammate Lisa Hart bumped Dorodnova and Lena Piliptchak from the doubles qualifying rounds at the Clay Court Championships.

YANA DORODNOVA tightens the strings on her racquet at the beginning of practice earlier this season while Coach Steve Bietau explains the regimen.

Quality experience remains for Cats

SHANE MCCORMICK
contributing writer

Usually when a team loses its top player, there is a concern about replacing that person.

Not so for the K-State women's tennis team, which lost star Karina Kuregian to graduation last year. The Wildcats know they have a more than capable replacement in junior Yana Dorodnova.

While the team lost a quality player in Kuregian, it doesn't lose quality experience at the No. 1 spot.

When an illness forced Kuregian to take time off last year, Dorodnova stepped up. Her name was consistently found in the ITA tennis rankings last season.

Last spring, Dorodnova posted one of the biggest wins of her collegiate career when she cruised to a straight set victory against Notre Dame's Jennifer Hall. Hall was ranked No. 21 at the time.

Coach Steve Bietau said Dorodnova's experience playing at the No. 1 spot is valuable.

"It hopefully makes her aware of what it takes to play at that position and against those opponents," Bietau said. "When there is a crowd on hand watching, you can count on Yana laying everything on the line."

It was at last season's NCAA Tournament match against Kansas that Dorodnova showed her ability to play under pressure.

With a sizable crowd watching, Dorodnova came from behind to win a three-set thriller, keeping K-State's chances of advancing alive.

But along with the No. 1 spot comes higher expectations for Dorodnova.

"I expect more out of myself this season," Dorodnova said. "Last season, I really didn't know what to expect with college tennis. Now, I understand and I expect good play out of myself."

So far this season, Dorodnova has played well, but not up to her high expectations.

At the National Clay Court Championships in Baltimore, Md., Dorodnova posted straight-set wins in her first two matches, but then dropped 7-6, 6-2 in the third round to Harvard's Rosemary She.

"She played OK. She wasn't great, but she wasn't bad," Bietau said. "She was down in the first match. She came back and really showed some resiliency. She was able to make adjustments and reverse the momentum."

Dorodnova, whose hard-hitting game is suited for hard courts, had only one day to practice on the clay courts.

"The clay really slowed my game down," Dorodnova said. "But I really expected to go farther in the tournament."

> "Whether it's right or not, whoever is playing No. 1 gets more attention."
> • STEVE BIETAU
> K-STATE TENNIS COACH

Playing at the No. 1 spot with senior status, Kuregian was looked upon to lead the team last season.

Will Dorodnova be looked upon to do the same this season?

"Yes, definitely," Bietau said. "Whether it is right or not, whoever is playing No. 1 gets more attention. They go to more tournaments. You guys write about them more. People ask where is the No. 1 match being played.

"Any coach would say that the person playing No. 1 needs to take on more of a leadership role."

Dorodnova said the experience will be a new one for her.

"We'll just see how it goes," she said.

Road to success hasn't been easy for Bietau, Cats, but it's easing up

Last week K-State's tennis team might have posted its worst record on the opening day of a tournament in years.

Stranded in Chicago's O'Hare International Airport, the Cats were forced to forfeit all their first-round matches.

But it will take more than bad weather to keep Coach Steve Bietau and these athletes down.

Bietau's career at K-State began in 1984, when he was the head coach of the women's and men's varsity tennis teams.

Dan LEWERENZ

"At that time, there was an entirely different world," Bietau said. "We had both men's and women's teams. I was head coach of both, and about 40 percent of my job was raising money."

Bietau had no chance to compete. With a budget incapable of supporting one program, and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics incapable of providing more funds, a decision had to be made.

Softball, men's and women's golf and men's and women's tennis were put on the block. Two sports had to go.

Softball was given the ax. With the golf teams receiving a fair amount of independent support, men's tennis was chosen as the other victim.

Although Bietau had hoped to keep both teams, he said he knew it was a decision he would have to live with.

"People who knew me in the tennis world kept calling," Bietau recalled. "They were asking, 'Where are you going to go?'

"But in coaching tennis, whether as a tennis pro or a college coach, there is very little difference between coaching men and coaching women. And it feels good when you're successful on either side."

And it was a decision that ultimately benefited the program as well. With the budgets combined to support a single team, Bietau had more flexibility to do the recruiting and training necessary to bring his team to the next level.

That's where the Wildcats are now — the next level. Karina Kuregian, a 1996 graduate of the K-State tennis program, was the first K-Stater to be named an all-American and climb into the top 20 of the Rolex Collegiate Tennis Rankings.

Kuregian's experience and a wealth of new talent, led by this year's No. 1 singles player, junior Yana Dorodnova, took the Wildcats to the NCAA tournament for the first time, where they advanced to the regional semifinals before falling to host and top seed Kansas.

Now the Wildcats are a force to be reckoned with. Not that they're in danger of bringing home any national championships in the next year or two — that level is still a step or two up.

But K-State can now enter a match with most teams and be the favorite. And even against the traditional powers like Notre Dame and Brigham Young, the Cats will have the personnel to pull off the upset if taken too lightly.

And most important, whether they win or lose, the Cats will leave the court as one of the classiest acts in the country.

"I talk to our players about what it is to be a student-athlete here at K-State," Bietau said. "We represent the mix. We have players from all over the world and players from here in Kansas. We are representatives of the University, so it is important that we do give back to both K-State and to the community."

> "Whether they win or lose, the Cats will leave the court as one of the classiest acts in the country."

When the Cats enter Big 12 play next semester, they'll be in a whole new world. Texas A&M is developing a new tennis center that might be one of the best in collegiate tennis, and Texas is one of the nation's premier programs.

But K-State comes prepared. Bietau has led K-State tennis from the brink of extinction to the national tournament, and he will continue to take them further.

Rain forces team to cut play short

JON BALMER
sports writer

In the midst of a two-day period that consisted of dropping temperatures and pouring rainfall, the K-State women's golf team placed second at the Lady Trojan Invitational in Little Rock, Ark.

The Cats were only able to play 18 holes Monday before the sky-faucet's were opened Monday evening and continuing throughout Tuesday morning, canceling the final 36 holes.

The Cats' team score of 305 placed them only behind Georgia State's 304. Top individual performances came from sophomore Jane Yi and junior Ann Slater, who tied for fifth-place, and redshirt sophomore Desiree Simmons' fifteenth-place finish. Coach Kristi Knight felt her team performed well before the rain took its course.

"The team score was our second-best total ever," Knight said. "I wish we had been able to play the rest of the tournament, but the fairways were soaked."

Among the positive side notes, the Cats beat Wichita State for the very first time. Knight felt this was a major victory for the team.

"You kind of gauge yourself based on your play against in-state schools," Knight said.

Even though the weather took out a major part of the tournament, Knight said she was pleased to see the emergence of Simmons.

"Desiree had been struggling since injuring her elbow at the first tournament," Knight said. "I was really encouraged by her rounds and placing."

The Trojan Invitational marked the final tournament for the team before winter break. When asked about her judgment on the first half of the season, Knight said she was very pleased at her team's play.

"So far this season, we've won a tournament, taken second, placed fourth against a very tough field at the Big 12 Invitational and shot scores no K-State team has ever shot before," Knight said. "During the winter break we should heal up and be at full strength, so we are definitely looking forward to the Spring."

▶ MEN'S GOLF

Snow, rain match Cats' performance

TARA WRAY
sports writer

The K-State men's golf team's finish was almost as dismal as the wintry weather at the Red Raider Intercollegiate in Lubbock, Texas Monday and Tuesday.

After snow and rain subsided, the Cats placed 14th in the 17-team field with a team score of 611 in an abbreviated 36-hole tournament.

Coach Mark Elliott said the unexpected snow shortened the tournament from the scheduled 54 holes to 36, and said that might have played a factor in the Cats poor showing.

Tournament rookies Dan Demory and Zachary Clark shot an 81 and an 84 in the first round of play, but finished strong, both shooting a 79 in the second round of play.

"It would have been good with Clark and Demory doing good in their first showing of the year," Clark said. "It would have been nice to shoot 18 more, but who knows."

Leading the field for K-State was sophomore Brant Benninga, who shot a 72 and a 74 respectively and finished the competition tied for eighth.

Chad Buckridge also had a good showing for the Cats, tying for second in individual play with a score of 73 in the first round and finished with a 77 in the last.

Elliott said inconsistency has plagued the Cats this season, and play at the Red Raider Intercollegiate was no different.

"Every tournament it seems like we have one or two good rounds," he said. "But that doesn't help when you need four."

More surprising than even the snow in Lubbock was a poor showing from B.J. Walter, who has previously led the Cats' individual standings the past two tournaments. Walter finished play with 81 and 74 in two rounds of play.

"Normally when you come out of the fall, you have a pretty good idea of who will be playing in the spring," Elliott said. "Right now I have no idea who'll be playing."

The Cats will finish off the 1996 fall season at the U.S.T Invitational, November 4-5.

The number 24 stood for the number of people killed in Kansas last year in alcohol-related accidents.

Congress approves increase in Pell grants for students

MIRANDA KENNEDY
staff reporter

Congress increased federal funding for higher education programs for the 1997-98 academic year.

Students who receive money from Pell grants will get more money next year. This year the Pell grant's minimum was $400, and its maximum was $2,470.

Larry Moeder, director of financial aid, said for 1997-98 these will most likely be $630 and $2,700.

"This is the largest increase in Pell grants that we've seen in many, many years," he said.

K-State will get more money for the work-study and Perkins loan programs, so it will be able to include more students in these programs.

The State Student Incentive Grant program, which funds the State of Kansas Scholarship program, will also get more money. Moeder said money will probably benefit more students.

"The election year is a good year for students, because basically last year in overall educational funding, Congress was attempting to cut $3 billion in federal higher-education programs," Moeder said.

For your information

Pell grant: 4,809
Perkins loan: 2,479
work-study: 1,331

Source: Larry Moeder, director of financial aid

This budget was passed and signed Sept. 30. It calls for a $3.5-billion increase rather than a decrease.

Nichole Barry, sophomore in international studies and Spanish, gets a Perkins loan.

"I'll be able to have more money for school, because without the loans there's no way I'd be going to college," she said. "I wouldn't be able to afford it."

Moeder said he thinks Congress passed the increase because it is an election year, and because people made it clear that money for education is important to them.

"Last year as Congress attempted to cut student-aid programs, there was an overwhelming cry from students and parents to not cut student funding," he said.

Congress also increased the direct loan program, but it was an administrative increase. This money will be used to operate the program.

Moeder said the next significant change he expects is when Congress re-authorizes federal higher-education funding in 1998 for the following five years.

"I expect Congress will increase the amount students can borrow under the loan programs," he said.

Department addresses problems with quizzes

MISSY SNODGRASS
staff reporter

The Spanish department had to squelch problems that were discovered in the Language Learning Center.

"From what I understand, people were taking their backpacks to the terminals with them and cheating on the quizzes," Jennifer Leech, junior in animal science and industry, said. "They would have cheat sheets that they would use when the proctor was not looking."

Bob Kohl, director of the Language Learning Center and a senior in business and Spanish, said one student was caught cheating. The student's fate was left up to the instructor.

"Now we don't let them take books or note pads or anything to the terminals," he said.

"It is impossible to make a 100-percent cheat-proof test, but we do our best," Kohl said.

There are security cameras in the center, but they are not on every terminal. Kohl said they do not have the funds to buy more cameras or to pay someone to watch over every student.

Another problem the center had was students' retaking the same quiz. Kohl said this was a misunderstanding.

The Spanish III and IV classes take a series of verb-tense quizzes in the center.

"There are certain computers that are set up to take test after test. They can go in and take numerous practice tests," Paulina Casey, temporary instructor of Spanish, said.

When they think they are ready, students can change computers and take the actual exam.

"They have three tries for each (verb) tense. They fill in the blank with a verb," Casey said. "In my class, I take the better one of the three scores."

The misunderstanding stems from students' using the real tests like practice tests.

"They tried to take the exams as many times as they could," Kohl said. "No more than a handful from any class were involved."

This amounted to about 10-15 students. "What we've done is visit classes this week to clear up misunderstandings between students, teachers and classes," Kohl said.

This problem was easier to solve than the first problem.

"Most of them took exam one twice; we are letting them take one more exam," Kohl said. The quiz is only one component of the class, he said.

"We typed step-by-step procedures to see if there are any questions about exam procedures," he said.

Kohl said that this will clear up any questions that students may have.

Field day to feature dairy specialists

HEATHER HJETLAND
staff reporter

About 250 dairy-cattle enthusiasts from across the state will be at CiCo Park Friday for K-State Dairy Day.

The annual field day will feature dairy experts speaking about industry trends and research from the past year at K-State.

The day will begin at 8 a.m. with registration and the opening of more than 25 commercial booths and exhibits. There will also be a free lunch sponsored by Monsanto at 11:30 a.m. The day will conclude after a tour of the Dairy Teaching Research Center at 3 p.m.

Robert Cropp, a professor of agricultural and applied economics from the University of Wisconsin, will speak about changes in milk-pricing systems and how producers can use futures contacts for milk. The keynote speaker will begin his presentations at 12:45 p.m.

After a welcome from Jack Riley, animal science and industry department head, at 10:10 a.m., John Smith, a K-State dairy extension specialist, will begin the program by speaking about herd expansion.

"It will be about considerations for producers that want to increase herd size, especially about options for expanding milking facilities," he said.

Dick Dunham, a K-State dairy extension specialist, will discuss using milk urea nitrogen as a management tool. He will explain new technology to test MUN as a way to evaluate a cow's efficiency in the metabolism of protein.

Jeff Stevenson, professor of animal sciences and industry, said he will review current heat synchronization methods to breed lactating dairy cows.

John Shirley, associate professor of animal sciences and industry, will speak about ways to eliminate bovine leukosis virus by explaining methods used at K-State's dairy.

Dunham will also present awards to Kansas dairy farmers for high-quality milk.

Students are welcome to attend.

"I'm going to see ways that dairymen can be more efficient at making cows produce milk," Toby Weber, sophomore in animal sciences and industry, said.

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

BILL MCSHANE (front), Nick Colby (center) and Jason "Mot" Waldmann are the members of the band Ultimate Fake Book, which started in Beloit.

Band strives for recognition

MATT BASLER
staff reporter

When college students in Kansas think of music, they do not automatically think of Manhattan as the mecca of rock 'n' roll.

However, there are many bands right here in Manhattan that offer good, traditional rock 'n' roll.

One band in particular, Ultimate Fake Book, began as a garage band in Beloit.

Band members Bill McShane and Nick Colby started playing together during high school.

With McShane playing lead guitar and Colby playing base guitar, they needed a drummer to make the band complete.

Through friends at school, they teamed up with Jason "Mot" Waldmann and began playing together.

Waldmann said he was a huge Motley Crue fan. When he was in grade school, a teacher knew he loved Motley Crue and began calling him Mot. The name stuck.

All three members came to Manhattan as students in 1993 but decided to quit school and focus all their attention on their music.

"It just got to be a hassle with playing all the shows. It seemed like the logical thing to do," Colby said.

Ultimate Fake Book tries to practice twice a week, but many times the schedule varies.

"We can schedule it whenever, since we practice at our house," McShane said.

Colby explained the group used to have a lead singer, but he quit after getting married.

"Everything seemed to go 100 times better. Everything seemed tighter once Bill started to sing," Colby said.

In addition to playing lead guitar, McShane also sings for the group.

He said he had grown up singing and playing instruments at the same time, so the transition in the band was not hard.

"It really wasn't a problem for me," McShane said.

Colby said each member of the band brings a different musical style to the group, which creates the perfect environment to make rock 'n' roll.

"I bring the metal aspect to the group," Waldmann said.

While Waldmann enjoys heavy metal bands like Judas Priest, Iron Maiden and Ozzy Osbourne, Colby saidhe is more prone to jazz.

However, Ultimate Fake Book does not model itself after any particular band.

"I don't think I'd be at liberty to say, since we listen to so many different bands," Colby said.

Colby said the band tries to make their own style of music with emphasis on melodies and lyrics.

"All we're looking for is good, strong melodies and good songwriting," he said.

Colby said Ultimate Fake Book plays mostly pop rock with a steady beat. Although they haven't recorded any slow songs, there's still that option.

"We're playing rock right now, but don't be surprised if we play slower stuff," he said.

Colby said Ultimate Fake Book is not interested with music industry ploys to sell their music.

"We don't have any gimmicky-concept albums," he said.

However, the band has not ruled out the possibility of making it big.

"If we become rich and famous, great, but we're just trying to make good music," Waldmann said.

"It's pretty tough to get a gig, since there are so many bands," McShane said.

McShane said club owners are always looking for bigger bands. This forces bands like Ultimate Fake Book to take what they can get, even if the pay is not that good.

"It's stressful on the pocketbook," McShane said.

Ultimate Fake Book is working on getting its music out into the public eye. It has performed at places such as Bombers, Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon and the Bottleneck in Lawrence.

Colby said Ultimate Fake Book is trying to get its name out in places other than Manhattan.

"We're kind of getting our foot in the door at Lawrence," he said.

In addition to a self-released tape, Ultimate Fake Book is currently working on a compact disc.

"We just recorded four songs and we're going back into the studio next month to record two more," Waldmann said.

Waldmann said the band hopes to have a CD out within the next month.

Speaker said existence of God proved by rules of modern physics

AMY LAGRONE
staff reporter

A crowded K-State Student Union slowly became less crowded during a lecture Wednesday night.

Many students who attended the speech titled "The Physics of Immortality: A Scientific Proof of the Existence of God," were not prepared for what they heard.

Frank Tipler, professor of mathematics at Tulane University and speaker at the lecture, used modern physics to explain his discovery.

Tipler said had been an atheist.

During the process of devising a mathematical model of the end of the universe, he came to a stunning conclusion, he said. Using physics and relying solely on rigorous procedures of logic, he created a proof of the existence of God and the eventual resurrection of every human being who has ever lived.

His model of the end of the universe is called the Omega Point Theory. He has spent the last 17 years exploring the implications of this controversial theory.

Tipler began his speech by asking three questions: Does God exist? Do we have free will? And is there life after death?

Then he explained the past, present and future of the universe, and related it to his theory. He said the eternal chain of life is related to time, not space. After showing a diagram of his Omega Point Theory, he showed another diagram that put Satan, the earth, angels and God in order of superiority.

Finally, he used his diagrams to prove the answers to the preceding three questions were all yes.

"It was totally confusing," Heather Lowe, sophomore in electronic journalism, said after listening to the lecture. "I thought I was going to be amazed by scientific proof about God."

People walked out during the course of the lecture.

"I don't know what they were expecting," said Miah Whitaker, sophomore in English education and a member of Union Program Council's Issues and Ideas Committee. "It was a lecture about physics. The signs said so."

Karen Schlabach, sophomore in physics and chairwoman of the committee, said she thought people were surprised it was so physics-based. She was pleased with the number of people who attended the speech and said Tipler did a good job of explaining his points.

"He portrayed a different view of God than we are used to hearing," she said. "He talked more in terms of time than in space. We tend to think in the opposite way."

Kynda Blair, junior in speech, said she thinks the existence of God was a great topic. She said Tipler could have simplified his viewpoints by putting them in layman's terms.

Brian Welborn, K-State graduate, said he believes every point Tipler made, but not because of anything he said.

"My personal opinion is that any belief you have, if you can justify it to yourself, is great," Welborn said. "He (Tipler) really seems to believe this, and he presents it well."

For students who are interested in this topic, Tipler's theory is explained in his book, "The Physics of Immortality."

Art lectures begin today

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Architecture Lecture

The College of Architecture and Design presents the lecture "Free Indirect Vision" by Wiel Arets at 3:30 p.m. Friday in K-State Student Union Forum Hall.

Arets, who works in Herleen, the Netherlands, is an internationally renowned architect.

His most notable work is the Academy of Arts and Architecture in Maastricht, completed in 1993, which received numerous awards and critical praise.

Books by Arets include "Architecture of Freedom," "An Alabaster Skin" and "Virological Architecture," each influenced by the work of Paul Valery, filmmaker Jean-Luc Godard and Canadian philosopher Arthur Kroker, respectively.

There is no charge for admission. Contact Diane Potts at 532-1090 for more information.

Strecker Gallery Lecture

James Munce, associate professor of art, will present an informative discussion on prints today at 7 p.m. at the Strecker Gallery, 332 Poyntz Ave.

He will discuss the history and various techniques of printmaking.

Reservations are not needed, but suggested.

A reception will follow. Admission is free.

The gallery will also have numerous prints — intaglios, serigraphs, lithographs and block prints — for sale with prices from $20 to $2,000.

Among the prints offered are works by Munce himself, whose brilliantly rendered religious scenes are usually on display in the gallery, and work by Robert Sudlow.

Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday. Call 537-2099 for more information.

Art Department Lecture

Artist Alan Shields will deliver a lecture on printmaking at 1:30 p.m. Friday in the Union Little Theater.

Manhattan Center for the Arts

Two exhibitions of K-State art are in both galleries at the Manhattan Center for the Arts.

Work by master of fine arts students comprise the largest exhibit and feature the greatest variety of media. The smaller gallery features work by the graduate faculty of the Department of Art. Both shows close on Nov. 15. Gallery hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Call 537-4420 for more information.

Union Art Gallery

An exhibit of work by Don Fullmer in the Union Art Gallery will close Friday. Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Willard Gallery

"The Basics," paintings by Bryon Bruening, will close Friday. Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

LITTLE APPLE ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

TODAY

The Lawrence-based band Margin of Error will play at 9:30 p.m. in Bombers.

SUNDAY

Katherine Walker, education coordinator, will lead a tour of "The Collective Spirit" at 2 p.m. in the lower lobby of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. Students can pick up membership brochures for Beach Bums at the museum desk. There is a $10 membership fee. The invitation is open to all students.

Flip side of Internet shows the world is nuts

contributing writer

Let's face it, the world is nuts. Even the Internet is a bit crazy, so this week we will take a look at the flip side.

The Web Voyeur — Live Images (http://www.rainier.net/%7Elarry/web-voyeur/)

If you think the world is watching you, then it probably is. Big brother is no longer the only one watching. The rest of the world has joined him.

This is a link page for all of the online cameras scattered around the world. They are everywhere.

You'll be able to look at London, England, then bounce over to Hawaii, Australia, San Francisco, Washington, D.C. — you can go nearly anywhere.

There are also updated pictures of models, feet and model railroads. You'll have to see this page to believe it.

website review

Christian Coalition Worldwide (http://www.cc.org/)

Liberals, be afraid, be very afraid. I never thought I'd see the day the Christian Coalition made it online. It must be a cold day in Oklahoma.

This page has a classic, conservative design that works well. It's a very easy page to navigate, because it uses frames to allow users to jump between sections.

For those of you who can't get enough of those witty coalition newsletters, it has several online. It even has its top one, Christian America. It's a must read for all Christians.

The so-called voter education section is kind of a joke. Though it claims, "No voter guide or scorecard should be construed as an endorsement of any candidate or political party." The page scores each representative from 0 to 100. By the way, I couldn't find a score for President Clinton but Bob Dole got a 100, and Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., scored a 14.

The Family Resource section turns out to be a fancy name for the coalition's online store.

Overall it isn't a bad page, if you don't mind being bombarded by some heavy-handed religious-right propaganda.

The FBI's "Ten Most Wanted Fugitives" (http://www.fbi.gov/toplist.htm)

Warning: This page may be armed and dangerous. Visit it at your own risk!

Meet the original top 10 list from the FBI home office in Washington, D.C.

This is a pretty interesting page. Unfortunately none of the administration has made it here yet, but it is only a matter of time.

All would-be criminals need to check this out to find out how to be the best.

Murderers and terrorists are listed to help would-be criminals perfect their skills.

If you are looking for a mentor to teach you how to operate a knife, plastique or cyanide, then this is the place to go.

Trust the FBI to be thorough in its descriptions. I really didn't need to find out about each criminal's tan lines. At least they tell you what the criminals like to do, where they hang out and what classes they teach.

Hormone derived from urine stops AIDS-related cancer

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — The chance discovery that some pregnant lab mice are resistant to Kaposi's sarcoma, a form of cancer seen almost exclusively among AIDS patients, has yielded a promising new treatment for the disease.

> "It's an important finding. It certainly has a dramatic effect and needs to be aggressively pursued."
> • ANTHONY FAUCI
> HEAD OF THE NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF ALLERGY AND INFECTIOUS DISEASES

The treatment involves a hormone derived from the urine of pregnant women.

Researchers found injections directly into the tumor often make the cancer disappear.

The hormone triggers the cancer cells to commit suicide, although exactly how it works remains a mystery.

"It's an important finding," said Anthony Fauci, head of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases. "It certainly has a dramatic effect and needs to be aggressively pursued."

Kaposi's sarcoma is a form of skin cancer that is extremely rare except among AIDS patients, especially homosexuals, striking between 15 percent and 30 percent. The disease can be fatal and causes purplish blotches.

Researchers working with AIDS pioneer Robert Gallo, at the Institute of Human Virology at the University of Maryland, discovered that an inbred strain of hairless mice, which are ordinarily susceptible to all sorts of cancer, could not be induced to get Kaposi's sarcoma if they were pregnant.

Eventually the researchers found chorionic gonadotropin, a hormone made early in pregnancy by the human placenta, seemed to stop the cancer in the test tube.

Next, Parkash Gill and colleagues from the University of Southern California tested the treatment on 36 patients. They reported their results in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

They tried four commercial varieties and found one made by Wyeth-Ayerst Laboratories worked best. Cancerous spots went away completely in 10 of 12 patients who got the highest doses, although it is unclear whether the lesions will come back.

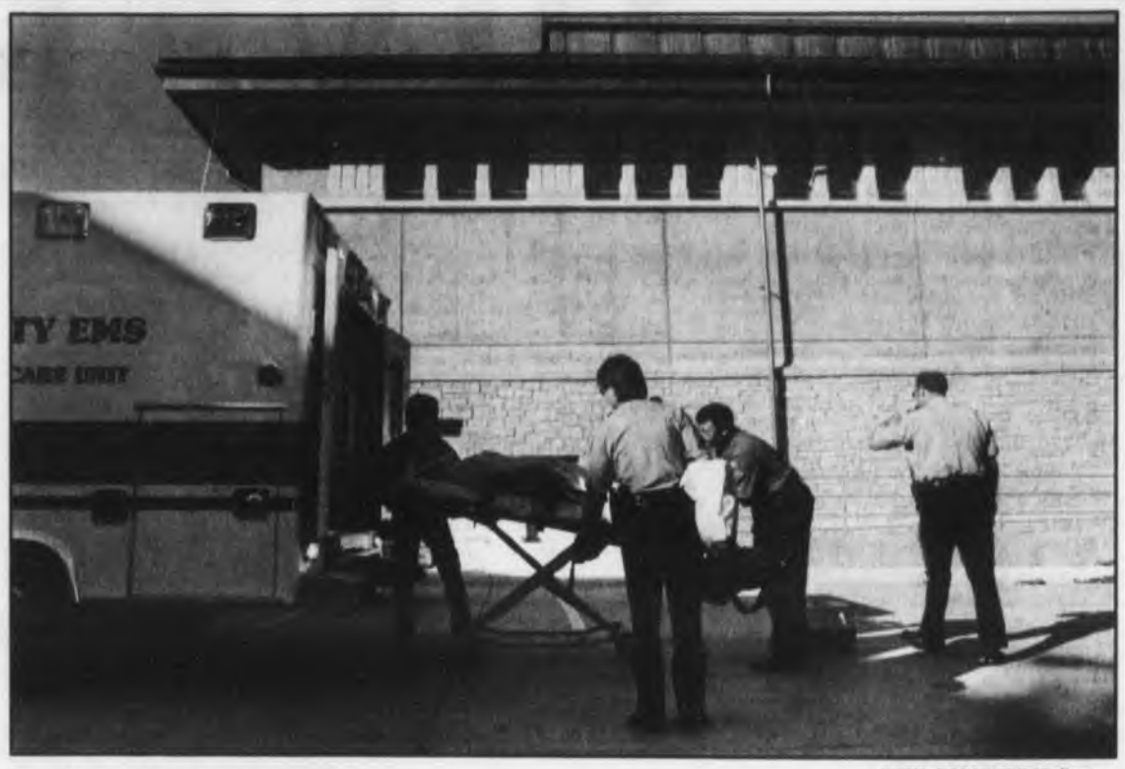
Currently, Kaposi's sarcoma is treated with radiation and chemotherapy, which carry unpleasant side effects. In contrast, chorionic gonadotropin actually makes patients feel better.

"I have never used a drug before that has side effects that patients actually like," Gill said. "Some gain weight, have improved endurance, can lift more weight and have a feeling of well-being."

Gill said it costs about $150 to treat one spot of cancer, and the approach is suitable for those with up to 10 or so cancerous outbreaks. Some patients have much more extensive cancer, involving even hundreds of tumors.

Researchers are testing bloodstream injections of the hormone to see if it stops Kaposi's sarcoma that has spread through the body.

While not ready to release those results yet, Gallo said, "There is an important future for this approach."



Also under way are studies of the hormone as a treatment for breast and prostate cancer, as well as AIDS itself.

A goal of research is to find exactly what body chemical is at work. Commercial preparations of the substance contain many other proteins besides chorionic gonadotropin, and researchers suspect that something else — perhaps a broken-down remnant of the hormone — is actually what stops the cancer.

Susan Krown of Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York recommended more study before doctors use the treatment routinely.

"Should everyone be injecting their patients' KS lesions based on this? No," she said. "Does it have interesting potential? Yes."

Chorionic gonadotropin is used for a variety of other purposes, including inducing ovulation in women and treating undescended testicles in boys.

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

In-line skater injured

JOSH BELLAND, sophomore in chemical engineering, was injured late Wednesday afternoon rollerblading near the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. Belland's friend, Brian Riecker, sophomore undecided, said Belland lost control going down the hill near the art museum and skidded face-first into the concrete.

For precautionary reasons, Belland was taken to Mercy Health Center for treatment of a bloody nose and split lip, said Louise Ferris, K-State Police patrol officer. "He just got the roller blades this week and was out for a study break," Riecker said. "He has a test later tonight."

Students can get first hand experience with cancer research through awards

DARCIE MCCONCKEY
staff reporter

Cancer is a disease that has baffled doctors and researchers for many years.

K-State's Center for Basic Cancer Research is encouraging interested students to join the fight against cancer through Student Cancer Research Awards.

The awards program was initiated about 10 years ago to allow undergraduate students in health-related fields an unusual opportunity to work side by side with cancer researchers. The $500 awards are funded entirely through private gifts and are intended to put students into the research labs.

Terry Johnson, director for the Center for Basic Cancer Research and University distinguished professor, said it is a beneficial time for students to learn about cancer and cancer-related topics outside the classroom.

"We are encouraging students to take advantage of working in the cancer-research labs. As an award winner, they become an actual member of the research team, as well as an investigator," Johnson, who is also chief scientist for BioServe Technologies, said.

The faculty sponsor the students in the research facilities, as well as provide lab equipment, control project funding and contribute the mentoring that is required to help the students succeed, he said.

The awards are campuswide, including the colleges of Agriculture, Human Ecology, Arts and Sciences, and Veterinary Medicine.

"The cancer center really reaches out and encourages students to participate in research. It is a big time commitment, but most of the time the research is so exciting that the students don't notice the time. It can be a very positive experience," he said.

This opportunity also allows students the chance to see if they are interested in cancer-relevant research work, Johnson said.

Heideh Fattaey, one of the 262 recipients of the student awards, is an example of how the award can affect students' lives and futures. As a K-State undergraduate student in biology, Fattaey said she decided she wanted to expand her love of biological science into the lab.

"This award had a tremendous effect on my future. I was able to do actual molecular and cellular research. I think this award provides a very positive opportunity for undergraduates to get some hands-on experience in the research field," Fattaey said.

Her research experience had such an effect on her life that she chose to dedicate her future to research work at K-State. Currently, she is a research scientist and laboratory manager for the biology division.

An experience like this, however, doesn't keep everyone at K-State.

Fattaey's brother, Alireza, was a 1982 award winner and is now a cancer treatment researcher for Onyx Pharmaceuticals in California.

"My brother is now working on treatments for cancer patients for a large pharmaceutical company, so that's very exciting. I also know many other graduates who have continued to work in the research field, and one of them is currently completing a research project in England," Fattaey said.

Though many award winners do not continue in the cancer-research field, Johnson said most of them have gone on to hold successful positions.

"Many of our students are highly motivated individuals and have become doctors, chiropractors, dentists and scientists. We are very proud of all of them," he said.

Undergraduate students interested in applying for the Student Cancer Research Awards can obtain applications in Ackert 125 and 413. The deadline for the awards is Dec. 2.

▶ PHONE SCAM

Scam artists use masked phone rates to victimize careless telephone users

BETH HUSTED
staff reporter

Scam artists are using your fingertips.

A recent phone scam has alarmed some people. The messages these people are leaving range from an arrest, illness or death in the recipient's family, to saying the person has won a free trip and needs to call for more information.

When these calls have been returned by the unsuspecting, the receiver claimed to speak broken English. Others get a long recorded message. These tactics are to ensure the caller stays on the line as long as possible.

Here is the catch. These 809 area code numbers are a sort of masked 900 number. But to avoid U.S. regulations on 900 numbers those calls go to the Caribbean, where those regulations don't apply.

U.S. regulations on 900 numbers require them to warn callers of the charge and rate involved, and provide a time period in which the caller can hang up without being charged.

"The scary thing is you can't do anything about it," Fred Damkroger, director of telecommunications, said.

People also receive pages. With the new area-code changes, pager wearers return the pages unknowingly.

The whole scam finally rears its ugly head when these victims get their bills, which can be $100 or more.

Telecommunications lists other scams to be aware of. These scams include getting campus phone books and leaving the same types of messages on voice-mail.

Some scams leave a message on your machine, saying you need to pay a bill right away, or they will send their attorneys after you. Some scams use voice-activated recorders that respond when you have stopped talking. These are all for the same purpose, to keep you on the line as long as possible.

"Another thing that students should be aware of is that not all 800 numbers are free. They can set up an 800 number to call that will vector to a 900 number that can charge you. It's still illegal, but they move fast," Damkroger said.

The best defense is to be extremely careful with any call you receive in which you don't recognize the area code. Students can call telecommunications to find out more information. The number is 532-7001.

"Call the office. They will be happy to tell you where it is and give you a fair estimate of how much it will cost," Damkroger said.

The fairest warning students can get is simple. Do not call any number or area code that is unknown.

Thatcher dedicates chapel at Baker

Source: Baker University

DAN HOLMGREN/Collegian

Before closing, Thatcher said society faces a problem with the "distortion of truth and the refusal to teach truth in the course of history."

She focused on the issues of affirmative action and politically correct language.

"Affirmative action is the negation of merit," she said.

Then Thatcher said she never wanted to ask whether a female colleague "was an affirmative-action candidate, or did you get her on merit."

Thatcher said politically correct language was distortion of the truth.

"If you have to qualify it, it's not correct," she said.

Concluding the delivery of her speech, Baker presented her with university honors.

Thatcher came to Baker for the rededication of a 132-year-old English chapel moved to the campus from Sproxton, England.

Thatcher had special ties to the chapel, because it was where her father, Alfred Roberts, a lay minister, frequently preached to the community near Grantham, England, where she grew up.

The relocation and reconstruction of the chapel was funded by a $1-million gift from R.R. Osborne, an Olathe businessman.

In the ceremony, President Dan Lambert remembered a conversation he had with Osborne.

"Just a few weeks ago, Mr. Osborne and I sat alone in the chapel. It was one of those quiet moments.

"He said, 'Dan, money doesn't mean a thing. It's there, and it's gone, and you have to look at what is left,'" Lambert said.

The chapel was discovered about seven years ago by a Baker professor who was teaching in England.

Then, with the support of the village of Sproxton and British Methodists, Baker purchased and moved the chapel.

Workers began dismantlement in June, and in the fall, Baker received almost 250 crates to rebuild the chapel.

ISSUES

When comparing the environment to economic issues, Hochhauser and Peterson both said knowing the specifics of the issue are important.

On gun control, Peterson and Hochhauser both said they do not support the concealed-carry bill.

"A number of students, as well as my own constituents, have said they don't like the idea of going into a bar knowing anyone in there could have a concealed weapon. There really might be some terrible consequences in that kind of charged atmosphere when people are probably not at their best," Hochhauser said.

Peterson said he favors current law.

Hochhauser said the issue of Kansas Board of Regents' university funding ranks high.

Hochhauser said she has always viewed K-State as the premiere economic resource of this community and said she knew she would have to go battle for K-State.

Peterson said he agreed the regents are a top-priority issue.

He said he believes there's a struggle because most people support grades K-12 wholeheartedly.

Along with being informed of the candidates' stance on important issues, Hochhauser said she thinks a candidate's past record also must be a part of the decision-making process.

She referred to an article in the Aug. 30 issue of the Collegian, in which Student Body Vice-President Aaron Otto commended the Student Senate on the quietest, smoothest-running first meeting he has seen during the four years he has been involved in student government.

Patrick Carney, arts and sciences senator, said last year's Student Senate seemed ineffective because of internal problems.

"I would criticize Mr. Peterson's record as student body president — as a leader," Hochhauser said.

Peterson said he took some strong stances on issues.

"I was fulfilling campaign promises, but in doing so, I upset some people. I feel comfortable about my record. I did what I said I would do," he said.

SCOUTING YOUR OPPONENT

Although Snyder said he has never been privy to inside information, he said he uses the Internet to research opposing teams.

"I get reams of pages of stuff off the Internet," he said. "We take stuff off the Net for every opponent we play, statistics and things. And we read their local newspapers off the Net."

While Snyder uses the Internet to gain information, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics uses the Net to disseminate information. K-State football and basketball are now broadcast worldwide by AudioNet, and information provided on University websites plays a role in recruiting as well as supplying fans with information about the teams.

"Coaches want stuff they can use for recruiting," said Andy Bartlett, sports information intern and athletic department webmaster.

WHEN THE NET TALKS, PEOPLE LISTEN

Although it might be early to judge the influence of the Internet on Wildcat recruiting efforts, K-State has established itself as a sports presence on the Web. AudioNet statistics show Wildcat fans as some of the most avid listeners on the Net.

"I don't remember exactly," Bartlett said, "but we're usually in the top 15. The numbers were a bit down after the Nebraska game, partly because of television and partly because I think they were trying a new server or something, but for the MU game, we were top 15."

The athletic department will continue to experiment with new ways to promote the University on the Web, fans will continue to interact across fiber-optic cables, and sports writers will continue to gather information online.

And as the amount on information dispersed via the Internet increases, the uses for that information will become ever more divergent — and the questions regarding its use ever more difficult.

■ Unregistered party, under-age drinking leads to imposed sanctions.

JEREMY KELLEY
staff reporter

The Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity at K-State has been sanctioned by its national headquarters for actions at an unregistered party Oct. 3.

"The Sigma Phi Epsilon national fraternity has imposed several sanctions on the fraternity," Dirk Daveline, alumni board president of the fraternity, said.

The fraternity is in violation for having an unregistered party, providing open containers of alcoholic beverages and allowing under-age drinking. Daveline said these three items are in violation of the rules set by their national headquarters.

"At this stage, these are standard violations of our risk-management program," Daveline said.

Sig Ep is also being sanctioned for another incident at the same party. A group of women who attended the party went to Lafene Health Center the next day for treatment for excessive sedation, possibly from the drug Rohypnol, the so-called date-rape drug. However, as reported in Tuesday's Collegian, the test results from these women have not been released to the K-State Police because of doctor-patient confidentiality.

In order for police to intervene, the women must agree to sign a medical release stating whether the test results were positive or negative for Rohypnol or a similar drug, Capt. Robert Mellgren of the campus police said.

The Sig Ep fraternity is not being sanctioned for administering Rohypnol, nor has there been proof presented that the drug was at the party.

Daveline said the alumni board and the national fraternity have placed some educational awareness requirements and community-service sanctions on the chapter for the rest of the year.

"They will have to give educational seminars on alcohol to the campus and

Protester disrupts U.N. Day activities

AMY LAGRONE
staff reporter

A protester interrupted Lee School's second annua United Nations Day assembly on Thursday.

Students and faculty gathered in the school's gymnasium at 9 a.m. to celebrate cultural diversity. Many students wore their native costumes and brought souvenirs from other countries. Singing and sign language were also a part of the program.

About 45 minutes into the program, a speaker was interrupted by a middle-aged man. He shouted objections to the United Nations and schools that honor it He said they were supporting communism.

A teacher tried to continue the program and diver the students' attention to her, but the man continued shouting. He was eventually escorted out of the gym by two men from the Education Center.

"We simply asked him to leave," Clark Reinke associate superintendent, said. "He is just very firm in his beliefs."

Lee School celebrates diversity, because it has more than 100 students from other countries. Many of the children live with their parents at K-State's married-student housing, Jardine Terrace Apartments.

Seo-Hyun, who is in third grade, wore a Korean dress to celebrate her heritage. Her parents are originally from Korea, and she lived in Sweden and Canada before coming to the United States.

"I can't wear this dress much, because it gets dirty And it's hard to clean," she said.

After the opening flag ceremony, presented by Cub Scouts, students were asked to yell out their definition of united. Most of them replied by saying, "It's when you work together."

Diversity, peace and love were some of the things discussed throughout the rest of the program. The students sang "It's a Small World," "Let There be Peace on Earth" and "Love in Any Language."

After the souvenir show-and-tell, Joanne Goldstein representative of the Flint Hills Chapter of the United Nations, spoke to the children about the importance of cultural diversity.

"Manhattan has a lot of different cultures," she said "Yet we are all alike. We need to work together to understand each other, and teach others about dignity and respect."

She said if people do those things, they can fulfil their dreams of peace.

Sharon Fincham, a first-grade teacher who was responsible for the assembly, said the program is very important to the school because of the large number of international students. It is a time when the students are featured. Fincham said there would be some follow-up discussions with the students to explain the protest.

"It is important they realize that it's OK to have different opinions and views," she said, "but we need to solve our problems in a peaceful way."

Despite the interruption, students learned about other cultures.

"One of the beautiful things about our country is that we have diversity," Tom Hawk, Education Center's director of staff development and special projects, said

Elementary education majors teach African art lesson with pumpkin props

SCOTT PHILLIPS
staff reporter

Painting pumpkins with creative designs, bright colors and geometric shapes to learn about African art is the lesson K-State's elementary education majors taught at the Wonder Workshop in Manhattan.

As part of the requirements for an elementary education degree from the College of Education, K-State education students are required to take a class called Art for Elementary Schools.

"This class gives students the experience to learn about teaching art and interacting with elementary students in the art classroom," Lynda Andrus, K-State teacher for the class, said. "Not all of these students are art teachers — there are just a lot of schools that will need them to teach art. That's what this class helps teach."

The Wonder Workshop, at 409 Poyntz Ave., serves as the environment for these elementary students. Students from Manhattan who attend the workshop are broken into different clubs and meet at the workshop once a week.

Thursdays are art-club days, and this Thursday, students were learning about African art by painting pumpkins with bright colors and geometric designs.

"I really like red paint," said Andrea Granger, a Manhattan fourth-grader. "I love to paint, but I already learned this stuff about African art in the third grade. This is too easy."

The student teachers for the day were busy keeping paint off each of the children and responding quickly when students needed reassurance their pumpkin was pretty and unique. But overall, these future elementary teachers made it a point for the children to have fun while they learned.

"We design a lesson plan focusing on simple lessons for the children," Beth Pope, junior in elementary education, said. "Today we are teaching about art in Africa with religious shapes, bright colors and cultural differences being our main ideas."

"Basically, we just want them all to have fun," Mark Bloustine, senior in elementary education, said. "They may learn something and maybe even have a different idea on how to decorate the pumpkin for Halloween this year — something not so tra-

Perot rejects Dole's offer, promises to stay in race

ONE VOICE • ONE VOTE

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Suddenly handed the campaign spotlight, Ross Perot on Thursday rejected Bob Dole's entreaty to quit the presidential race and said he was in to the end. Republicans and Democrats alike labeled Dole's move a desperate gambit.

Perot told reporters he would not discuss details of his Wednesday meeting with Dole campaign manager Scott Reed, calling the session "weird and totally inconsequential."

Perot

Perot, in Washington for a National Press Club speech, delivered a scathing indictment of President Clinton's ethics and said Dole and the Republicans also had abused the campaign-finance system and traded favors for contributions.

"If you want this corruption stopped, vote for the Reform Party in 1996," Perot said. Later, he added, "Am I in this for the long haul? Yes. Do I intend to campaign to the bitter end? Yes."

Dole authorized Reed's overture to Perot after a week of internal campaign debate over whether there was any way to shake Clinton's lead in national and critical state polls.

But the GOP nominee was described by aides as furious that word had leaked of what was supposed to be a secret mission.

"A drowning man will grab onto any log," said Texas Reform Party director Bill Walker.

White House press secretary Mike McCurry, asked the administration's response, said, "Mystification."

Campaigning in Florida, Dole admitted he was frustrated by the polls and said testily, "Wake up, America! You're about to do yourselves an injustice if you vote for Bill Clinton. If you want to see this country go down the hill in the Senate allocates funds to team, not as much as initially desired

NICOLE KIRBY
city/government editor

Student Senate allocated $3,758.15 to the Speech Unlimited team Thursday night, despite attempts to give them more.

The team had requested $9,840.

The group, which competes nationally in forensics tournaments, used to receive about $7,000 a year from the Arts and Sciences Council.

Last year, the group was allowed to receive money totaling about $5,700 from both the academic competition teams account and the Arts and Sciences Council although this was a violation of regulations against double-dipping.

This was about 10 percent of Speech Unlimited's budget.

"Speech Unlimited is very unhappy with their allocation, and they have reason to be very much against it because they have had their budget cut two years in a row," Lach Franquemont, arts and sciences senator said.

Student Body Vice President Aaron Otto said because the student activity fee is up for evaluation this year and Senate could put more money in the account the group might not have to deal with budget cuts next year.

"It's the same crap every year," he said.

A series of amendments tried to bring the total up to last year's amount, $2,941.16, from the total recommended by the Allocations Committee.

Because there was only $816.99 left in the academic competition teams account after funding

State Senate candidates agree on most issues, argue about taxes

ISSUES you want addressed

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the seventh part in a series of articles analyzing the issues and candidates that will be on the ballot Nov. 5.

SETH GURSS
staff reporter

The race for Kansas Senate, District 22, won't have many heated debates.

Rep. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, and Ruth Schrum said they agree on the majority of issues, including ones students said were important.

One of their only disagreements centers on whether lower property taxes or higher school funding is more important.

Oleen, who has been in the Senate for eight years, said property taxes and funding need to be monitored closely. She said they both can be successful.

"What my record shows is funding comes first and (then) keeping an eye on the bottom line on property taxes," Oleen said. "So this year we were able to actually increase funding to increase education in this state and lower property taxes."

Schrum said using property taxes for the funding of schools is fine, as long as other taxes, such as sales taxes and income taxes, are also used to help fund education.

This will take the heavy load off property taxes and will allow for tax fairness, she said.

"My proposal is that we take equal amounts from all three, that it not be just property tax, because property tax has been hit pretty hard in this state for a long time," Schrum said.

Another important issue to students is how the Kansas Board of Regents universities rank in importance for funding.

Oleen said as a representative from Manhattan and the surrounding District 22, she thinks she is a direct representative for K-State.

"If I don't represent Kansas State University in the Senate, I don't know who does," Oleen said. "So it is a priority."

She said she feels the regents universities are one of the most important issues concerning District 22 and the rest of the state. Oleen said she does not think

NATION WORLD

• FIREFIGHTERS EXPECT RETURN OF SANTA ANA WINDS. Firefighting planes bombed hot spots and ground crews raced to snuff out embers of wildfires across Southern California on Thursday, anticipating a return of dangerous Santa Ana winds this weekend. Further up the coast, in Big Sur, a week-old fire continued to spread, scorching 2,750 acres of grass, oak and redwoods. Firefighters were counting on a light rain to help them quench the blaze before Saturday.

• LEGIONNAIRES' DISEASE INFECTIONS RISE. Two more Detroit-area residents were confirmed to have been infected with Legionnaires' disease, raising the number of cases to 26 while officials continue searching for the source of the outbreak. Officials Wednesday confirmed two more cases in Oakland County, The Detroit News reported today. The source of the Legionnaires' bacteria has not been found. Health investigators believe the victims lived, worked or passed through a six-square-mile area of Farmington and Farmington Hills, northwest of Detroit.

• KURDISH EVACUEES LEAVE TURKEY FOR UNITED STATES. About 600 Kurds arrived at this U.S. territory on Thursday, bringing the number of refugees to nearly 3,000. Many will eventually be resettled in the mainland United States. The Kurds, most of them members of the CIA-aided Iraqi National Congress, which opposes Saddam Hussein, were evacuated from northern Iraq this week following an offensive by Saddam-allied rebels. After medical and identification checks, the evacuees were put on two planes at a U.S.-run airbase in Turkey and flown to this Pacific island.

• BEEF BAN REMAINS. Boosted by new research linking mad cow disease to a human brain ailment, the European Union said Thursday that its ban on British beef sales would continue until Britain begins a selective cattle slaughter program. Franz Fischler, the EU's farm commissioner said the ban would remain in place until Britain honors a deal, reached at an EU summit in June, to slaughter 147,000 young cattle deemed most at risk for mad cow disease.

• THREATS CLOSE PALESTINIAN AREAS. Israeli troops sealed the West Bank and Gaza Strip today and searched cars at Tel Aviv checkpoints in response to warnings that Palestinian militants were plotting suicide attacks. In a sign of frayed nerves, a Palestinian laborer was wounded in the leg when police opened fire on a van carrying Arab workers after it failed to stop at a checkpoint outside Tel Aviv. The security measures created rush-hour traffic snarls, especially in Tel Aviv, Israel's commercial center. Israeli security officials said they had precise warnings that Islamic Jihad was planning an attack in Israel to avenge the assassination of their leader Fathi Shakaki a year ago in Malta. Israel is widely believed to have had a hand in the killing, though it never claimed responsibility.

CITY STATE

• MAN FAKED MURDER FOR LIFE INSURANCE. A man who drowned in Milford Lake in June committed suicide after arranging for his death to look like a murder, which would have allowed his family to collect life insurance money, an investigation found. Charles Hastings, 56, of Wichita, bought a $300,000 insurance policy the day he died, Geary County Sheriff Bill Deppish said Thursday. No family members were implicated in the department's investigation.

Hastings was reported missing June 26 when his houseboat was found adrift on the lake. His body was recovered three days later. An autopsy showed he drowned. Hastings, a jailer for the Sedgwick County Sheriff's Office, was depressed and suicidal in the 36 hours before his disappearance, Deppish said. Hastings had been told by superiors two days earlier that he was being investigated because of sexual harassment complaints by his co-workers.

The drifting boat, a bullethole in its wall and Hastings' abandoned truck all were staged, Deppish said. The sheriff said Hastings could not swim and was believed to have killed himself by jumping in the lake.

The Samples will not make it to Manhattan next week, but this is no reason to trade in tickets.

Sally Anderson, co-coordinater of Heart for Youth, said she was informed last week that the Samples would be unable to make it because of personal reasons.

"Needless to say, we were very disappointed. We are awfully sorry to all the big Samples fans," Anderson said.

The band was supposed to play with Jars of Clay and Gufs at McCain Auditorium on Wednesday. Jars of Clay played in town last December. The group has accomplished a major feat since its last visit.

"They have gone platinum since they were booked," Anderson said.

Anderson said the agency that coordinates the tour may allow a local or area band to open for the two groups. Bands have submitted their music to see if they are chosen to play.

"The bands have to have their music approved by the agency. At this point in time, all music has been sent off to be listened to. We are waiting for a response. We'll know soon," Anderson said.

The concert will be at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in McCain.

Tickets are still on sale at the McCain Box Office. Prices range from $15 to $18 in advance or $18 at the door. The McCain Box Office phone number is 532-6428.

Journalism professor defines teaching by opening his home for study sessions

J.C. Ashley
staff reporter

David MacFarland, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, and his wife, Charlotte MacFarland, associate professor of speech, live in a grand, 1930s-vintage house on Laramie Street.

The outside is festooned in red brick and white siding. The inside is decorated with antique furniture and framed pictures of wintry mountainous scenes from their recent Colorado sabbatical.

For MacFarland, it is only natural he open his home up to his students.

"Students are why we're here," MacFarland said. "If there's a way we can give a little bit back in the way of hospitality, we will."

CLIF PALMBERG/Collegian
DAVID MACFARLAND, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, has been teaching at K-State since 1973.

His students think the hospitality translates into better communication.

"I think it is great. I've never had any teachers open up their home like this, and it really gives us an advantage to get advice from him," Danielle Teen, senior in journalism and mass communications, said.

A class called Introduction to Television in the late 1970s and early 1980s offered MacFarland his first chance to invite students into his home.

"On occasion during that semester, I'd have the class over to watch certain kinds of specials or news events," MacFarland said.

Because the VCR had not made its appearance in those times, the class watched events as they happened on television.

"Once, we hooked up three TVs side-by-side so we could watch the three networks' coverage of the election-night returns," MacFarland said.

"It was essentially the same story and the same material, but we observed the three from a production standpoint. They all had different styles as far as the set, graphics. Were they more interested in the main anchors or were they showcasing their lesser reporters?" MacFarland said.

TEACHERS who care

Right now, MacFarland calls his class of Concepts of Electronic Media Production to his home every Monday night for dinner and a movie. The movies, MacFarland said, are mentioned in the class's text and help to put into context the principals taught in class.

"People share stories when they're face-to-face, and it's something to sit down and eat together and share a movie together," MacFarland said.

That something has been a team-building experience for some in the class.

"It's really helped bring the class together," Nate Juhl, junior in journalism and mass communications, said. "The class is a stronger unit now for when we work on our studio projects."

All the attention to his students has provided MacFarland with the chance to carry out his definition of teaching.

He said teaching is religious, and good teachers are evangelists for a point of view.

"Good teachers are worried about ethics and morality in their profession the way that a religion is," MacFarland said.

"We're not purveyors of just facts. What's information without interpretation? What is information without analysis? And finally, what is information without a proper understanding of the use of it?" he said.

There is a return on this selflessness. MacFarland would not still be using his home as a classroom-away-from-class without some validity to teaching or his own rewards.

"When we have students over, and the luxury of a small class when you can get to know the students, you can build community," he said.

"It happens to work for us, and we get something out of it," MacFarland said. "If we didn't have students over, we'd probably be throwing parties all the time to have people over."

Family to be honored at football game

Kelly Kiefer
staff reporter

For one K-State student, Family Weekend will be extra-special this year.

Aaron Austin and his mother, Tommy Lou Austin, will be recognized as K-State's 1996 honorary family at halftime of the K-State football game on Saturday.

Chimes junior honorary and the KSU Alumni Association distribute applications for students to nominate their families for the KSU Honorary Family.

In 500-1,000 words, applicants describe the relationship with nominees, their involvement in the community and the encouragement and support of the applicant's education at K-State.

Aaron Austin, senior in music education, wrote the winning entry, covering all aspects of the essay requirements.

"I thought it would be a nice thing to do and a good way to tell her how much I appreciate everything she's done for me since I've been up here," Aaron Austin said. "I wrote about my mom, mentioned how she's been supportive of me since I've been here and how she's been active in the community."

Tommy Lou Austin has received the Garden City Family Crisis Service volunteer of the year award and works with domestic violence and a crisis hotline in the community, Aaron Austin said.

Chimes and the KSU Alumni Association are host to the honorary family during Family Weekend.

Amanda Groce, junior in elementary education, said the family is rewarded with football tickets, hotel accommodations, tickets to a comedy show and an invitation to the Chimes and Alumni Association brunch on Saturday.

Aaron Austin said he and his mother will get to watch the game from seats in the pressbox. "I'm excited about that, because I've always kind of wanted to go up there."

Groce, who is program chair of Chimes, is the honorary family-selection chairperson. She was in charge of retrieving essays from the Office of Student Activities and Services on the deadline and marking out names and names of towns on the essays to allow for an unbiased selection.

"I wasn't really reading them. I was just skimming to make sure I got everything while I was whiting out," Groce said. "I went back and I read (Austin's) after I whited out the rest of the names, because it was so good. It almost made me cry. It was really sweet."

Groce said she and a committee of seven Chimes members read all the essays and narrowed the selection to four.

Groce said Aaron Austin's essay was striking, with a strong argument for his mother. "It just really stood out, the relationship that they had," she said.

The honor of being selected as K-State's honorary family was a surprise to Aaron Austin's mother. "She had no idea that I'd done it," Aaron Austin said.

He planned to reveal the essay eventually, no matter what.

"I told people that even if I didn't get it, I was going to give the essay to my mom so she knew," he said.

"When I called his mom to tell her that they had won, at first she was really confused," Groce said. "Then, when I explained it, she just started crying."

Aaron Austin said he and his mother are expecting two aunts and two cousins to also attend Family Weekend.

Family Weekend explores K-State life

Andrew Francis
staff reporter

The K-State campus will be on display for family and friends of students during Family Weekend, which begins today.

Family Weekend is coordinated by the KSU Alumni Association. It is an opportunity for students to show their families what life is like on the K-State campus.

This weekend students and their families will be able to go on campus tours and participate in activities planned for families.

Amy Button Renz, president of the Alumni Association, said more than 600 families have made reservations to participate in Family Weekend.

"This will be the highest attendance we have ever had," Renz said.

Renz said the biggest challenge for planning family weekend has been providing football tickets to participating families.

"Our athletic department and ticket office have been great to work with to provide as many tickets as possible," Renz said. "But obviously the demand for tickets is greater than what we have available."

Activities begin today, with a pig-roast dinner from 6 to 7:30 p.m. in the K-State Student Union Stateroom South.

The first events Saturday will begin at 9 a.m.

Families will be able to sample insect cuisine at Waters Hall, access the Internet at Nichols Hall and see a chemistry magic show at Willard Hall.

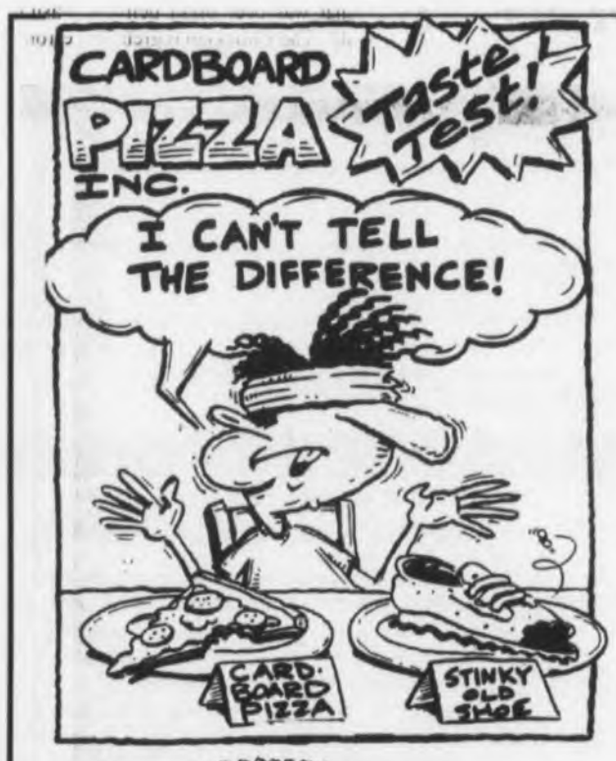
K-State's Center for Basic Cancer Research and the Macdonald Laboratory will also be open for tours.

Families can also tour the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. The museum will open at 10 a.m. on Saturday. Bill North, curator of the museum, said he is excited about Family Weekend.

"People here for the weekend will appreciate the opportunity to come by and look at things," North said. "It will broaden our audience."

Families not attending the football game can take in the scenery of the nearby Konza Prairie.

Saturday activities include the Family Day Post-Game Buffet from 4:30 to 7 p.m. in the Union Ballroom. A comedy show by Greg Fitzsimmons and Vince Champ will begin at 7 p.m. in Forum Hall. Fitzsimmons and Champ have appeared on "The Late Show with David Letterman," as well as other national TV comedy shows.



The K-State Singers and men's and women's glee clubs will perform at 8 p.m. Saturday in McCain Auditorium. Tickets can be purchased at the McCain box office for $6.

Events Sunday include the Wildcat Scramble Golf Tournament at Stagg Hill Golf Course. The nine-hole tournament starts at 9 a.m.

The Union will sponsor a Sunday Brunch from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. in the Bluemont Room.

Planning for Family Weekend began in April. The KSU Alumni Association has sponsored the event since 1991.

"Family Weekend is unique in that the entire university comes together to provide activities for families," Renz said. "We are very proud to be a part of and be a sponsor for Family Weekend."

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

Interrupting school's cultural celebration for U.N. protest was highly inappropri-

There is a time and place for everything.

An assembly of school children is not the appropriate setting for protesting the United Nations, a lesson that Mark Wilson, a local U.N. protester, seems to have missed.

WHY WE CARE

As children at Lee Elementary School celebrated cultural harmony, a man decided to stage a U.N. protest. This was not the time or the place.

As students at Lee School gathered for their second annual United Nations Day Assembly, Wilson interrupted a speaker with shouts of objection to the United Nations and its supporters, saying they supported communism.

The protester was escorted out of the building, and the event went on, but only after the unnecessary, irrelevant interruption.

No matter how one feels about the United Nations, U.N. Day in Manhattan is not the equivalent of a peace summit or the signing of the GATT treaty.

At Lee School, it was supposed to be a day set aside to wear traditional cultural dress and learn about students with different heritages.

Lee School is a diverse environment because many students are the children of international students who are living in Jardine Terrace Apartments.

Included in the program were cultural songs, speakers and sign language in a celebration of cultural diversity. Hardly a hotbed of communist activity by anyone's standards, and certainly not a gathering of folks who can affect the United Nations one way or another at this point.

Political protests can be effective on a local level, but disrupting a school ceremony is not likely to swing many voters or perk up the ears of the United Nation's secretary general.

What it will do is spur indignant news coverage in a cheap attempt to bring an issue to the forefront by violating children's right to learn about other cultures and world peace.

Yes, protesters have a right to be heard and to peaceably assemble.

They did so, Wilson among them, at City Hall during another U.N. Day celebration — this one involving adults and high-school students.

That was the time for effective protest in a public forum. That was a good place to do it.

The gymnasium at Lee School is not the forum. It is not the place.

Separation of church and state restricts freedom of expression

MY VIEW

Jeremy STEPHENS

In a little more than a month, the Christmas season will be upon us again.

People will be shopping for presents, snow will fall and make me wish I were in Colorado instead of Kansas, and a certain kind of tree will suddenly be in demand all over America.

Homes will be decorated with Christmas lights, entire blocks will be lit up as if it were midday, and children will leave out cookies for the jolly old man whom they have no doubt will appear.

Yet while these festivities are going on, some workers will not be allowed to decorate their offices as they wish, or to celebrate the Yuletide spirit as they please.

You might ask, what kind of employer could be heartless enough to restrict employees from celebrating the best time of the year?

The answer might catch you off guard. It's the government.

Some units of government throughout the United States prevent demonstrations of Yuletide spirit on the grounds that it crosses the abyss between church and state.

To many people, this may seem like a logical and well-thought-out policy.

For years, I believed this dogma to be the gospel truth. Yes, it made sense that it was necessary to keep church and state separate.

I never really could put my finger on exactly why it seemed like the best thing to do. But, whenever any kind of discussion came up that involved the government and the church, whoever was the first to say "separation of church and state" always seemed to win.

Looking back, it was sad that five words could win an argument.

For a long time, I believed this phrase was part of the Constitution, because the experts on television would always talk in a way that seemed to indicate it was the law.

However, the phrase separation of church and state does not appear in the Constitution.

In fact, the term did not even come into existence until it appeared in a letter by Thomas Jefferson that was written after 1800.

The Constitution itself was signed on Sept. 17, 1787.

The reason separation of church and state has validity today has to do with a part of the First Amendment that reads, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. ..."

> "The First Amendment was never intended to bring about the removal of the church from the state, but to prevent the state from becoming the church."

This has been interpreted to mean that if the government allows people who work for the government to express their religious beliefs at work, including putting up certain Christmas decorations, they have established a religion.

Although many documents written by the founding fathers indicate that the purpose of the First Amendment was to prevent the government from declaring one official religion, thus making all other religions illegal, this is not the interpretation taken today.

Even though the amendment specifically says "Congress shall make no law," it is now applied to individuals who make no laws.

Other examples include the following:

- A public school in Oregon denied special education needs to a private church school student because of the separation of church and state.
- A public employee in California was told she may not discuss the Bible or pray with other employees during break time on government property.
- A substance-abuse counselor in California was reprimanded for talking to state prisoners about her faith, and told that she could not use any religious references at all while on the job, even in speaking with other employees.

In the final analysis, what is accomplished by this interpretation of the First Amendment?

Not much.

When the government prevents expression by those who do know what they believe and why, they leave a vacuum for those who are looking for answers.

And while I oppose any effort to make a certain religion official, it is not the duty of the government to try to stamp out anyone's expressions or beliefs simply because it concerns spiritual matters.

The fact that this country emerged as the final superpower on this planet is not a function of chance. It is a poignant commentary on what can happen when a country states, "In God we trust."

If we continue with the trend that it is acceptable for government to limit religious expression in this manner, we implant in the hearts and minds of the people that government has the power to do what it wants without restraint, even in regard to God.

The First Amendment was never intended to bring about the removal of the church from the state, but to prevent the state from becoming the church.

Rome fell when Caesar was god.

Learning understand

Stepping out of your comfort zone can help one get a new perspective on things

MY

Rhett HARTMAN

Of my three jobs, tutoring is my favorite. As a friend and a mentor, I have learned much more than I ever taught.

For this reason, I am much more sure of myself and who I am. Teaching is the greatest thing on earth.

As a tutor, I am faced with basically one problem, communication. You'd think it would be easy to explain to someone concepts that are simple to you — it's everything but.

In my efforts to explain standard deviation and program scope, I am retarded by the ineffectiveness of words. All the ideas that race through my head are for me, and not especially applicable for anyone else's head. This is a difficult hurdle to overcome.

When I first learn something, I learn it in my mind in a way that makes sense to me. This "way" is my learning style. There is much to be said about learning styles.

Learning styles are your ways of doing things. The two components of learning are perceiving and processing. And there are only two ways of doing these things.

When you perceive things, you learn them by either watching and listening or by doing. When you process things, you make decisions by feelings or thinking. People choose the learning style that is most comfortable for them.

> "Yet after you learn about another way of doing something ... it reveals the essence of what you are studying."

The problem is that the world doesn't work for one person. In fact, if you are trying to communicate with other people, you may become frustrated because they are not talking in a way you can understand. This only means they are not aware of how you perceive and process ideas.

Becoming aware of these facts of life is absolutely necessary in communication and understanding.

Preferences of right or left hand give you a sense of comfort and make it easy to do things, just like learning styles.

Of course you prefer what is familiar to you, and your preferences are a result of your past experiences. If you've never thought about or experienced the concepts of statistics, a normal distribution is everything but normal.

So confidence gives you the strength to focus on what you are doing and lets you let go of the sometimes irrational fears.

But all of these good things disappear when people move out of this realm of comfort and confidence. As I physically write these words with my left hand, I'm about to cry because of how helpless I feel. I would do anything to stop, but now I'm getting sort of used to it. I can't believe it. I'm sweating.

Now I write with my right hand, and the difference is black and white.

My handwriting, left-handed, looks like a 3-year-old's. In writing with it, I feel like one, too. It is horrible. Because all of my ideas have to be expressed with my unpreferenced and inexperienced hand, all of my ideas are temporarily bottlenecked by my physical writing skill. This is the most unnerving and stranded feeling.

But it is only temporary. I overcame it, even though it's a torturous feeling to know that I could be writing with my right hand.

Yet after you learn about another way of doing something, whether by teaching it or by experiencing it, it reveals the essence of what you are studying. Living in another culture actually teaches you about your own. Having to see everything from a new perspective reveals the merits and faults of the original one.

In writing with my left hand, I had to actually think about what direction to make an S, or which fingers to use when holding my pencil or even how to slant my letters. It forces me to focus on what has always been a habit. It was an experience of both exhilaration and fright.

When I'm helping students and they are not sure of the answer, or themselves, I can ease the pain by expressing ideas in a way they can understand.

This is difficult, because you have to know who they are and this means knowing where they came from.

This is a most unnerving situation for all of us, so why do we go through it?

For a paycheck?

For a degree?

No, the simple answer is learning is a drug and nothing is as remarkable as the feeling of understanding.

Texas A&M alumna said she thinks Wildcat fans were enthusiastic, gracious

Editor,

I'm an Aggie alumna who attended Saturday's game against K-State in College Station, Texas. I wanted to drop a note to tell you how very impressed many of us were with the amazing turnout of K-State fans!

They literally filled their sections of the stadium to overflowing. They were loud, energetic and supportive of their team. But what impressed many other Aggies and me was their conduct after the game: no taunting, no bragging — just lots of good will and cheerful conversations.

Of course, because the Wildcats won, they had reason to be cheerful, but I still found them gracious when they didn't have to be.

I'm looking forward to more games between A&M and K-State. And if the fans I saw in College Station are any indication of K-State spirit and attitude, I'll definitely make the trip to Manhattan. Hopefully, though, we can even things up next time!

Fighting the AIDS war

DARCIE MCCONKEY
staff reporter

The world is fighting a war.

It is a battle against AIDS, the No. 1 killer among 24- to 44-year-olds. Two men are leading an AIDS-education crusade on college campuses around the nation.

Joel Goldman and T.J. Sullivan presented "Friendship in the Age of AIDS" Thursday night as the final part of the Greek 101 series.

> "I couldn't believe my very best friend was HIV-positive. I was like, this shit is not happening to me."
> — T.J. SULLIVAN, AIDS EDUCATOR

Goldman and Sullivan met at Indiana University and began what was to be a lifelong friendship. Both men were actively involved in campus activities and appeared to be average but successful college students.

Goldman, however, made the decision to explore the freedom of college life in negative ways. Five years ago, he noticed he was becoming ill on a regular basis but blamed it on his job travels.

Goldman decided to see his doctor. That visit to his doctor would forever change his life.

"I had an HIV test once, and it had turned out to be negative. I thought I was OK. What I didn't do was take into account that there is a three-week to six-month window period where the virus can lay dormant in your body," he said.

Goldman's doctor confirmed he was HIV-positive.

"It was the worst day of my life. I thought I was dreaming. When I walked to the receptionist's desk, there was a bowl of lollipops. The lollipop was my test because there is no flavor in dreams. I will never forget that taste — cherry. Reality set in. I was someday going to die of AIDS," Goldman said.

His bad judgment in college was the culprit that transmitted the virus, he said.

"I made the mistake of mixing alcohol and sex. When I abused alcohol, I tended to forget my morals and my values and have unsafe sex. I rationalized my actions as being normal and perfectly acceptable. In reality, I didn't know the consequences of my actions. You can't tell if your partner has a disease just by looking," Goldman said.

An estimated 1 million Americans are infected with HIV, Goldman said, and 75 percent of those cases are unaware they are infected with the virus.

"There is no low risk. When you sleep with someone, you sleep with their whole sexual history. People don't think about the exponential factors, and things always come back to haunt you," he said.

Sullivan was devastated when Goldman told him he was HIV-positive.

"I couldn't believe my very best friend was HIV-positive. I was like, this shit is not happening to me. After I hung up the phone, I sat in my office and cried. The shock just swept over me," Sullivan said.

Although it took him time to adjust to the news, Sullivan said he eventually realized he didn't know everything he needed to know.

"There is a lot of ignorance out there. We want young people to look at the consequences of their choices and make better decisions. Right now, I think we are facing this generation's Vietnam," Sullivan said.

There are many myths surrounding AIDS, but Goldman and Sullivan said they are determined to alleviate the most common misconceptions.

"People who think this is a gay disease are wrong. Seventy-five percent of the cases occur in heterosexuals. Sex, injected drugs, blood transfusions and mother-to-child are the only ways to transmit this disease. We must remember we're all in this together. We can't take any lives for granted," Sullivan said.

Meghan McCracken, sophomore in art history, said she was impressed with the presentation.

"They appeared to be more on the level of college students and used humor so we could relate to them. The value of what they had to say was important, because we realized AIDS can happen to anyone," McCracken said.

Committee to discuss health-insurance policy

KARI BROWN

SPEED

▶ Student Health Advisory Board members will be in the K-State Student Union to answer questions from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Oct. 30-31.

The Student Health Advisory Committee is giving students the chance to voice their opinions about the proposed mandatory health-insurance issue.

The committee will be fielding questions and comments about the proposed issue from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., Oct. 30-31, beside the Stateroom in the K-State Student Union.

During that time, information about the policy will be available, and SHAC members will be on hand to hear concerns and answer students questions.

"We want to gather student input on the issue of the mandatory with waiver insurance," said Amy Donahy, SHAC chair and junior in English.

SHAC members are still discussing the issue and are looking for students' input. They will not make a decision until they hear what students want out of a new insurance plan or if they wish to keep the current plan, Donahy said.

Mandatory insurance for K-State students has been proposed as part of the review of the current student health plan, Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene Health Center, said.

Currently, the K-State insurance plan offered by G-M Underwriters Agency gives students a chance to enroll and choose between two plans: a comprehensive plan, which is $987 annually, or the $613 basic plan.

SHAC is reviewing the revised plan submitted by G-M Underwriters. However, it is also accepting bids from other companies.

"We are evaluating what we have now," Zweimiller said.

The new plan will create opportunities for some students. It is expected to bring premiums down and give students a chance to get health insurance, Donahy said.

If accepted as the new K-State plan, the G-M Underwriters policy could cut student insurance rates as much as two-thirds, said Dan Newman, G-M Underwriters Agency representative.

The premiums would be drastically lower. With this insurance plan, students would pay close to $370 per year for the same type of coverage they are getting on the current plan, Newman said.

All students would be included in this plan. During enrollment, students who don't have proof of insurance will be automatically enrolled in the program.

"Maybe it will be better for older students to have the insurance, but I am still covered under my parents' insurance. We should have access to it but not be forced to take it," Carol Harder, sophomore in animal science and industry, said.

If students have proof of health insurance at registration, they would be exempt from taking the insurance, Newman said.

"I don't think that this insurance should be pushed on us," said Christy Manthe, sophomore in agribusiness.

Compared to other colleges, about 25 percent of K-State students would be expected to take the new insurance, Newman said.

Students with questions about the proposed insurance changes should contact SHAC members or leave comments in the Lafene suggestion boxes.

Grades in — defense passes

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

Seven games down and four games to go, possibly five. An over-exuberant fan would say six.

At the mid-way point of the season, if the Wildcats are expecting any honor roll awards, they will be disappointed.

Although the Cats have played three road games, all victories, and have posted a 3-1 record at home, Coach Bill Snyder said he would be hard-pressed to give the team an overall grade.

Instead, he said, he'd rather break it into segments. After breaking it down, the grades are a little easier to hand out.

"I think we've done pretty well defensively," Snyder said.

It has taken staunch defensive stands and exciting defensive plays to lead K-State to its 6-1 record.

In the season's first game, a 21-14 victory against Texas Tech, a play broken up by defensive backs Lamar Chapman and Mario Smith preserved the win.

The ensuing games were trademark K-State defensive contests, with K-State holding Indiana State to only three points while the offense racked up 59.

Cincinnati didn't find it any easier as the Cats' defense shut out the Bearcats, 35-0.

"If you're good on defense," Snyder said after the game, "we have basically a chance every day."

Next up, Rice, at Rice. And again, 34-7. Those were the easy games.

Then Nebraska came calling. The defense held its own for a while, then fell completely apart in a 39-3 Husker win. On to Missouri, a 35-10 Cat rout.

And then, Texas A&M and Kyle Field and the 12th Man. Once again, the defense to the rescue.

Behind 23-20, the Aggies drove to the Cats' 17-yard line on a pass to receiver Albert Connell. Connell was primed for the end zone when cornerback Chris Canty stripped him of the ball. A Smith hit forced Connell away from the ball while Cat linebacker Mark Simoneau pounced on it at the 17. The Aggies were handed only their third loss at home in the 1990s.

The defense, with a few exceptions, has earned itself an A thus far.

The offense, on the other hand, has Snyder worried. The kicking game, too.

"An A or an F is what it boils down to, doesn't it?" Snyder said.

If that's the case, then the offense and the kicking game have earned themselves an F.

"There's an old adage that says something about scoring too quick and making it too easy," Snyder said. "I know our players don't let down, and they don't stop playing hard. But subconsciously, maybe."

Subconsciously the offense might settle for the 20-3 win it could have had against Texas A&M or a quick hit against Texas Tech.

"On the road we've played well into the second half, but haven't been able to put it away," Snyder said. "And maybe we don't throw the ball as accurately as we should. But I could name five or 10 things that need improved."

The kicking game — it's had its problems, too, and perhaps no opponent exploited those problems more than Nebraska.

But, Snyder said, the wind had a lot to do with the kicking game against Nebraska. And the problems against Texas A&M? Those can be attributed to the team itself, Snyder said.

So an overall grade? Snyder said he's not sure he's the right person to ask.

"I never did really well myself."

Sooners rolling in on full throttle

SHANE MCCORMICK
sports writer

After successful road wins over Missouri and Texas A&M, K-State returns Saturday to the friendly confines of Wagner Field to face the Oklahoma Sooners.

The Cats, coming off a big victory over Texas A&M, will look to win their fourth straight game against the 2-4 Sooners.

But records can be deceiving. After starting 0-4, the Sooners traveled to Dallas, where they pulled off an overtime upset against Texas. Using the momentum of that victory, the Sooners traveled to Baylor, upending the Bears 28-24.

"If you look at their first couple of games and their last two, there is a dramatic difference," Coach Bill Snyder said. "Both their offense and defense have gotten tons better since the opening game."

The Sooners have accumulated 400 or more yards in four of the last five games. Last week against Baylor, the Sooners recorded 376 yards.

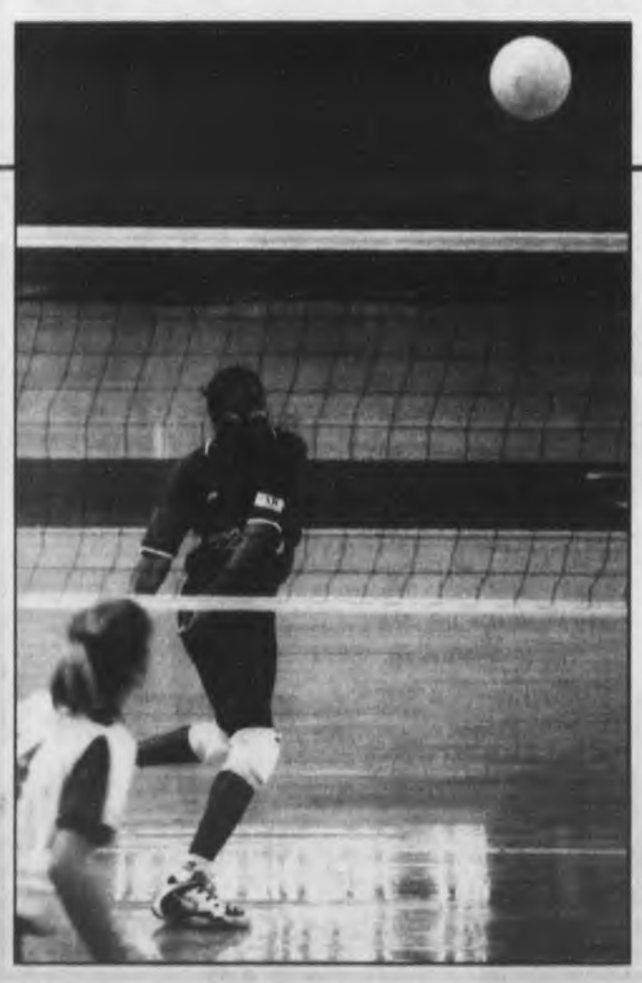
"They have tremendous balance on offense with their running game and their passing game," Snyder said.

In the running department, the Cats can expect to see a couple of backs rotated into the game. Senior James Allen and freshman De'Mond Parker have proven to be a difficult challenge for opposing defenses.

Parker comes into today's game leading the Sooners in rushing, accumulating 725 yards. He is averaging over 120 yards a game. Against San Diego State, Parker rushed for a career-high 244 yards.

"He runs very hard. He has excellent speed and quickness," Snyder said. "He has a great career in front of him."

After getting off to a slow start, Allen has found his groove in recent games.



Unlike past Sooner teams, this one is not just a solid running team. The Sooners have found success through the air this year and are ranked fourth in the conference in passing offense, averaging more than 212 yards a game.

Taking over for sophomore Eric Moore, redshirt freshman Jason Fuente has started to establish himself as a legitimate starting quarterback in this league.

In six games, Fuente has completed 50 percent of his passes and has thrown for eight touchdowns.

"He has just gotten a lot better with each game," Snyder said. "Each game, he is just playing with more and more confidence."

Fuente usually looks for junior tight end Stephen Alexander. Alexander leads the team in receptions and yards, with 19 catches for 361 yards.

Henley suspended

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — KU running back June Henley was suspended from the team Thursday after a drunken-driving arrest.

"There was no resisting arrest. He was cooperative throughout," said Lt. Kevin Harmon, a police spokesman, of Henley's arrest around 2 a.m. Thursday.

Henley, a senior from Columbus, Ohio, is the Big 12's fourth-leading rusher with 131.6 yards per game.

Harmon said Henley was cited for suspicion of operating under the influence, a municipal equivalent of driving under the influence, driving on an expired driver's license and failure to have proof of insurance.

He was held in jail and released on bond of $850.

Coach Glen Mason suspended Henley and said he would not travel with the Jayhawks this weekend to play No. 5 Nebraska, according to a news release.

A police officer pulled Henley over Thursday morning after clocking him driving 52 mph in a 35-mph zone near the campus and close to Henley's home.

"We don't necessarily have to win the games, but we need to play well against good teams."

Wildcats venture south, face No. 9 Texas, A&M

JOHN BERGREN
sports writer

The K-State volleyball team will be on the road this weekend playing Texas and Texas A&M in two of the team's biggest games to date.

"If we want to win the conference, these are both big games for us," Coach Jim Moore said. "They're also important from an NCAA standpoint. We don't necessarily have to win the games, but we need to play well against good teams."

Friday, K-State, 18-3, will play No. 9 Texas, 12-4, a tough, physical team.

"Texas is huge," Moore said. "They're great at the net, and they're probably as good as any team in the nation on the block."

Texas A&M, on the other hand, isn't as physical a team.

"A&M competes as hard as any team in the nation," Moore said. "They are just a really solid team. They're athletic. They're good, and they're relatively big, but they're not overly physical like Texas or Nebraska, but they're just tougher than nails."

The Aggies also bring a No. 10 ranking and a 16-3 overall mark. Texas A&M also is second in the Big 12 with a 7-1 record in conference play.

Moore said this weekend is being looked at as a turning point for the team with six of the next eight games in the season at home.

"This is by far the end of the miserable road trips," Moore said. "We've had a tough row to hoe to this point, and we feel like we've never been at home.

"It's not playing on the road. It's being on the road that's hard. This week we have to go down on Thursday, and we'll be back on Sunday. We have to travel and try to do homework and get caught up. It's tough traveling when you play Friday and Saturday night."

Time to release ailing players, snag diamonds in the rough

We are in week nine of the NFL season and are about halfway done. This is one of the most important times for fantasy football owners. With trade deadlines coming up, owners must decide whether to make that last bold, gutsy trade. They must decide what players to give up on and drop and which ones to take a chance on.

Don't worry my fellow fantasy fanatics, I am here to help you.

If you are looking to trade for players that will provide the boost your team needs for the fantasy championship, these are your top options:

Cris Carter, wide receiver. You might be able to trade Carter for a cheap price right now. Before his bye week last week, Carter had not really produced big fantasy numbers consistently. In seven games, Carter has only produced four touchdowns, which is eighth-best in the NFC. Many owners might be growing tired of waiting for Carter to light it up. Carter is still Warren Moon's favorite target in the red zone. Carter caught on fire during the last half of last year. Look for the same this season.

Shane
MCCORMICK

Drew Bledsoe, quarterback. Bledsoe seems to be making up for the awful fantasy season he had last year. Through seven games, Bledsoe has recorded 11 touchdowns, a mark that is near his season total last year. A big plus for Bledsoe is that he faces the league's easiest schedule this year. Try to grab Bledsoe and make him your franchise quarterback before he really catches on fire.

Jerome Bettis, running back. Bettis has recorded just four touchdowns in seven games, but he has rushed for at least 100 yards in four of his last five games. He is the Steelers' main ball carrier, and they will look to him at the goal line consistently.

Al DelGreco, kicker. Kickers can win fantasy championships. If you don't believe it, then you just better forget about any fantasy championship for your team. If you can consistently get close to double-digit points out of your kicker every week, there's a good chance you will win. The Houston offense is becoming more and more explosive each week. This means more scoring chances for Del Greco, who leads the AFC in points with 68.

The following is a list of players that you should get rid of. First try to trade them to the pitiful owner who still thinks Jeff George is the starting quarterback for the Atlanta Falcons. If you can't, then drop them as quick as you can.

Rodney Hampton, running back. First of all, Hampton plays for a New York team. As Beavis and Butthead would say, "New York teams suck!" He's rushed for more than 400 yards in seven games and has yet to record a single touchdown. Back-up Tyrone Wheatley has a good chance of taking over the running duties in Giants' land.

Marshall Faulk, running back. Here is a player you could still trade and get a productive player for. In seven games, Faulk has recorded just three touchdowns. This is not the mark of a first-round draft choice. Faulk has been battling injuries all year. When he has been in the line-up, he has been less than productive. Once again, Faulk will probably miss this week's game because of an injury. If you trade Faulk now, you should be able to get someone who will at least be in the starting line-up consistently.

Steve Young, quarterback. Some of you might think I am crazy for putting Young on this list, but I have my reasons. Young's groin injury is a lot more serious than people think. It is an injury that will likely be with him the rest of the year. During the first half of last week's game, Young struggled with the injury.

You still can get some good trade value after his three-touchdown game (two passing, one rushing) against the Cincinnati Bengals. Make the trade immediately. Let other owners worry about Young's injury problems.

If you're not looking to trade now, but want to pick up a player or two, here is a short list of players who might still be available:

Keenan McCardell, wide receiver. He has the most receiving yards in the AFC.

Don Beebe, wide receiver. He could be the main man now that Robert Brooks is out.

Jerris McPhail, running back. He is becoming more of a weapon in Miami's offense.

Ted Popson, tight end. Since Brent Jones went down to injury, Popson has recorded five touchdowns in seven games.

There you have it. It is now up to you, the fantasy owner, to pull the gun on those big trades you have been pondering. Go for it. It could make the difference for your team this season.

ditional."

Most of the students were very receptive to painting the pumpkins and making their own geometric shapes like the ones they were shown in different books and illustrations resembling religious ceremonies and different shapes. Others had their own version of beauty.

"I use my own style, because messy art is cool," Darrell Bartlett, Manhattan fourth-grader, said.

"I experiment with every color on the plate. I don't think it is very much like African art, but creating my own style is fun."

"Not me. I want to carve my pumpkin instead, because I can put a candle in it, and it will light up," Allison Perry, Manhattan second-grader, said.

"I don't know. I might paint one, too, so I can have both for Halloween this year."

This is the first year K-State has utilized the Wonder Workshop as part of the fulfillment for elementary education majors.

According to Lynda Andrus, it serves as a fulfillment for what is called DBAE.

"This stands for disciplined-based art education, in which the students as well as read criticism about art and aesthetics to develop into their lesson plan," Andrus said.

The Wonder Workshop began in 1989 and now is serving more than 200 youth and their families per week.

Its main purpose is to allow children to discover science, technology and traditions of different cultures through a hands-on atmosphere.

House of haunts to start Halloween

Manhattan Jaycees create house to raise money

DAVE KATZER
staff reporter

The Manhattan Jaycees are ordinary citizens by day, but every year when the leaves begin to turn, they are transformed into insane, bloodthirsty freaks. However, they do it for a good cause, raising money for their organization by creating a haunted house.

Toby Mills, co-chairperson of the project, said the non-profit organization uses the money to fund various projects. The Jaycees are involved with programs and organizations such as Punt, Pass and Kick, the Muscular Dystrophy Association, and the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

"The majority of the proceeds we raise here will stay in the Manhattan area," Mills said.

The Jaycees also sponsor programs for young adults and children to encourage leadership and community development and teach management skills.

Dean Blattener, president of Manhattan Jaycees, said this is the largest project of the year and raises the most money. Last year, the haunted house earned more than $4,500 and hopes to earn $7,000 this year.

The house of haunts is twice as large as it was last year, and Laurie Averill, district director for Kansas Jaycees, said it is designed to entertain thrill-seekers of any age.

"We have radio communication inside the house, so if there is a little kid or someone bragging about not being scared, we can relay that information inside," Averill said.

Inside, bouncing strobe lights, total darkness and wails of tortured souls engulf the visitor. Patrons walk through a cemetery and crawl through dark halls, dodging creatures that hide in the shadows. There is little risk of cardiac arrest from sheer fright, but the house does provide entertainment that will get almost anyone in the mood for Halloween.

Court looks at single taxpayer discrimination

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Attorneys argued before the Kansas Supreme Court today about whether Kansas discriminates against single taxpayers by making them pay a higher income-tax rate than married couples.

The case could create a significant budget problem for the Legislature when it convenes January, if the court requires the state to make refunds to single taxpayers.

Timothy Dyk of Washington, D.C., representing the state Department of Revenue, said there is a rationale basis for the different tax rates, even if the policy is not perfect.

"There's an imperfect fit between means and ends," he said. "A perfect fit is clearly not required."

However, an attorney for Eric Peden, who brought the lawsuit, said the higher tax rates for single people, which include both those who are divorced and widowed, said Kansas is the only state in the nation with such a policy.

"It appears, your honors, this was done to gin up extra revenue," said Michael Waldeck of Kansas City, Mo.

Under present law, single taxpayers pay 4.4 percent on the first $20,000 of taxable income, 7.5 percent on the next $10,000 and 7.75 percent on income above $30,000.

Married couples filing jointly pay 3.5 percent on the first $30,000 of taxable income, 6.25 percent on the next $30,000 dollars and 6.45 percent on income over $60,000.

Peden, an attorney who formerly lived in Johnson County and now lives in Kansas City, Mo., filed a lawsuit in April 1993 alleging the different tax rates represent unconstitutional discrimination. The present rates started in 1988.

Shawnee County District Judge Matthew Dowd agreed with Peden in September 1994, ruling that the state's income-tax code violates the equal protection clause of the U.S. and state constitutions.

Dowd also certified the case as a class-action lawsuit, which means single taxpayers who filed an income return from 1988 through the present could conceivably receive a refund.

State Supreme Court Justices Kay McFarland and Robert Davis removed themselves from the case because both are single. They were replaced with Court of Appeals Judge Robert Lewis and Richard Wahl of Concordia, a senior district judge.

"We're confident from the standpoint that Kansas is an island out there in its tax code," said Peden after arguments. He said the state could end up refunding as much as $200 million to single taxpayers if the court rules favorably.

Dyk said the the tax policy encourages people to wed, which is an appropriate public policy, and said some people incur more expenses when they become married.

Proper safeguards prevent carbon monoxide poisoning

KELLY KIEFER
staff reporter

Having a headache, feeling fatigued, nauseated or dizzy might be symptoms of something more serious than the flu or a cold. Such symptoms are also the product of carbon monoxide poisoning.

Flu-like symptoms are associated with low levels of CO poisoning. Higher levels can fatally suffocate a victim, because CO is absorbed by the lungs and oxygen intake is blocked.

CO can overcome a victim unexpectedly, because it cannot be seen, smelled or tasted.

"The key to this is education on the part of individuals about proper maintenance of fuel-burning appliances and having appropriate CO-detection devices," said Mac Campbell, building official of the code services office of the Manhattan Fire Department.

Knowledge and awareness can save a possible victim from the clutches of CO poisoning.

Improper ventilation of appliances such as gas or oil furnaces, gas water heaters, gas stoves, refrigerators or dryers can cause emission of CO in a home. Clogged chimneys or the ignition of an automobile in an attached garage are dangers.

Having appliances regularly checked by servicemen is not a common practice for most people. Having alarm devices to warn residents to do so is helpful.

CO detectors can be purchased wherever a smoke detector is available. Hardware stores and discount stores are common retailers. The cost of CO detectors ranges from about $25 to $60.

Some devices use chemicals that change color, some contain metal that reacts with CO when heated, and others that do not sound an alarm may be card-like with a dot that changes color in reaction to CO. However, a non-sounding detection device is useless to a possible victim who is sleeping.

The most effective positioning of alarm-sounding CO detectors is near all sleeping areas. Most victims of CO poisoning are overcome in their sleep.

Skyler Harper, assistant director of K-State Housing and Dining Services, said the residence halls on campus are not equipped with CO-detection devices because halls have steam-generated heating and chilled-water cooling.

"We don't have mechanical equipment that generates carbon monoxide," Harper said. "Every room has either hot water or cold water going through the pipes."

Harper said the heating at Jardine Terrace Apartments is similar, in that there is a steam-operated boiler in each building that generates heat. However, homes at Jardine do have gas stoves.

Students renting apartments or houses benefit from the awareness of CO effects and the option to purchase CO detectors, because there is no code that requires them in housing in Manhattan.

Fire Marshal Donald Francis, of the Manhattan Fire Department, said the department has responded to 33 calls this year.

"We're not finding many false alarms," Francis said. "We usually detect some level of carbon monoxide."

Francis said a hazardous material meter is used to check around gas-burning appliances and exhaust stacks when a CO alarm is responded to in someone's home. If any CO is detected, the fire department calls Kansas Power and Light to check the area also.

Calls can be made directly to KPL or the fire department. KPL has the ability to red-tag appliances and shut them off until repairs are made.

Francis said the instinctive response to a CO alarm is to open up a house. This allows CO to escape and makes problem areas difficult to detect.

Residents should leave a home if they are suffering symptoms.

"If we go to a CO alarm and people there are exhibiting symptoms, we call the Riley County EMS to come check them out," Francis said.

Country dance lessons in the Union Station Sunday

SETH GURSS
staff reporter

Put your cowboy hat on and get ready to do the boot scootin' boogie.

The multicultural committee of the Union Program Council will be offering country-western dance lessons at 7 p.m. every Sunday in Union Station for the next four weeks.

Colette McLemore, the multicultural chairwoman, said the two-step and the waltz are a couple of the dances being taught in the beginners class.

Tina Meek, sophomore in public health and nutrition, is one of the instructors for the class.

She has been training professionally in dance for four years and is an instructor at Kickers Saloon & Grill.

Meek said she teaches more than just the steps to the dances.

"We try to emphasize a lot of style and technique. This is what puts us ahead of most dance places," Meek said.

Chad Roberts, senior in architecture, is also an instructor in the class.

The class costs $10 per person, and a partner is not required. Each class can have a maximum of 20 people.

The multicultural committee will offer an advanced country-western dance class in spring.

Fox News Channel a cheap imitation of CNN

RYAN O'HALLORAN
staff reporter

CNN has new competition.

Let's compare the just-launched Fox News Channel seen locally on channel 10, with the well-established, much-seen CNN.

As ESPN humorist Nick Bakay said, everything does even itself out in the tale of the tape.

In talk, it's CNN's Larry King vs. Bill O'Reilly, who came to FNC from the most moral program on television, "Inside Edition."

On the business beat, CNN's Lou Downs' counterpart is some egomaniac named Neil Cavuto, who comes off simply as a moron.

In the sports world, it's CNN's popular duo of Fred Hickman and Nick Charles against an overmatched Gordie Hershiser, who FNC undoubtedly hired so people would tune in thinking it was Orel Hershiser. A wild pitch, indeed.

And finally, in entertainment, it's the pair of Jim Moret and Lauren Sydney vs. a talking head by the name of Bill McCuddy, who isn't exactly cuddly toward his guests.

Translation: While Fox Network executives think it will take time to overcome CNN, here's some advice for FNC brass — it will never happen.

Several problems are already evident, although FNC has only been on the air since Oct. 7. Its biggest problems include the network's format, the hosts and the guests.

First, some background on the network. Rupert Murdoch owns this venture as well as the regular Fox Network. Murdoch also owns the New York Post, which probably has some of the best sports writers in the country, and the grocery store tabloid, the Star.

From 5 a.m. to 4 p.m. during the week, FNC has 10-minute news updates at the top and bottom of each hour. This is probably the best part of the network, because it rarely repeats information in two consecutive segments. The Foxtoids, flanking the anchor on the left side of the screen, provide interesting information viewers can read, instead of listening to the talking head.

Then for 20 minutes each half-hour, 2:10-2:30 for example, FNC has single-topic shows that include "Fox on Trends," "Fox on Entertainment," "Fox on Crime" and "Fox on Sports," along with several "Fox In Depth" segments.

I tuned into the entertainment and sports segments Wednesday afternoon. Entertainment host McCuddy is flat-out lost. He frequently interrupted his guest with wise-cracks that should be coming from a WIBW-TV anchor, not somebody who's on national television.

The sports anchor, Hershiser, Gordie not Orel, is even worse. His guest last Wednesday made a bigger buffoon of himself than Hershiser. The topic was boxers still fighting past their prime and the guest, who was editor and publisher of some cheap magazine called International Boxing Digest, would hold up the magazine whenever the camera was on him.

Pathetic.

From 4 to 9 p.m., FNC has one-hour programs that are hosted by Cavuto, O'Reilly, Mike Schneider and Catherine Crier.

Cavuto's show is called "The Cavuto Business Report," which shows his ego right there. When he talked to a big wig from Sears, Cavuto constantly tried to liven up the show with smart remarks that led the executive to lose any shred of respect for him right away.

"The O'Reilly Report," is "Inside Edition" all over again. O'Reilly tries to manipulate the guest into saying something he or she doesn't want to say, and then acts innocent when it doesn't happen.

But in the first bright spot for FNC, Schneider and Crier are actually competent.

Schneider, who came to FNC from CBS, is probably best known as the morning news anchor from "Good Morning America" in the early 1990s. He is a solid host as is Crier, who is the best known host on FNC.

Crier, a lawyer before turning to television, was an important player on CNN in the early 1990s before moving to ABC, where she disappeared. Now at FNC, Crier is good, unlike the other FNC hosts.

She lets the guest talk, doesn't cut the guest off, and doesn't constantly give her opinion.

"Hannrity & Colmes" follows Crier at 8 p.m.

FNC has a long way to go. What it should do is add a nightly sports show at 9 p.m. Not at 10 p.m., because it'll get kicked out by ESPN. And what about weather? There's a little on in the morning, but there should be at least one weather update an hour.

Some advice to Murdoch: We all know your NFL and Major League Baseball revenues are paying for this joke, so don't lose those deals.

Washburn University should be added to the regents institutions, though.

"I am not hell-bent to close Washburn," Oleen said.

"That is not a service to our state, but we do not have, in my opinion, the regents universities funded at an adequate level to be able to bring someone else in."

Schrum said she agreed with Oleen and said she thinks Washburn should not be added to the regents system.

She said the addition of Washburn or other colleges in Kansas does not benefit K-State students or the surrounding public.

A third issue concerning students is the importance of the environment when compared with economic issues.

Oleen said there should be a balance with the environment and the economy.

She said the environment cannot be forgotten, even though the economy is very important.

"We need to be sure that we balance them, because we do have the technology to leave things better than what they were, and business needs to assume that responsibility," Oleen said.

Schrum did not address the economy, though, when asked how economic issues compared to the environment.

She said the environment is an important issue facing society. Schrum said dirty water is causing problems all over the state.

"There are very few rivers that we can canoe or do anything on in Kansas anymore because of the problems with, I guess we should say, clean water," Schrum said.

to the community and provide outside support to others in Manhattan," Daveline said.

Daveline, however, would not comment on the specific number of community-service hours, but said it amounted to about 100 hours per person.

Sanctions are pending against the fraternity from the K-State Interfraternity Council for violating its requirements for registering a party.

"They had an unregistered party, and they violated our requirements for registering a party," Brian Ansay, IFC president, said.

"However we cannot reveal our sanctions against them unless they wish to."

Daveline said the duty of the alumni board is assisting the University in further investigation of the violations.

"We want to see that the investigation is complete," Daveline said.

Daveline said the only rules the Sig Eps were in violation of were the ones that dealt with the registering of the party.

Furthermore, Daveline said the rumors about the ingestion of Rohypnol are not true but are still being investigated.

"Make no mistake. We are investigating, and if we find someone to have been involved in an illegal action, they will be expelled," he said.

Daveline said the campus police would be the first to investigate; then the University and then the alumni board would be informed.

"We will be the last people to find out, but I don't think we have to worry about any illegal activity," Daveline said.

SENATE

the agriculture judging teams, Allocation Chair Bret Glendening and Parking and Campus Safety Chair Paul Colwell introduced an amendment.

They proposed the leftover money be given to Speech Unlimited.

The amendment passed, bringing the total allocation to $3,758.15.

Another amendment asked Senate to allow the group to double-dip and requested $2,000 from the Arts and Sciences Council.

"We have regulations ,and we have rules for a reason," Gabe Eckert, agriculture senator, said. "When's it going to stop?"

The amendment failed for lack of a two-thirds vote, and although it was brought up for reconsideration, it failed again.

> "We have regulations, and we have rules for a reason. When's it going to stop?"
> • GABE ECKERT, AGRICULTURE SENATOR

An amendment by Faculty Representative Phil Anderson suggested raising the allocation to $5,758.15 but failed because there was no money left in the academic competition teams account after the first amendment to the bill.

Another amendment by Faculty Representative Bill Muir proposed giving Speech Unlimited $2000 from the foundation account's interest account.

The account was set up with the remainder of the funds for the construction of Holton Hall, he said. The interest on the account is available for Senate to allocate for one-time projects.

Many senators believed Speech Unlimited didn't qualify as a one-time project.

This amendment failed 25-25, with two abstentions.

The entire bill passed, with the total allocation remaining at $3758.15.

Israelis mourn Rabin

JERUSALEM — Mourning the leader who brought peace within reach, Israelis wept and prayed Thursday for Yitzhak Rabin, marking a year since his assassination by a Jewish extremist.

"We are still swimming in a sea of confusion ... looking for a way out," Rabin's grandson said. "Our world has changed. We are no longer the same family, the same people."

In the Tel Aviv square where Rabin was gunned down, thousands lit memorial candles and placed flowers on the pavement. Some embraced. Others hummed "To Cry for You," a ballad that has become an anthem of lost hope, especially for younger Israelis.

"Friend, we miss you," read a banner headline in the Yediot Ahronot newspaper.

The prime minister's assassination occurred Nov. 4, but according to the Hebrew calendar, the anniversary was Thursday.

The sorrow briefly covered up the poisonous divisions in Israel that have deepened since the assassination. But even Thursday's somber ceremonies were not entirely without rancor.

Pointing an accusing finger, Rabin's son Yuval said hard-line Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu must accept some of the blame for creating the hate-filled political climate that led to Rabin's murder.

Assassin Yigal Amir says he shot Rabin to prevent him from trading land God promised the Jews for peace with the Arabs.

Netanyahu remained silent during the graveside memorial at the request of the Rabin family. In a speech to parliament, he did not address accusations that he bears some responsibility for inciting the assassination.

next four years, you vote for Bill Clinton."

But it was Perot who held the campaign's center stage for a day, even though he is mired in single digits in the national polls four years after finishing third with 19 percent of the vote.

Training most of his fire at Clinton, Perot said the Democratic incumbent faced "huge moral, ethical and criminal problems" that could force him from office in a second term.

"We are headed toward a second Watergate," Perot asserted.

Specifically, Perot said Clinton had abused his office by changing U.S. trade policy in return for giant, possibly illegal campaign contributions from foreign interests, and by accepting a $20,000 contribution from a convicted drug dealer who was later invited to a White House reception. The $20,000 was returned, as was some of the other money after being publicized in news reports.

Perot asked, "If I steal your car and give it back, does that make me innocent?"

McCurry, asked about Perot's talk of another Watergate, said, "That's certainly not the president's view of the future, and Ross Perot will have to speak for himself."

He said Clinton would make campaign-finance reform a top priority in the next Congress.

Perot also said it was unethical for Clinton not to rule out pardons for Arkansas associates targeted in the Whitewater investigation.

He said Dole and the Republican Party were guilty of similar offenses. In one case, he suggested federal crop subsidies were steered to a Florida sugar magnate who was an important Dole fund-raiser.

"Is there no honor anymore?" Perot asked.

Carrie Newcomer Band to debut in town; bluesy artist to sing about personal life

SPEED

▶ Tickets for the Carrie Newcomer Band concert at 8 tonight can be bought at the door, the Manhattan Center for the Arts or the Dusty Bookshelf. General admission is $8, and student admission is $6 with ID.

JASON WALLE
staff reporter

Birdhouse Productions will be presenting the Carrie Newcomer Band, a folk-music group at 8 tonight at the Manhattan Center for the Arts.

The Bloomington, Ind., based singer, who toured for years as a solo act, is making her debut tour with the six-piece band. The band, which features a fiddle and mandolin, as well as drums and electric guitar, pushes her folk music to the verge of soft rock, leaving an array of variance to her sound.

Formerly with the folk trio Stone Soup, Newcomer's national debut as a solo artist hit big, with Rolling Stone calling her album "An Angel at my Shoulder," an album "that impresses with the bite of her intelligence, the bluesy warmth of her voice and the support of musicians who give these confessions an edgy propulsion."

Having played alongside such renowned artists as Bonnie Raitt and Bruce Hornsby, Birdhouse Productions is ecstatic to be bringing such an exciting act to Manhattan, David Kamerer, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, said.

Kamerer, a founder of Birdhouse Productions, said its goal is to bring good, up-and-coming artists to Manhattan, and Newcomer without a doubt fits the mold.

"Carrie takes a very warm and nurturing approach to her songs," Kamerer said. "She regards her experiences in life necessary to who she is as a songwriter."

Although having played such venues as Carnegie Hall and the Seattle Stadium, Newcomer has not forgotten her roots.

Playing smaller venues such as coffee houses and small clubs is what she is known best for.

Newcomer's inspiration comes from writing about signposts she has passed throughout her life, Kamerer said.

"It's a kind of music you really have to listen to," Kamerer said.

As legendary as Newcomer is in the folk-singing world, Mitch Strauss, professor of clothing textiles and interiors, and co-founder of Birdhouse Productions, said he believed Newcomer is part of a long thread of excellent artists Birdhouse Productions has been able to attract to Manhattan.

"I think it's great Carrie is coming," said Steve Martini, associate director of recreational services and also a co-founder of Birdhouse Productions.

"She's the caliber of people we like to bring in."

Having the Manhattan Center for the Arts available for this type of performance has become a phenomenal asset to Birdhouse Productions, Martini said.

"The Manhattan Arts Center allows for the audience to become intimately close to the performers as they play, and that's really great," Kamerer said.

"I think the entertainers enjoy it, and I know the audience enjoys it, too," Martini said.

Birdhouse Productions is in its third year of bringing entertainment to Manhattan. The founders of Birdhouse Productions are Kamerer, Strauss, Martini and Gretchen Holden.

Survey reveals trends in teen-age drinking, drug use

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Teen-agers are just as likely to be smoking marijuana in an automobile as drinking a beer, according to a new nationwide survey.

Of the 129,560 students in grades six-through 12 surveyed during the 1995-96 school year by an Atlanta-based anti-drug group, 10.3 percent said they smoke marijuana in a car, and only 8.4 percent said they drink beer in an automobile.

"What this means is that marijuana's role in traffic accidents could be much higher than we know," said Doug Hall, executive director of the Atlanta group PRIDE. "This is a significant new development."

For the overwhelming majority of students, an automobile was not the place to smoke marijuana or drink.

Only 6.4 percent said they drink liquor, and 8.2 percent said they have wine coolers in a car.

Indeed, 74 percent of students said they didn't smoke marijuana at all. And among those who did, a far greater number admitted to doing so at a friend's house than in a car.

Fifty-four percent of the students said they don't drink beer, and 57.1 percent and 61.1 percent, respectively, said they don't consume wine coolers and liquor.

The survey did not break down how many students used more than one form of alcohol, or how many students might have combined alcohol use with smoking marijuana in an automobile or elsewhere.

It also did not ask whether those who admitted smoking marijuana or drinking in a car were passengers or driving at the time.

Among 12th-graders, 20 percent of those surveyed said they smoked marijuana in cars, compared with 16.3 percent who said they drank beer in vehicles.

Hard liquor was consumed in cars by 12.5 percent of 12th-graders surveyed and wine coolers by 9.5 percent.

According to federal statistics, 2,206 youths between the ages of 15 and 20 died in alcohol-related traffic accidents in 1995.

Candidates discuss debt reduction

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the eighth part in a series of articles analyzing the issues and candidates that will be on the ballot Nov. 5.

ONE VOICE ★ ONE VOTE

LILLIAN BEEBE
staff reporter

Art Clack, Libertarian candidate; John Frieden, Democratic candidate; and Jim Ryun, Republican candidate, are focusing on issues key to the battle for the 2nd U.S. Congressional seat.

Clack said cutting government was a good way to cut the deficit.

"The government is a drag on the economy," Clack said. "We have to cut taxes, and we have to cut the deficit."

The government takes 74 percent of the gross national product, he said.

Like Clack, Ryun's deficit-reduction plan includes tax cuts.

"You can balance the budget, take care of the debt with tax reduction," Ryun said.

Cutting taxes generates jobs and stimulates the economy, and it provides for tax relief, because more revenues are being taxed, he said.

Frieden said tax cuts are not the first-choice solution to the deficit.

"Both parties are being irresponsible by making campaign promises to cut everybody's taxes in society," Frieden said.

A reasonable plan to balance the budget is needed, which means making some hard choices, Frieden said.

A common-sense tax-reduction program could be pursued at the same time, he said.

"I do believe our debt is too high, and the deficit has the potential to sap the lifeblood of this country," Frieden said.

All three candidates addressed the topic of health care.

Ryun is opposed to President Clinton's proposed national health-care system.

"I think it would not only bankrupt the economy, it would reduce the number of services available to people in this country," Ryun said.

There is a responsibility to senior citizens to protect Medicare and Medicaid, he said.

There also should be a larger tax break on health-care costs for the self-employed, Ryun said.

Health insurance should travel with people if they lose a job or change jobs, covering them for a grace period, he said.

Clack said government should get out of health care entirely.

"We've got to have government," he said. "But we don't need government doing things people should be doing for themselves."

Taxes should be cut to the point at which people can afford their own health care, Clack said.

Unlike Clack, Frieden said government has a definite place in health care.

"We need to start considering some type of national health-care plan, or we are going to become bankrupted," he said.

Too many people find health insurance unaffordable or unattainable, and that's not a way to save money, Frieden said.

Money is an issue not only in health care but also in education. Without student loans, many students find college unaffordable.

"I believe student loans should be there and should be ensured," Ryun said.

He said he doesn't think the government should pay for college.

"We need to make sure we have avenues for our students to be able to continue their education, and loans are a means of doing that," Ryun said.

Clack said the government already pays for 80 percent of college through taxation, taxing many out of college.

"We want the government to reduce itself so that people have the money to educate themselves and their children," Clack said.

For Frieden, education is the No. 1 priority for the United States.

"We cannot improve education enough," he said.

Students shouldn't be denied access to education because of a lack of funding, he said.

Pell Grants, loans and assistance to help move students forward need to be available, Frieden said.

Along with education, Frieden said he puts the environment high on his list of priorities.

"We only have one environment," Frieden said.

He said he is opposed to the privatization of public lands.

"It's an asset to the public and should be preserved and protected," Frieden said.

Like Frieden, Ryun said he also believes the environment needs to be protected.

"I like clean air and clean water. We need to do what we can to ensure that that will continue on," he said.

Residents want changes in hall board business

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

Bill Luton said he and more than 40 other Moore Hall residents want to see some changes made in the way the Hall Governing Board conducts business.

Specifically, they are unhappy with the way minutes of meetings are written.

"They read like the ramblings of a drug-induced hallucination," Luton, a fifth-year architecture student, said. "We can't find anything in the document."

At the bottom of each set of minutes, the words "we want your suggestions" are written. Suggestions, however, are met with ridicule, Luton said.

"I resent the name-calling that comes out in the document," he said. "At last week's meeting, I was called crazy. That's libel."

Last week, Luton presented the board with a letter signed by more than 40 hall residents asking that the secretary change his style of writing the meeting notes. Specifically, they felt his humorous asides needed to be edited out.

> "They read like the ramblings of a drug-induced hallucination. We can't find anything in the document."
> • BILL LUTON
> FIFTH-YEAR ARCHITECTURE STUDENT

The board members, however, told Luton and his comrades the letter was a petition and therefore forbidden under the Moore Hall constitution. The board is talking about bringing judicial board charges against all those who signed, he said.

"First, they said it was unconstitutional. Then they said it was libelous. Our letter is directly concerned with how the secretary executes his office. The First Amendment covers criticism of a public official. We were not attacking him personally," Luton said.

Luton said the Moore Hall constitution, as it stands according to the board, is null and void.

He said it violates federal law, state law and campus law if, in fact, it does not permit people to petition. The problem is no one has ever really seen the constitution.

"What I caught from today's meeting was that it is not a viewable document. There should be something to touch and read," Tim Lytle, sophomore in horticultural therapy, said.

Board member and chief justice Jason Linenberger proposed changing the format of the minutes. The proposal suggested the minutes be typed up in a bullet format and a separate section for commentary be added at the end.

Linenberger made a motion that was seconded. After 20 minutes of discussion, the motion was voted on but failed to pass.

Luton said he thought the only thing he could do was bring charges with the appropriate overseeing body on campus, the University Activities Board.

Changes considered in engineering college

AMY LAGRONE
staff reporter

College of Engineering faculty met to consider changes involving CIS 110, Introduction to Personal Computing, as well as changes involving other courses Friday.

The changes could have a big influence on both engineering students and those in other departments. One particular change would affect a large number of K-State students.

The proposed change would replace the course with four one-hour courses. Each of the four classes would concentrate on a single division of the original course. This change would be effective in fall 1997.

> We want to make sure that we talk to everyone about it. It should be a cooperative effort.
> • DONALD RATHBONE
> DEAN OF ENGINEERING

The replacement courses would be Introduction to Personal Computing, Introduction to Microcomputer Spreadsheet Applications, Introduction to Microcomputer Database Applications and Introduction to Microcomputer Word Processing Applications.

The rationale behind restructuring CIS 110 is the class should meet the needs of the current student population more effectively.

About 70 faculty members were present. The group voted on 24 course revisions and deletions.

Considerations involving Introduction to Personal Computing have been put on hold. The three-hour course is required by many students on campus. Because of the possibly large effect, the department said it wants to communicate with other colleges on campus before making a permanent change.

"We want to make sure that we talk to everyone about it," Donald Rathbone, dean of engineering, said. "It should be a cooperative effort."

Rathbone said he hopes a decision will be made by Thanksgiving vacation.

The microcomputer applications taught are not interdependent on each other and should be taught separately. Also, many students are arriving at the University with a knowledge of at least one of the applications. By offering the course in separate modules, students are given the opportunity to enroll in only the topics needed.

Dairy Day informs producers of trends, progress

SPEED

▶ Speakers discuss pricing methods, research findings and disease control with more than 200 producers, students and business representatives.

JANN STOUGH
staff reporter

K-State Dairy Day moved producers to Manhattan. Dairy producers from across the state met at CiCo Park on Friday.

"We've had Dairy Day since 1977," said John Shirley, professor in animal science and industry. "We use it to disseminate information to dairy farmers and present K-State research findings from the previous year."

This year's keynote speaker was Robert Cropp, professor of agriculture and applied economics from the University of Wisconsin. Cropp discussed future milk pricing and milk futures contracts.

Cropp said that with the trend to lower fat in dairy products and the 1996 farm bill, pricing changes are coming.

"The federal dairy price-support program will soon be history," Cropp said.

By April 1999, there will be no price support for milk. Cropp said multiple-component pricing is the best answer.

With component pricing, producers get paid for what's in their milk.

"They get paid on a basis of two or more of its components. Whether it's butterfat, protein, solids, non-fat or other solids, it's a more fair system," Cropp said.

This would give dairy farmers proper economic incentive, shift milk's value from fat to skim, please consumers and increase equity, Cropp said.

Cropp then spoke about how producers can help themselves with the price they get for their milk by playing the futures market.

"The purpose of the futures market is to reduce the risk of price change," Cropp said. "No matter if it's up or down, you can forget about the government to provide stability."

Cropp gave a short commodity lesson to help producers understand the futures market but said it is hard to understand the futures market.

Other speakers helped inform producers about today's trends.

John Smith, K-State dairy extension specialist, showed producers how to plan for herd expansion.

"Your milking parlor is the single most expensive facility on your farm," Smith said.

Smith further discussed how to construct or remodel a parlor and how to cut costs.

After Smith, Shirley presented research on bovine leukosis or BLV.

"We have seen a 40- to 50-percent decrease in BLV cows," Shirley said.

Shirley discussed the different modes of transmission and ways the K-State dairy unit has achieved such a decrease.

Milk urea nitrogen was the next topic, presented by Dick Dunham, a K-State dairy extension specialist.

Dunham said farmers can use MUN to increase efficiency and production in dairy herds.

Jeff Stevenson, professor of animal sciences and industry, presented more K-State research on synchronization programs.

Stevenson outlined several different systems to help producers increase conception rates.

A report-of-progress book was compiled by the K-State Agricultural Experiment Station to go more in-depth on the topics the speakers covered.

Producers, students and business representatives made up the 200-person crowd.

John Havens, territory manager for Pfizer, said he had a booth display to support the • ISRAEL, PALESTINIANS MEET IN HEBRON. U.S. envoy Dennis Ross shuttled between Jerusalem and the Palestinians' Gaza Strip headquarters Sunday, trying to finesse a deal to start an overdue Israeli withdrawal from Hebron. Ross and the Israelis reported progress; the Palestinians said substantive differences remain.

• TROOPS' FUTURE IN BOSNIA UNCERTAIN. Neither the Clinton administration nor NATO has decided what's next for U.S. and other troops on duty in Bosnia. Defense Secretary William Perry he hasn't yet received analysis from NATO military advisers studying what should be done in Bosnia as the one-year deadline approaches to withdraw the international force. Almost 15,000 Americans have patrolled Bosnia since last December.

• TWO DEAD IN BUILDING COLLAPSE. A 12-story apartment building in suburban Cairo collapsed Sunday, killing at least two people and injuring 17, police said. The death toll could rise, because police said there were more than 40 apartments in the building and that not all residents were accounted for.

• JEWELL CLEARED IN BOMBING. Federal prosecutors cleared Richard Jewell on Saturday as a suspect in the Olympic park bombing, ending a three-month ordeal that saw the security guard go from hero to suspected terrorist overnight. Jewell was never charged. No one else has been publicly identified as a suspect in the July 27 bombing at Olympic Centennial Park that killed one and injured more than 100.

• GORBACHEV URGES YELTSIN TO RELINQUISH POWER. Ailing Russian President Boris Yeltsin should hand over power now rather than cling to office while the country drifts into chaos, former Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev said Sunday. Gorbachev told BBC-TV interviewer David Frost that Yeltsin, who is preparing for heart bypass surgery, is unable to provide the strong leadership Russia needs. The Russian constitution allows the president to transfer his powers to the prime minister temporarily.

Foundation reports record-setting year

DANA LEHNER
staff reporter

The KSU Foundation received $21.6 million in contributions in 1996. Investments returned 14.75 percent, and the market value of Foundation assets climbed to $163 million.

These announcements and others were part of the 52nd annual business meeting of the Foundation's board of trustees last weekend in the KSU Foundation investment report.

Items on the agenda included the investment report, the election of trustees, the election of Executive Committee members and the Foundation report.

The weekend also included a banquet on Friday evening. Trustee Lee Borck announced K-State alumni were responsible for nearly 45 percent of the Foundation's total gifts, which were worth $9.6 million.

"Over the next 15 to 20 years, the trustees will sit back and say, 'I'm glad we have this money to use on any problems,'" said Jerry Boettcher, chairman of the Foundation Investment Advisory Committee.

Gifts were received from 35,908 donors in all 105 Kansas counties, all 50 states and 131 foreign countries. Also, $3.5 million worth of charitable trusts was established by donors.

New business included the Nominating Committee report. The Nominating Committee is in charge of recommending candidates for positions in the Foundation's committees.

"We review biographical material of all the people who have indicated a desire to be elected or have been nominated by the Nominating Committee," said Alan Bell, chairman of the Nominating Committee. "We then recommend them to trustees who vote on them."

Nine people were elected to the board of trustees. Richard Thiessen and L.W. Stolzer, both of Manhattan, were re-elected as chairman and vice chairman of the Executive Committee.

The Executive Committee comprises 15 members who act on behalf of the board of trustees between the annual meetings. Thiessen and Stolzer will serve for another one-year term.

The Foundation report was given by Gary Hellebust, the Foundation's chief executive officer.

"The fiscal year was very successful and interesting," Hellebust said. "Our financial house is in good shape, and in the last 10 years, we have made significant improvements in our contribution levels."

Hellebust said K-State had a record-setting year in 1996 and is in the top 10 percent nationally of alumni who give annually. K-State is first in the former Big 8 and second in the new Big 12.

The Foundation has $160 million in total managed assets and has the second-lowest cost per dollar raised in the former Big 8.

"Everyone should take a great deal of satisfaction in what we have accomplished," Hellebust said.

Hellebust also said there were a few areas the Foundation needed to work on. According to comparisons with other Big 12 schools, K-State is low in areas of budget, total contributions, development and total Foundation staff.

"There are some key factors limiting the Foundation," Hellebust said. "We are all extremely optimistic. We are going to take risks, have fun, and the Executive Committee is willing to back our ideas. Development is a long-term process, and in some cases, you have to re-invent, and that is what we will do."

Circle R Cattle Co. takes place of Bleachers

staff writer

In the wake of Alan Jackson's country music hit "She's Gone Country," a local bar in Manhattan has done the same. In the Bleachers has gone country.

In the Bleachers, a sports bar in south Manhattan, has recently renovated its interior and reopened its doors as the Circle R Cattle Co.

"The flat truth is that we weren't making enough money with the sports bar, so we are hoping the switch will be beneficial," owner Rheuan Creason said.

Creason, who purchased In the Bleachers in late May, said she made the change because she felt she was not attracting very many people.

"We got our fair share of people in here on gamedays," Creason said. "But it never produced enough profit."

The new bar has the same owner, but a different general manager. The new general manager, Jim Spillman, said he thought the change would attract more people.

"There are not very many big country bars in Manhattan," Spillman said. "We offer a big dance floor, and hopefully that will draw crowds."

The new country bar features an oak dance floor, a stage for live performances and a disc-jockey booth. Creason kept a big-screen television, which was in an eastern room, because it was an asset to the bar on weekends.

"We are still going to have the NFL package on Sundays and Mondays," she said. "That still draws a lot of people."

The new bar will be host to live bands every weekend starting this weekend with the band New West. Circle R will have a DJ every Wednesday and feature $1 domestic longnecks.

Creason said she did not think the bar was at a disadvantage because it was far away from a bar-populated Aggieville.

"Aggieville serves its purpose. People drink there and then go home, and that's great," Creason said. "But I think there are still enough country people out there who will come."

EDITOR: SERA TANK 532-0730 (KAROLYI@KSU.EDU) MONDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1996 PAGE 4

IN OUR OPINION

Senate should follow up on the money it allocates to help fund student groups

Every semester, Student Senate goes through the same allocations process for student groups, and every year, money is needlessly tied up.

Senate allocates this money, your money from the student activity fee, for projects such as speakers, cultural festivals and membership drives from a reserves account. However, Senate rarely, if ever, follows through to see if this money is actually spent.

WHY WE CARE

Student groups who ask Senate for funds, but don't follow through on projects take money from those groups who really need it.

Granted, there is no way for a campus group to spend the money on other projects than those specifically approved by Senate, but there is also no incentive to spend the money at all. Campus groups can — and do — ask for thousands of dollars a year for projects that never materialize.

This leftover money is then incorporated back into the reserves account to be spent in the same process next year.

The tradeoff to this system is that campus culture suffers from deadbeat groups that don't follow through with their programming plans, leaving money tied up in false allocations instead of being put to better use.

The executive branch project of installing more campus video cameras could easily be funded with this idle money.

Perhaps this money, which numbers in the tens of thousands, could be used to substantiate the academic competition teams account, which hasn't had near the amount of money necessary to fund both the agriculture competition teams or Speech Unlimited.

If Senate wants student money spent effectively, it would enhance this system by holding these groups to their word.

Senate, in its committee process, could prepare funding/spending histories on groups that could be used to decide whether a group has a responsible allocations record.

Groups who, for example, for the past three years have been allocated money and never spent it could be passed over for more worthwhile groups.

This would give the groups an incentive to build their credibility by actually following through on their plans.

Many of these groups change leadership every year, so this aspect should also be considered.

Senate should also revive its liaison structure where senators personally meet with campus groups to ensure they understand the allocation process and have plans to put their allocations to good use.

If Senate isn't willing to follow up and follow through, it should not be surprised groups are upset about underfunding.

Reader says she disagrees with editorial board's opinion on raising water cost

Editor,

I regularly read the Collegian and generally understand and appreciate the opinions expressed. However, I must say I was shocked by the complaints presented regarding the proposed increase in water cost. I am a Wichita State University doctoral student interning at K-State for one year. Thus, I am also a transient. However, I strongly disagree with the opinions and arguments presented. The tone of the editorial struck me as naive and childish.

A college student has entered the adult world. If we wish to have the benefit of streets, sewers and water drainage, we must now expect to pay for these services. As adolescents, our parents generally supplied our basic needs. Can we expect the city of Manhattan to now be a parent to all the college students and not hold us to our share of responsibility for maintaining the town we live in? Our parent's taxes are irrelevant — we don't live with them anymore. Since my husband and I own a home in Wichita, we actually pay taxes in two places, but we accept this as the cost of maintaining two households. While I may only live here for a year, for that year, this is my community.

An increase — one that will likely be less than $1 a month, I might add — fairly spreads the cost of a needed service. I'm not convinced by a landlord concerned about his business. Landlords in Manhattan generally receive a higher rent than the same place would bring in Wichita, and if well-maintained, apartments rarely remain vacant. Moreover, I'm certainly not convinced that this increase would unfairly target students. If that was the intent, an alcohol tax would accomplish that end much more successfully. Students simply have to pay their fair share along with everyone else.

Nature vs. Nurture

Despite being raised equally, columnist's children are as different as night and day

MY

Mary Renee SMITH

Someone must have kidnapped one of my children and replaced him with the spawn of the inhabitant of some far-off planet.

Problem is, I can't tell which one was kidnapped.

Two male children born of the same parents and raised in the same household should not be as different as my children are.

These two boys are as different as night and day.

Until I had children of my own, I was convinced that most of who we are is our environment.

Sure, a certain amount of our lives is our genetic make-up. The color of our eyes, our height and other physical things can determine certain things about our personalities. But the really good stuff is all about where and how we were raised.

I was so wrong.

I have two boys ages 5 and 7. They have the same mommy and daddy. They have grown up in the same household all their lives. We, the parents, have tried hard to make sure the boys received equal treatment.

Some people say I had taken the equal thing a bit beyond the normal limit.

When the boys were younger, I would buy them the same outfits in different colors. I bought two of everything. Strangers in stores would ask if the boys were twins.

This morning, the vast differences in their personalities slapped me in the face.

Mornings are not my favorite time of the day. Getting two boys out of bed, dressed, teeth brushed, backpacks packed, lunch tickets together and out the door to school is a — the nice word is — challenge.

BILL KRAAI/Collegian

This morning was the worst.

We all overslept. I told the boys to pick out their own clothes while I got dressed. As the two of them wandered in the bathroom to brush their teeth, the alien-abduction theory came to mind.

Thomas, the 7-year-old, was wearing black sweatpants and a red T-shirt.

OK, but the shirt was about two inches too short so you could see the red band on his Spiderman underwear sticking up over the waistband of his pants. After much argument, he did change his shirt.

Ethan, the other one, was wearing cream-colored pants, kind of like Dockers, and a new Hunchback of Notre Dame shirt. He was standing in front of the mirror, apparently checking to be sure the pant legs were long enough. I noticed the dark socks that matched his shirt peeking out from below his pants.

They brushed their teeth and headed off to the living room for shoes and bags.

Thomas picked out a pair of worn-out, dirty, slip-on tennis shoes. One leg of his sweatpants was bunched up over his sock. He noticed it and didn't seem to care.

Ethan dug to the bottom of the pile of shoes. He finally found a pair of brown, lace-up loafer-type shoes.

I watched all this in awe.

What did I do differently?

I was equally anal-retentive about the dress of each child as babies. I had the little baby hangers. I bought the matching socks for each outfit.

What happened between then and now to make them into such different individuals?

It isn't just the fashion-sense thing.

Thomas has a great sense of humor. Thomas and my boyfriend read "Dilbert" together. Thomas is the class clown. He tells the best jokes I have ever heard from a second-grader. Thomas even makes up new second-grade jokes, and they're funny.

Ethan, on the other hand, is humor-impaired. When Thomas laughs at something, Ethan stares at him as if he has some strange disease.

I am glad they are different people. I love them both.

They have reached the age where their individual personalities are beginning to shine through.

Being a parent has changed how I view so many theories.

Maybe our genes play a bigger role in who we are than I thought.

New columnist spares political correctness when expressing opinions

MY

Roopa SWAMINATHAN

Look before you leap?

Oh, no.

Reckless?

Hell, yeah.

That's me.

"How could you do it? How could you?"

Friends and acquaintances looked at me, pointed fingers at me, gazed accusingly and shook their heads in shame, disappointment, anger and fury.

This is not a melodrama, folks. This happened to me and is still happening to me. All because of a letter I wrote to the Collegian. A letter I was told people wouldn't read anyway.

I was misled, buddy.

All the way.

Suckered into blissful nonchalance, I dashed off a letter to the Collegian and stirred up a hornet's nest in the process.

Just when I thought that people have better things to do than I have, and just when I was counting on everyone to not read my letter, they did.

And worse, responded.

To what, you wonder?

Well, for starters, I said things that were politically incorrect, and I said some home truths I felt needed to be told. I took on another columnist's column word for word and vented my fury against a whole race unilaterally. I spoke about race relations and ethnicity on behalf of all the minorities here at K-State.

I was typically me — honest, forthright and blunt. I was quite the heroine for a few people, but I became a big-time villain for the majority of those who read the letter.

Talking about racism, classism and sexism is not easy for me or others.

They are topics most of us feel very strongly about. So strong are these feelings that we sometimes tend to overlook them.

We pretend problems don't exist so they'll go away.

Well, guess what? I wanted to change that.

I was sick and tired of people writing diplomatic, sugary-sweet and nice articles about racism, ethnicity and gender wars or others blaming everyone but themselves for the divided world we live in.

I was sick of hearing a momentary nod of approval, a split-second sound of sympathy from readers, if any, who then returned to their normal life again, back to Aggieville, back to status quo.

I wanted to change that.

The above topics are serious and important. Positively or negatively, people should at least respond to them — at an instinctive, gut level. And responses don't come from sugar-coating ideas with saccharine-sounding adjectives.

I set an agenda for myself and decided a change in attitude was in order.

And took on so many people in the bargain.

Was it worth it?

I think so. I know so.

Of course, not once did I forget the generosity shown by members of a predominantly white faculty at the School of Journalism and Mass Communications to international students, and how they helped us learn and adapt to a new country and its culture.

The faculty members still take me out for groceries (I don't have a car), and the most stimulating conversations we have had on minority issues and other topics happened between grabbing milk and bread at the store.

That's not counting some of my wonderful white friends at K-State who have worn pajamas on stage ... all in the name of friendship and unity and culture. (This was for a fashion show that I organized for the Indian Student's Association's festival.)

I had the most amazingly honest discussion with my three white roommates some time back.

I genuinely believe that we have reached a new stage in our understanding and respect of each other.

Hell ... I was taking on all these wonderful people when I wrote a letter generalizing the entire white race as being uninterested and indifferent to minority issues. But then, I cannot be diplomatic to save my life.

I ruffled a few feathers.

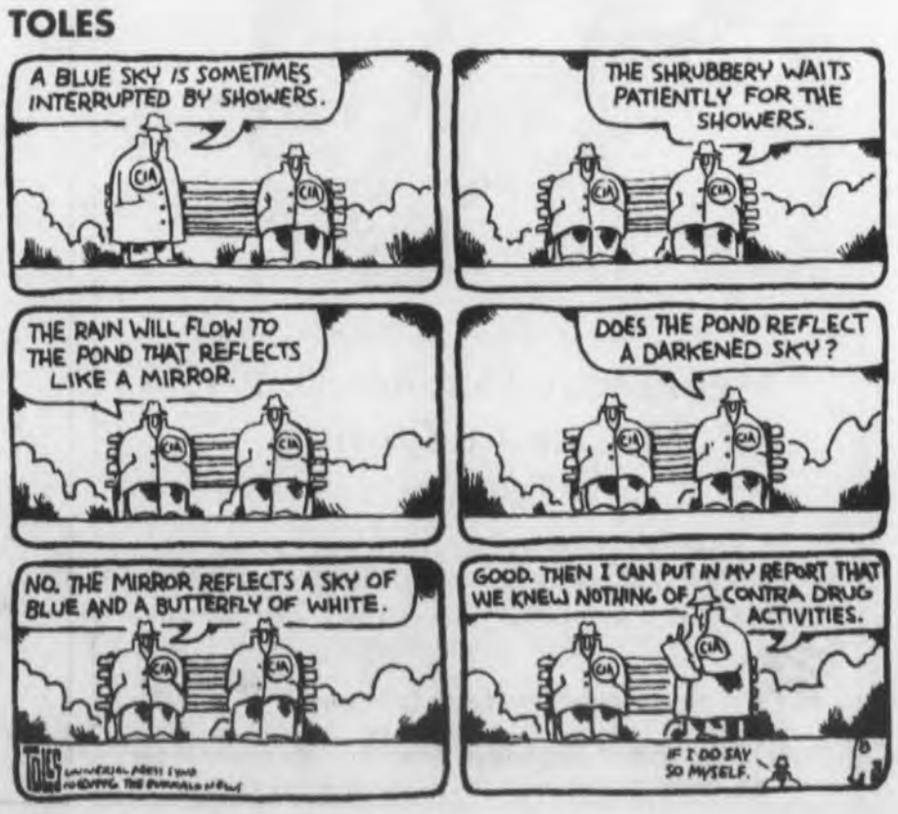
But I am not apologizing for that, either. I genuinely believe I woke most people who read the letter from their slumber.

I woke them up from their indifference and their apathy. I realized more than ever the joy and pain of being different.

I am still learning and discovering about other people and other cultures, as I want them to discover me and others like me.

I want them to discover that there is a life beyond Aggieville, beyond football games and beyond the blonds who have blue eyes.

And as an international student, I hope I will bring this different perspective and different flavor to my columns in the Collegian.



Hate me or love me ... I'll make sure you are not indifferent to me.

Welcome to my world.

Speaker encourages voters to learn issues

Debbie Hollis

Leadership is about education and raising questions about issues and what people have in common, Ester Valladolid-Wolf said during her talk to a group of 15 students, faculty and administrators Friday afternoon.

"We brought in Ester, because it's Hispanic Heritage Month and she is a leader in Kansas," said Wilfrido Torres, junior in political science and president of Hispanic American Leadership Organization.

Valladolid-Wolf, former Kansas state secretary on aging, outlined the Latino Vote USA 1996 campaign.

The nonpartisan campaign's main goals are to recruit, organize and train grassroots volunteers, register and educate 1 million new voters, and turn out at least 5 million voters on election day.

Students said they understood her message that leadership and power are in voting.

"I'm going to try and get out and tell students to vote," said Billy Freeman, sophomore in criminal justice and American ethnic studies. "We need to get our voices out more often."

Students appreciated Valladolid-Wolf's list of 17 issues to motivate voting.

"I liked the way she summed up the issues that have been thrown around, issues Hispanics should be aware of," Torres said.

Valladolid-Wolf gave a brief statement on each issue and the possible directions that lie ahead, depending on the November election.

"Education is the biggest problem," she said.

Head Start, an educational program for preschoolers, is threatened by budget cuts.

"Our kindergarten children are at age 3 developmentally in education," Valladolid-Wolf said. "We need Head Start to continue to help our children play catch-up."

> "Hispanics are not about speaking Spanish or English. It's about speaking both Spanish and English and maybe something else, because that's what we are coming to globally."
> • WILFRIDO TORRES
> PRESIDENT OF HALO

Bilingual education is also important, she said.

"It's not that we won't teach our children in English. It's that they need education available in their native languages to help them not fall behind," she said.

Election ballots should also be bilingual, Valladolid-Wolf said. "We want them to be able to think and vote without being scared. Bilingual ballots will help," she said.

Torres agreed with her on this position.

"Hispanics are not about speaking Spanish or English. It's about speaking both Spanish and English and maybe something else, because that's what we are coming to globally," he said.

Whew!

Oklahoma makes 4th-quarter comeback, but Wildcats hang on for 42-35 victory.

SHANE MCCORMICK
contributing writer

Thank goodness for the K-State offense.

\Much of the season, the Wildcat offense has struggled, while the defense has been there to bail the team out. The roles were reversed Saturday in a 42-35 victory against the Oklahoma Sooners.

At the 2:51 mark of the third quarter, quarterback Brian Kavanagh connected with wide receiver Andre Anderson for a 29-yard touchdown pass. With the extra point, the Cats increased their lead to 42-14.

The Cats were on their way to another blowout over the Sooners, just like last season. Or so it seemed.

From that point, one team began playing to win, and the other began playing not to lose.

With 12:28 remaining in the fourth quarter, Sooner quarterback Eric Moore hit wide receiver Michael McDaniel for a 40-yard touchdown pass. Moore came into the game to replace starting quarterback Justin Fuente, who was struggling against the Cat defense.

The Moore-McDaniel duo hooked up again for a 26-yard touchdown pass with 8:12 left in the game. Oklahoma sliced the Cats' lead to 42-28.

After the Cats went three and out on the following series, punter James Garcia booted a 48-yard punt against the wind to put the Sooners back at their own 39-yard line.

But on the Sooners' first play, Eric Moore silenced 43,815 people, hooking up with wide receiver Jarrail Jackson on a 43-yard pass to put the Sooners on the Cats' 18-yard line. Seven plays later, the Cats' secondary was defeated once again on a 4-yard touchdown pass from Moore to Mo Little. The Sooners were within seven, 42-35.

"After we went up 42-14, the floodgates just started to open up," co-defensive coordinator Mike Stoops said.

Coach Bill Snyder shared the same sentiments.

"The dam just broke," he said. "Moore was doing a nice job of throwing the ball all over the place, and their whole team had the confidence that they could come back."

The Cats gained a first down on their next possession. But Kavanagh was sacked on a third-and-6 by Sooner linebacker Tyrell Peters.

After a 34-yard punt by Garcia, the Sooners took over at Oklahoma's 40-yard line with 1:54 left in the game. The Sooners had a chance to tie the game.

But Sooner dreams were erased on the next play when cornerback Chris Canty intercepted Moore, preserving the K-State win.

"They ran a boot, a play that they had been killing us with the second half," Canty said. "I saw the quarterback scrambling and throw the ball. I just broke on the ball and made the play."

Despite his big play, Canty said he was not pleased with the defensive performance shown by the Cats.

"I have to honestly say that our defense stunk up the place today," he said.

Overshadowed by the defensive breakdown were the performances of Kavanagh and wide receiver Kevin Lockett.

Kavanagh connected on 27 of 38 passes for a career-high 349 yards and four touchdowns. Was it the best game Kavanagh has ever played?

"For three quarters, it was," Kavanagh said. "We had an opportunity to blow that game away, and we didn't."

Lockett hauled in 12 catches for 157 yards. Both totals were career highs for the senior from Tulsa.

BRIAN KAVANAGH, quarterback, rips off a pass while on the run during Saturday's game against the University of Oklahoma at KSU Stadium. Kavanagh had a career day against the Sooners, completing 27 of 38 passes for 349 yards, four touchdowns and no interceptions.

Brian Kavanagh has arrived.

After a relatively inconsistent season to date, the senior Wildcat quarterback led the K-State offensive air attack to a 42-35 victory against Oklahoma on Saturday.

It was Kavanagh's best game of the season, completing a career-high 27 of 38 passes for 349 yards.

He also threw for four touchdowns, tying a K-State record, bringing back memories of his performance in last year's Holiday Bowl. Kavanagh threw for four touchdowns in that game as well.

"Overall, he was just very consistent," Coach Bill Snyder said.

"There wasn't any phase of his game, I think, that was any more important than anything else."

Kavanagh was sacked just three times. With the exception of a few offensive-line breakdowns and a miscue on a snap, Kavanagh had an adequate amount of time to find open receivers all day.

"It's not just me," Kavanagh said. "My offensive line just played their hearts out. They had a great game."

Kavanagh spread the wealth to six different receivers, all of whom had at least two catches — and all of whom seemed to find holes in the Sooner secondary.

Junior Andre Anderson, who has established himself as K-State's No. 2 receiver, grabbed four passes for 79 yards.

Running back Mike Lawrence showed the ability to catch passes out of the backfield, with five receptions for 50 yards.

Tight ends Jarrett Grosdidier and Justin Swift each contributed with two catches each.

"When the ball can go anywhere on the field, then you can't just key on Kevin Lockett," Kavanagh said. "We have good receivers, and they get themselves open. When everyone does that, it makes it really easy on me."

Lockett had one of the biggest days in his decorated K-State career, catching 12 passes for 157 yards and a touchdown, numbers that could be attributed to the Oklahoma defense.

"Kevin's going to get open," Kavanagh said. "The schemes they were giving us allowed Kevin to get open."

For an offense that has had trouble moving the ball this year, the Wildcat unit opened some eyes Saturday, with little trouble for most of the game.

"We just have to go out and execute. We haven't done it for four quarters, and today we did it for three," Kavanagh said.

Kavanagh showed the ability Saturday to put up big numbers, as well as make smart decisions.

Cornerback Chris Canty said Kavanagh is getting hot at the right time.

"Now that it's come down to the crunch, I'm happy he's playing the way he is," Canty said. "He's doing some great things for our team."

Former Cat re-enrolls at K-State

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

Former Wildcat basketball standout and all-American Rolando Blackman, a 13-year NBA veteran, is back at K-State, finishing his degree.

"After 15 years of playing basketball, I've taken a year away so I can come back to finish my degree in social sciences," Blackman said.

Blackman, who played under Coach Jack Hartman from 1977 to 1981, still ranks as one of the greatest players in K-State history. His 1,844 career points rank him second in the Wildcat record books, and he's third in career assists.

His game-ending 17-foot jump shot against No. 2-ranked and top-seeded Oregon State in the second round of the NCAA tournament gave the Cats one of the biggest wins in the program's history.

Blackman was a unanimous selection to the all-Big 8 team three times, including his selection as the Big 8 Player of the Year as a junior in 1980.

Although the United States boycotted the 1980 Olympics, Blackman was slated to be a starter for the U.S. team.

The NBA's Dallas Mavericks selected Blackman with the ninth pick in 1981, where he helped lead the team to the Western Conference finals in 1985 and was selected as an NBA All-Star four times.

Blackman was traded to the New York Knicks in 1991, where he played on the 1994 squad that lost to the Houston Rockets in the NBA finals.

After that season, Blackman played for professional teams in Athens, Greece, and Milan, Italy. Blackman had planned to play in France this season but chose to complete his education instead.

Cats slide with losses to Texas, Texas A&M

JOHN BERGGREN
sports writer

The K-State volleyball team, in one of its greatest seasons ever, took a step back this weekend, losing games to No. 9 Texas and No. 10 Texas A&M. The losses dropped the Wildcats to 18-5 on the season, 6-4 in Big 12 Conference play.

K-State fell to the Aggies in straight games Friday, 15-11, 15-2, 15-13.

"They were very good," Coach Jim Moore said. "But there was not one time that we played well all weekend. We played poorly. We didn't do anything in particular."

Saturday, Texas played intensely against the Wildcats, winning in three straight, 15-4, 15-8, 15-11.

"Texas exerted a lot of pressure on us," Moore said. "They forced us to execute on certain plays, and we didn't do it."

The weekend's losses appear to be a case of the Cats' being overanxious, Moore said.

"I think it was a case of us wanting it too bad," Moore said. "Experience is the best tool for getting over that in the world."

Despite the losses, Moore said the team is holding together pretty well.

"I think the girls are doing OK," Moore said.

> VOLLEYBALL COACH

"We took all of Sunday off. I can't speak for the girls, but I'm sick and tired of being on the road. We knew what the schedule was going to be like coming into the season.

"Even at 6-4 in the conference, there is no reason to panic," Moore said. "We just have to make sure we don't make the same silly, dumb mistakes. The biggest thing is that we get things back on track this weekend."

Two bright spots did come out of the weekend when two players moved up on the all-time charts.

Senior setter Devon Ryning is now first on the all-time assists list with 3,175, surpassing Renee Whitney.

Senior middle-blocker Kate DeClerk also climbed to sixth on the all-time kills list with 1,009 career kills.

Countdown to tipoff

▪ Men's team entertains fans with intrasquad scrimmage.

JON BALMER
sports writer

With a new wood floor under its feet and an anxious crowd of fans looking on, the K-State men's basketball team provided an open-house scrimmage Saturday, giving fans an unpolished preview of the 1996-97 Wildcats.

The first quarter featured a lot of turnovers and missed buckets, but the crowd quickly became electrified after an Alley Oop dunk by Mark Young from Duane Davis.

The tempo was stepped up in the second quarter, resulting in a lot more offense.

While Coach Tom Asbury looked on from the sidelines, three-pointers began to fall. Aaron Swartzendruber, Davis, Shawn Rhodes and Josh Reid each connected from downtown.

In the final two quarters, the defensive pressure was turned up as both sides scrapped for baskets. On the final play of the third quarter, Gerald Eaker blocked Marcus McCullough, preserving a one-point victory for Team White. In the shortened fourth, more pressure was applied, and Young's steal and dunk as the buzzer sounded brought another one-point win to Team White.

"Conditioning was obviously a factor," Asbury said. "Overall, though, I was pleased with our effort."

When asked who needed to take charge, Asbury listed four names.

"Young, Swartzendruber and (Ayome) May have all gotten better offensively, and Gerald has improved his game as well," Asbury said. "They all need to assume responsibility and lead us."

With the first big public scrimmage out of the way, the Cats now look forward to Thursday's Fright Night, an event that will feature more intrasquad battles.

"Our defense is ahead at this point, but when our offense kicks in, it should be better than last year," Asbury said. "We've got a lot of young guys still adjusting their play, but I like this year's team."

AARON SWARTZENDRUBER breaks away from the cluttered lane with a steal during the intrasquad scrimmage Saturday morning at Bramlage Coliseum.

Newcomer hits Manhattan

staff writer

The Manhattan Center for the Arts filled with a giddy nostalgia when the storytelling folk twang of the Carrie Newcomer Band performed Friday night as a part of Birdhouse Production's acoustic fall series.

This is an unmistakably happy band projecting a reflective wit and sentimental curiosity that illuminated the ordinary with humor and irony.

Carrie Newcomer, lead vocalist, was radiant, translating life to poetry and simultaneously radiating a wisdom beyond her age, as well as a free-spiritedness of youth.

Rich with stories and ornery with inhibition, she mastered the art of making all of the audience members feel as if she were speaking directly to them.

It was almost as if she were speaking to the audience from inside themselves.

The band visited Kansas for the first time during its tour to promote the release of "My Father's Only Son," her fourth release on Philo Records.

A prolific sculptor of language and song, Newcomer recorded "Visions and Dreams" on Philo Records in 1995 and "An Angel On My Shoulder" in 1994, also on Philo Records.

"Philo-Rounder has one breakout artist, Alison Krauss, and I think (Newcomer) might be the next. She certainly has the potential to be the next breakout artist," David Kamerer, founder of Birdhouse, said.

Newcomer has a talent for extracting the positive, honest and spiritual side of life from the cynical and bitter preoccupations of the world, Kamerer said.

Many of Newcomer' songs contained a light but potent moral or political message, such as "Playing with Matches," which is about the Gulf War. It was featured on a benefit compilation for the National Coalition for the Homeless, also featuring Mary Chapin Carpenter's "Wisdom is Watching."

"I'm not a political writer, but I try to be active politically, so it kind of naturally gets into my writing," she said.

The Newcomer adventure is the largest band presented by Birdhouse so far, including layers of an intricate guitar flesh absorbed in wisping percussions and spiked with mandolin and accordion.

"Everybody puts in their own part," she said. "It's a very organic sort of thing."

With a receptive audience and comic chemistry among members of the band, Steve Martini, co-founder of Birdhouse, was right on with his prediction this show would sell itself.

Alumnus gives lecture on spatial relationships

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Intermingling the sciences with the arts is an old tradition. Spatial and perspective relationships have existed in art since its foundations.

A clear geometrical relationship is the basis of New York artist Alan Shields' work.

Shields, who studied art at K-State from 1963 to 1966, came back to the other Manhattan on Friday to deliver a lecture as part of the Department of Art's Visiting Artist series, funded in part by the student fine arts fee.

He discussed his work and shed some light on the little stories that lie behind each piece of art.

"Don't expect to find particular images or sources from Kansas flatlands, although it's all there stored in my memory," Shields said.

What one does find in the 60-some slides Shields presented is, in the more conventional paintings, a rigid geometry that either shapes the canvas or is applied over the canvas, with seemingly little attention given to where the color is placed.

These paintings are also dotted with somewhat comical extras, such as fringe, painted oddities and, in some cases, beads.

However, many of his art pieces are sewn fragments of painted canvas or architectural constructions relying heavily on painted strips of canvas to define space.

These constructions come in the forms of cubes, pyramids or cylinders with some of these explorations taking on the appearance of children's monkey bars.

Shields' wit is apparent, not only in his marvelous creations, but with his droll titles such as "Phoebe's Natural Swimming Action" and "Kansas Meatball."

Shields was born in 1944 in Herington, and his art doesn't literally reflect his childhood and collegiate years in Kansas as much as it hints figuratively at the distinct minimalism of the local landscape.

Shields' work takes references from and with the minimalist and the color field artists of the 1970s — especially in the apparent random local coloring that in actuality forms the basis for an emerging pattern in the greater work and rigid geometry.

Shields has shown regionally in the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art with a one-person show and nationally in the Museum of Modern Art, but most recently was included in the exhibit "Printmaking in America: Collaborative Prints and Presses, 1960-1990," seen at the National Museum of American Art.

It's rare for K-State to be visited by such an internationally renowned artist, and it is a shame more art students didn't take advantage of the lecture.

It would be nice to see some of Shields' work enter the University art collection — perhaps some three-dimensional kinetic work to hang in the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

SPEAKING OF TRADITION

SPEECH TEAM members play a clapping game as part of warm-ups before competing Saturday morning. Warm-ups help get the speakers' voices ready and their blood pumping.

RIC SHAFER, senior in speech and political science, and Becky Winter, senior in public relations, steal a moment to have a private chat Friday night in the hotel hallway while Billy Burtnett, junior in biology and communication, and Toban Henry, freshman in history, economics and pre-law, file articles to use for the extemporaneous speaking contest.

Competition provides chance for experience, camaraderie

Twenty people chanted, "Talk to me, touching the tip of the tongue to the teeth, the teeth, the lips, the tip of the tongue."

They repeated it faster and faster, and started jogging around the perimeter of the room with their hands on the shoulders of the person in front of them.

Members of the K-State speech team were warming up their voices at 7:15 a.m. Saturday at Wichita State University for the first day of a two-day tournament.

Ric Shafer, senior in speech, said warm-ups are a tradition for the team.

> "A lot of squads do warm-ups, but I think a lot of our warm-ups have a lot of history with them."
> • RIC SHAFER
> SENIOR IN SPEECH

"A lot of squads do warm-ups, but I think a lot of our warm-ups have a lot of history with them," he said. "It's a great time for team bonding. That's probably more important than actually warming up."

Craig Brown, head coach of the individual events team, said bedtime stories are also a tradition for the team.

The team arrived in Wichita on Friday night, and at 12:20 a.m., Brown told one of his bedtime stories to some team members in room 245 of the La Quinta Inn.

"Little Mikey wanted a treehouse," Brown began.

Mikey's dad tells him they will build a treehouse, but weeks go by, and Mikey doesn't believe it anymore, Brown said.

Finally, one morning Mikey's dad says he's taking the afternoon off so they can build the treehouse. After Mikey's day has dragged by at school, he rides the bus home, chattering the whole time about building his treehouse, Brown said.

"His dad is waiting on the corner with white pine 2-by-4 boards gleaming in the sun," Brown said.

Then Mikey runs across the street and gets hit by a cement truck, Brown said.

"Because that's real life, kids," he said.

Ben Harvey, sophomore in chemical engineering, said, "That's terrible. What kind of bedtime story is that?"

But Brown told them it was time to go to sleep so they could be in the vans by 6:45 Saturday morning to drive to Wichita State University.

After the team got to the campus, registered and warmed up, the members began competing. On Saturday, they competed to see who would compete in final rounds Sunday. The K-State team had at least one member in each of the 11 events for finals.

Three of the six pairs in the duo interpretation final were from K-State. Becky Winter, senior in public relations, and Matt Peterman, senior in philosophy and speech, took third.

Their piece, "Jack and Jill," followed a couple through love, marriage and everything after that.

Jack stumbles and mumbles to ask Jill out. By the end of the 10-minute piece, they have been married and divorced. He wants her back, but she doesn't want him. Then she wants him back.

"You know, I just got done sticking my hand in my chest and ripping you off my heart," Jack says. "And what the hell are you doing here?"

Peterman said their piece, which had already qualified for nationals, is different from many pieces on the forensics circuit.

"We kind of have a rebel piece," he said. "It's heterosexuals."

"And nobody dies," Shafer said.

Architect shares perceptions

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Architecture is more than a physical necessity. It is also a psychological one that builds a relationship between itself and the observer.

Wiel Arets, an architect from Herleen, Netherlands, spoke Friday to a crowd of architecture students about his architectural theories and projects, specifically of the relationship between an observer and the built environment.

The lecture, supported with funds from the fine-arts fee and titled "Free Indirect Vision," began with a full spectrum of slides that supposedly revealed Arets' own vision of architecture, a vision he said has two aspects.

Arets said visual and other sensual perceptions and the relationship between observer and building are the two base aspects of his architecture.

"People are confronted with the production of architecture at very different times, and it's very much dependent on who is visiting the architecture at what particular time," Arets said. "Architecture isn't only made for a sunny afternoon, and that is something we should realize."

Among the introduction slides was a series of pictures taken by Arets while riding in various taxis in different cities, such as New York and Sao Paulo, Brazil.

Arets said by understanding the differences and minuscule details of a city's culture, one can understand the architecture necessary for the environment.

At times, Arets had difficulty explaining himself and tended toward contradiction. This was most apparent when, in one breath, he said architecture should not have an immediate relationship to the observer and, in the other, he said an immediate relationship between the body and architecture is important.

This confusion undermined his point that his approach to architecture was in building relationships between observer and artist using various layers of media, similar to the cinema.

Whatever befuddlement muddled the first half of the lecture was soon surpassed by Arets' clearer discussion of his own architectural projects.

The highlight of the lecture was Arets' explanation of his design for the Academy of Arts and Architecture in Maastricht, Netherlands, which has won several awards and notices.

The design, which is a stark, concrete series of boxes connected with a pedestrian bridge and all of it skinned in glass blocks, allows the spaces to be flooded with light while offering a fuzzy picture of the contents to observers outside.

Arets reinforced many times in his explanation the necessary creation of spaces for students and faculty meetings — a part of his emphasis on communication between design, the observer and the users.

Arets' theories can be found in his books "Architecture of Freedom," "An Alabaster Skin" and "Virological Architecture." His work has also been the subject of articles in AD Architectural Design, Architectural Review, Architecture and Urbanism, and AA Files.

Skills taught in Bartending 101

staff writer

Not many people think of taking a class and going to a bar with the same significance. But for members of the Future Entrepreneurs, taking a class in a bar makes perfect sense.

Bartending 101, a hands-on experience that goes beyond mixing drinks, starts Nov. 3, thanks to a cooperative effort between the Future Entrepreneurs and Lucky BrewGrille.

"This is our main fundraiser. It's the biggest and most complex," Aimee Bass, events organizer, said. "I am basically in charge. I made sure the pamphlets were printed and helped design the T-shirts, then had them printed."

Bass said once the bills are paid to the bar and for supplies like T-shirts and manuals, the leftover money goes to the club.

Bartending 101 is open to anyone. Interested parties can attend the informational meeting at 5 p.m. Tuesday at Lucky BrewGrille. Bob Leetch, owner of Lucky BrewGrille, will speak after the meeting.

The class costs $35 per person. In addition to hands-on mixology and a certificate of completion, students end up with a bartending manual and a T-shirt.

"Bartending 101 is something different to do," said Scot Henderson, committee member and senior in finance and accounting.

Faculty adviser John Bunch said Bartending 101 is a long-standing tradition with the club.

"In two or three sessions, we give students the opportunity of what it's like to manage a bar. They learn to mix drinks, of course, but they also learn how a professional bartender manages their stock," Bunch said. "The idea is to give folks an experience they can use to tell an employer when looking for a job."

A large part of the curriculum is learning legal regulations that are needed to operate under as a bartender.

"We take the idea of doing the class responsibly very seriously," Bunch said. "A number of different bars have been supportive of the class, and they take the idea of teaching the class responsibly, too."

> "A lot of people want to make their own dreams happen. Making big dreams happen sometimes starts with very small business projects like Bartending 101, or selling T-shirts at games."
> — JOHN BUNCH, FACULTY ADVISER

As part of that, drinks are made with colored water. That way if a mistake is made, a person does not throw away a drink that cost $2 or $3, or trip up on Alcoholic Beverage Control regulations, he said.

"A lot of people want to make their own dreams happen. Making big dreams happen sometimes starts with very small business projects like Bartending 101, or selling T-shirts at games," Bunch said.

For the Future Entrepreneurs, Bartending 101 is part of understanding what it is like to work for a profit rather than working for a wage.

"This class really highlights the difference between what you brought in and what it cost you," he said. "The buck really stops with you as the business owner."

CSPA awards Collegian with gold-medal rating

MATT SPURGIN
staff reporter

Last spring's Collegian has received a top rating from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association.

The CSPA, which critiques student publications, gave the Collegian a gold-medal rating.

The Collegian was recognized in the categories of content, presentation and general operations.

Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications Inc., said every fall and spring, 10 random samples of the Collegian are sent in to be critiqued.

Johnson said he likes this particular critiquing group because the Collegian gets feedback from the judges, who are anonymous.

> "The awards are secondary when it comes to serving readers."
> • RON JOHNSON
> DIRECTOR OF STUDENT PUBLICATIONS INC.

The CSPA, a division of Columbia University in New York, is one of two national press groups that critique the Collegian. The other is the Associated Collegiate Press.

The spring 1996 editor in chief was Mike Marlett, a May 1996 graduate of K-State.

Trice Alford, a May 1996 graduate of K-State, was the advertising manager for the spring 1996 Collegian.

Johnson said the Collegian is one of the most honored student newspapers. He said last spring's paper was well rounded and did a good job keeping the readers informed of both soft and hard news and breaking stories on campus.

"The awards are secondary when it comes to serving readers," Johnson said.

industry.

"Businesses bring their products here to gain exposure. You can be more conspicuous by your absence than your presence sometimes," Havens said.

Dean Becker, a producer from Seneca, said he came to Dairy Day to keep up on what different dairy operations are doing.

Dairy Day was not just for the present producers and businesses. It was also for the future. The day helped students learn where the future might lead.

"I'm here to obtain a broader view in the dairy industry in the 21st century, " Matt Meyer, junior in animal science and industry, said.

CHANGES

Another reason for the proposed change is the constant growth of computer technology. It is now important for students to learn about the Internet and its many related tools. The four courses will be designed to help students in these areas as well.

If students have questions or comments regarding the possible changes in this course or any other course, they should contact the College of Engineering at 532-5592 or Rathbone at 532-5590.

SENATE

Environmental concerns should be balanced against reasonable scientific evidence, and a little more reason should be brought into some Environmental Protection Agency requirements, Frieden said.

Clack said people were the answer to helping the environment.

"If we're really interested in preserving the environment, we could do it the same way we could solve crime," Clack said. "We put the responsibility on the people closest to the problem. We empower people to do what's right."

SPEECH

speaking.

He began with: "It was a chilly autumn day when Billy McCombs and I ran home from fourth grade with a plain-wrapped magazine between us.

"Moments later we saw our first nekkid woman. She was wearing a shower cap and thongs, but my mom was pretty nekkid there in the living room."

This event uses humor to get its message across.

Johnson's introduction grabbed the audience's attention before he began his two main points.

The first one was how widespread stripping is.

In the second point, Johnson stripped away the rhetoric and examined the conflict stripping creates in modern feminism.

Janelle Moore, senior in microbiology, took third in prose, in which the competitor cuts a piece of fiction to 10 minutes and performs it.

"It never fails to amaze me, the capacity some people got for cryin'," she began in a Scottish accent.

Her piece, "I Eat My Peas With Honey," was about a young Scottish woman who was driving in a car crash that killed her brother.

Moore said the woman must learn to deal with her qualities that she doesn't like by seeing them in other people.

The woman's roommate in the hospital cries all the time.

"There are people who cry on the inside and people who cry on the outside," the character said. "They both feel like they could freeze the whole world over."

The team took first in the individual events team sweepstakes at this tournament.

It also took first in the overall team sweepstakes, which combined the results of the K-State Debate Team and the individual events team.

"It's kind of like a track meet, where one person can be in several races," Brown said.

Masked man chases 2

■ 2 women report similar encounters with masked man during the weekend.

KENNY WENTWORTH
staff writer

A woman told the K-State Police she was physically attacked while jogging at Memorial Stadium Sunday morning.

The attacker approached the jogger from behind around 7 a.m. and threw her to the ground. He then asked her for money, said James Lehne, campus police sergeant.

The victim had no money, so the assailant fled in the direction of the Ramada Inn. The victim described the attacker as wearing dark clothing, a black ski mask and black gloves, Lehne said.

She did not suffer have serious injuries, but did have cuts on her nose.

Lehne said this was not the only incident that involved a person with a black ski mask.

Earlier that morning, a woman reported being chased around 1 a.m. by a person wearing a ski mask in the Bluemont area.

About 30 minutes later, it was reported that an individual wearing a ski mask was looking into cars in the 800 and 900 blocks of Bluemont Avenue.

"We are not for sure it was the same person, but it is a little too warm for people to be walking around in ski masks," Lehne said.

The alleged victim who reported the incident at Memorial Stadium did not report the battery until later that afternoon at 5 p.m.

This was 10 hours after the assault allegedly took place.

This is often the case with victims, Lehne said.

"Many people feel like nothing can be done and that it won't make a difference. In this case, her roommate brought her in. She was still shook up," Lehne said.

Even though it was daylight out, Lehne says you should not let your guard down.

"You should always pay attention to the people around you that can never hurt," Lehne said.

The incident is still under investigation by the campus police, Lehne said.

College grads seek bottom line, top dollar at Employment Services

BETH HUSTED
staff reporter

For a lot of students graduating from college, the biggest concern is not the status of a job or even how happy they will be; it is simply how much money they will make.

Some seniors quickly come to realize that although they have chosen a field of study they enjoy, the monetary rewards have been their downfall.

Not to worry. Students who are interested in just how much money they have a chance of making in their chosen fields do not have far to look.

Career and Employment Services subscribes to the NACE Salary Survey. NACE, the National Association of Colleges and Employers publishes the survey for colleges, which can subscribe to the salary survey yearly.

"The survey is a solid representation of industry activities from across the nation," said Tracey Fraser, director of Career and Employment Services.

The salary survey compiles 359 reports from career-planning and placement offices of colleges and universities across the country. They are based on starting salary offers to new graduates by employing organizations in business, industry, government and non-profit/educational institutions.

Drug legalization, loans provide political debate

JEREMY KELLEY
staff writer

Whether the government should help students pay for college is a primary issue for students and candidates for U.S. Senate.

"On a state and local level the government should help students," Mark Marney, Reform party candidate for the seat vacated by Nancy Kassebaum, said. "However, the government should not confiscate money from tax payers and send it to Washington, D.C."

Sally Thompson, Democratic candidate and former state treasurer, said the government has an obligation.

"The government needs to provide student loans even if it means doing that through tax credits," Thompson said.

Steven Rosile, Libertarian party candidate, said government should not help students pay for college at all.

"The government has a role to play in education," Pat Roberts, U.S. congressman, said. "They need to have a better cost benefit."

Another issue on the minds of many students is the issue of drugs and whether or not they should be legalized or abolished.

"We really can't do anything until we control our borders," Marney said.

Thompson said there really is no solution about the use of drugs other than education.

"We need to keep kids active in school, in sports and in the community," Thompson said. "We need to make them feel important and tell them that gangs are not the solution."

Rosile said drugs should not be a concern of the government, and they cause a corruption of law enforcement.

"The only solution is to legalize and regulate now," Rosile said. "The prohibition of drugs creates violence, not drugs themselves."

Pat Roberts feels the easiest solution is to just say no.

Ballot issue to affect bar food-sales quota

HEATHER HJETLAND
staff reporter

The Little Apple Task Force on Alcohol and Drug Abuse is against question No. 1 on the ballot, which says establishments who serve alcohol will be able to do so without the present requirement that 30 percent of sales be from food.

This is a state law that counties have the option of voting on to change.

Cherie Caulley, chairperson of the task force, is opposed to this issue because eating slows the absorption of alcohol.

"The problem is serving drinks and people getting behind the wheel," said Caulley, who has been with the task force for more than five years.

> "The problem is serving drinks and people getting behind the wheel."
> ● CHERIE CAULLEY
> LITTLE APPLE TASK FORCE ON ALCOHOL AND DRUG ABUSE

Gwen Kropf, secretary of the Task Force, added there are many other negative side effects of drinking, such as rape.

Caulley sites downtown Lawrence as an example of a city that dropped the requirement and saw a rise in irresponsible drunken behavior.

"We look at Lawrence and say it worked against them," she said.

Caulley said bars feel the hardship of this law is meeting health standards where food is concerned.

"This is not the issue. It's irresponsible drunken behavior," she said.

Task-force members said having food could lessen this behavior.

"The more people eat, the less absorbed in the blood," said Kropf. "We have no problem with serving alcohol in restaurants and having a drink with a meal."

Members hope this question will not be passed.

"It's a small step in reducing the effects of drunken people," Caulley said. "But any small step makes a difference."

OUT OF THAT GOURD

WAYS TO CARVE AND COOK THAT SEASONAL MELON BEFORE IT ROTS

1 After selecting a pattern and tracing it onto your pumpkin of choice, use a marker to darken the pattern.
2 Cut the top of the pumpkin in order to scoop out the insides. It is best to cut at a 45-degree angle to ensure that the lid does not fall back in when placed on top.

3 Scoop out the seeds and goop with a spoon or your hands. Separate the seeds for useful recipes.
4 Start slicing into the pumpkin. Be sure to cut in chunks for larger areas. The chunks are easier to remove and will not damage your overall design.

Jack-o-lanterns supply seedy snacks

Before cutting that pumpkin, think about what you want to do with it after Halloween.

Pumpkins have a long and glorious history in the American diet. In fact, they are exclusively American and were developed by the Native Americans long before the arrival of Christopher Columbus.

Picking a pumpkin is easy to do; they're everywhere. Choose one that is bright orange, heavy and firm. Pumpkins can be stored without refrigeration, but keep them in a dark, cool area if they are to be stored for more than a week.

Remember, it's OK to carve the pumpkin, but don't burn the candle directly inside. Otherwise, you cannot use the pumpkin.

One cup of cooked pumpkin has only 80 calories, and a serving of pumpkin supplies 700 percent the daily requirement for vitamin A. Pumpkin is low in calories, sodium and fat.

Three pounds of raw pumpkin yields about three cups cooked pumpkin. Keep in mind that the smaller the pumpkin, the sweeter the pie. But there's more to pumpkin than just pumpkin pie.

It can be used in soups, breads, cookies and candies. Even pumpkin pie comes as chiffon pie, pecan pumpkin, pumpkin apple or mincemeat pumpkin. There's even a low-calorie version.

The first thing you want to do with your pumpkin after you cut out the stem is to scoop out the seeds. Now, what to do with the seeds? Jut follow these directions, and you'll have a big batch of crunchy, roasted pumpkin seeds.

First, wash the seeds under cold water. Then blot them dry between paper towels. Spread the seeds on a cookie sheet in a single layer, making sure they are not touching each other. Sprinkle salt on the seeds, put them in a preheated oven at 350 degress Fahrenheit and roast 30-60 minutes. Cooking time varies, depending upon the size of the seeds and how wet they are. When they

• NEW WILDFIRES BREAK OUT IN SAN BERNARDINO, RIVERSIDE COUNTIES. Cool, slight winds allowed firefighters to get a handle on two wildfires that chased people from their homes in southern California.

The new fires crackled through brush in San Bernardino and Riverside counties about 60 miles east of Los Angeles on Sunday. By nightfall, most fires were not a danger to residents.

Elsewhere in southern California, firefighters kept watch for flareups in previously burned areas as wind gusted up to 35 mph through the region, then died down. The week-old series of wind-driven fires has destroyed 100 homes and covered nearly 40,000 acres.

An evacuation order was issued early Sunday for neighborhoods closest to a 600-acre fire just north of the city of San Bernardino. An undetermined number of people left their homes.

• ZAIRE REFUGEE CAMP EXPANDS. The biggest refugee camp in the world took shape Monday, expanding in a sprawling confetti of green, red and blue tents, covering four square miles of a rough slab of volcanic rock in eastern Zaire. The population of the Mugunga camp swelled to twice its size when nearly 200,000 Rwandan Hutus arrived here from their old camp after it was attacked Saturday by Rwandan army soldiers of the Tutsi ethnic group.

Looking out over the blue of Lake Kivu, the camp is like a small city, its 420,000 population more than that of Minneapolis. Its residents are tired, hungry and potentially violent. And already-taxed humanitarian workers are worried — about security, about having enough to feed the hungry and about preventing disease.

Aid workers hurried to organize sanitation and food, hoping to prevent an outbreak of cholera like the one that killed 50,000 Rwandans in eastern Zaire in 1994. The terrain of hardened lava made it difficult to build badly needed latrines.

Eisenhower Lecture in War and Peace, "Understanding is better than Remembering: the Korean War, 1945-1954," will be presented by Allan Millet at Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union. Millet is a Mason professor in military history at Mershon Center and Ohio State University.

SPORTS

• OAKLEY, BARKLEY SUSPENDED. Charles Oakley of the New York Knicks was suspended for the first two games of the season and Charles Barkley of the Houston Rockets was suspended for the opener as a result of their fight last week. The NBA said Monday Oakley also was fined $10,000 and Barkley $5,000. The ejections carry additional $1,000 fines.

• SERVICES FOR JOE SPENCER. Funeral services took place Monday for Joe Spencer, an assistant coach for five NFL teams, including the New York Jets when they won the Super Bowl in 1970. He was 73. Spencer, who had cancer, died Thursday at Southwest Memorial Hospital in Houston. He was an assistant coach for the Houston Oilers from 1961-65, and also coached the Jets, St. Louis Cardinals, Kansas City Chiefs and New Orleans Saints. Spencer also coached in the Canadian Football League.

• PLAYER CHARGED WITH SECOND SEXUAL OFFENSE. Southwest Missouri State defensive lineman Anthony D. Woodson has been charged with a second sex offense, this time for allegedly reaching under a woman's dress on a sidewalk near campus. The first-degree sexual misconduct charge, a misdemeanor, comes less than a week after he was charged with sexual abuse of a 21-year-old woman in June. He was to be issued a summons to appear in court on the misdemeanor charge.

Federal loans provide relief for students running low on cash

Matt Spurgin
staff reporter

For students who may not have the brains, athletic ability, the right connections or just pure luck to get a scholarship, financial aid is available through the federal government. That financial aid is probably going to be in the form of student loans.

Before students can find out which type of loans they are eligible for, they must fill out the free application for federal student aid.

Once this has been done, it is determined whether the applicant qualifies for need-based loans.

If the student qualifies for need-based loans, those loans will come in the form of a Perkins Loan or a Stafford/Federal Direct Loan. Both types of loans are subsidized by the government and the interest is deferred until after the student is out of school.

> "I always suggest to every student that they apply for federal aid at least one time to find out where they stand in the process."
> • LARRY MOEDER
> DIRECTOR OF STUDENT FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

The Perkins Loan has a low, 5-percent interest rate. Repayment of this loan does not start until nine months after the student is out of school.

The Stafford/Federal Direct Loans have a variable interest rate, and the rate is capped at 8.25 percent. Repayment is not required until six months after graduation. The interest rate on these loans is 7.66 percent. This rate is readjusted annually on the remainder of the balance of the loan, but once interest begins to be charged, it will always be 8.25 percent or less.

Larry Moeder, director of student financial assistance, said this year the Stafford Loan is only available to seniors and graduate students. Freshmen, sophomores and juniors receive aid through the Federal Direct Loan Program. He said this is because the Stafford Loan is being phased out and the Federal Direct Loan is replacing it, but the loans are essentially the same.

Both the Stafford Loan and the Federal Direct Loans are available in both need-based (subsidized) and non-need-based (unsubsidized) forms, so even if a student does not qualify for the need based loans, he can still get one of these loans. The only difference is that it will be an unsubsidized loan and the interest will be calculated from the day the loan is taken out.

"Any student can qualify for the unsubsidized, no matter what their financial need might be," Moeder said.

Parents may also take out a PLUS loan for their child's college expenses. This is a non-need-based loan that allows the parent to borrow up to the total cost of education, minus any additional aid. These loans have an interest rate that is never more than 9 percent. Payment on this loan begins 60 days after the loan is taken out.

"It is not a loan that is deferred until the student gets out of school, but it is a way for the families to get money up-front," Moeder said.

Moeder said there is also a loan through the University called the Alumni/Foundation Loan.

"We use that as a last resort, when we can't find any other assistance for the student," he said.

This loan has an interest rate of 6 percent and must be repaid three POSTGAME CLEANING of KSU stadium begins at 7 a.m. Sunday. It often takes five to six hours for the Air Force ROTC students to clean the entire stadium.

STORY BY ANDREW FRANCIS — PHOTO BY BRANDON WHITE

CLEAN SWEEP

Air Force ROTC discovers cash amidst gameday pop bottles, paper debris

When as many as 43,000 fans filter out of the stadium after every home football game, the post-game aftermath of peanut shells and pop bottles are all that remain.

Most football fans are still sleeping when the Air Force ROTC begins cleaning KSU Stadium early Sunday morning. It begins cleaning KSU Stadium and surrounding areas at 7 a.m.

Jason Ballah, senior in computer science, is corps commander of K-State's Air Force ROTC.

He said the group tries to get 30-40 cadets to participate in each clean-up project. The K-State AFROTC has 72 members.

"It's great esprit de corps. We pull together as a team to come down here and clean up the stadium," he said.

The group uses leaf blowers and brooms to move peanut shells, wrappers, pop bottles and other debris to the aisles. Baggers move down the aisles and put the piles of debris in trash bags.

The AFROTC also cleans up the parking lots and the football field. The group tries to finish its cleanup project in five or six hours, but sometimes it takes longer. Ballah said the latest they have stayed to clean up this season was 4:30 p.m. He said it took a long time because it was raining and there were only 20 people there.

"Two years ago, after the Nebraska game, we were here for 12 hours," Ballah said. "It rained during the game and while we were cleaning up. It was a mess."

The AFROTC earns $1,200 for cleaning KSU Stadium each game. If attendance for the game is more than 40,000 people, the cadets earn an additional $300.

Lennea Montandon, operations group commander, is a senior in political science. She said the fund raiser accounts for most of the group's income.

"This is our busy semester. We don't have to do a lot of fund raisers in the spring because of this," she said. "It makes a lot of things cheaper for the cadets."

Money made from the fund-raiser was used to improve their lounge, buy a new computer, and pay for dinners and balls.

Jamie Morris, freshman in business, said the fundraiser helps her get to know the other cadets. Morris is an AS 100, the AFROTC's title for a first-year cadet.

"Cleaning up the stadium is good, because we are making money for the Corps and getting to know each other better," she said.

Baliah said they have been cleaning the stadium for at least 10 years.

"We try to make it as fun as possible," he said.

IN OUR OPINION

It's just one more fee you might be required to pay

Socialized health care might be coming to K-State.

The Student Health Advisory Committee to Lafene Student Health Center is studying a health care plan offered by G-M Underwriters that would require all non-insured students to take out a policy that would cost nearly $400 per year.

WHY WE CARE

Students who don't already have health insurance might soon be required to pay about $400 to be insured through Lafene.

This would be substantially less than the comprehensive $987 per year plan and the $613 per year basic plan already offered through Lafene.

It doesn't matter if you can't afford it or if you don't want it. You would be required to take it.

This doesn't affect those students who are insured either through their own plans or their parents' plans, but according to figures released by G-M Underwriters, this policy would affect nearly 25 percent of K-State students.

If you become ill or injured, this proposed plan would require you to visit or contact Lafene first and then be referred to another doctor if necessary — no matter how serious the illness. So, this plan also limits choice.

Although providing insurance for students is thoughtful, requiring it ignores the fact that many students who don't have it, can't afford it at any price.

Likewise, the focus of Lafene should not be to provide an expansive health care system to K-State. Lafene exists for minor illnesses and accidents, not as a Clintonesque answer to all health-related problems.

We all remember last year's struggles with Lafene funding in Student Senate — the general feeling was campus health care needed streamlining in order to improve the services already offered, not expanding.

If you have ideas as to what direction SHAC should take with this issue, you can share them with committee members from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Wednesday and Thursday outside the Stateroom in the K-State Student Union.

Members of SHAC have said they will not make a decision without student input, so don't wait until it's too late for voicing your concerns.

Socialized medicine does not work for everyone. Tell SHAC you don't want another mandatory fee tacked onto your college bill.

You can give input into student health insurance

Editor,

As Chair of the Student Health Advisory Committee, I am writing to ask for student input on a proposal which has been brought before us.

We have been presented with the option of a Mandatory with Waiver Health Insurance Program.

If a program such as this were put into place, all students would be required to show proof of health insurance to take classes at Kansas State. Students who did not have health insurance would be required to purchase the K-State endorsed health insurance plan.

The benefit of this program would be that the K-State-endorsed plan's premium would be reduced from about $900 a year to about $400 a year.

There are many advantages and disadvantages of this program and many details that would need to be discussed. Actual implementation of such a plan would have to occur at the administrative level; the committee merely serves an advisory role and is in the process of deciding whether to support or oppose this program.

Student Health Advisory Committee members will be available from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Oct. 30-31 at tables outside the K-State Student Union Stateroom to answer questions and get feedback. Please stop by the tables or e-mail me at (amy@ksu.edu).

We're slobs and proud of it

A fashion cop's nightmare? Maybe, but I-don't-care fashions work better for us than any other generation

MY

Keely
SCHIELDS

Walking around campus on any given day, it occurs to me that I belong to a generation of slobs.

Complete slobs!

Just take a look at us sometime. It isn't hard to sparkle in the midst of K-State's student body.

In fact, showering and putting on a pair of intact jeans and a button-down shirt would probably make you shine like a revolving disco globe, because nobody else will have put in that much effort.

Now I'm not trying to suggest the fraternity guys break out their khaki slacks and navy blazers to come to class.

And I don't think we women ought to revert to the cute, matching sweaters and socks we used to wear in high school, but I see some outfits — sometimes when I look in the mirror — that virtually scream, "I don't care!"

Especially Fridays, I notice some pretty questionable get-ups on those who have actually made it to campus.

By far, wind pants are the worst, even if they do have a little bit of shine to them. Every time I see someone walking in wind pants, I feel like pointing them toward the rec.

They just don't seem like the kind of thing you'd want the world to see you in, unless you were just running — not walking — to the grocery store for milk.

A personal favorite of mine is the adjustable ball cap with the pony-tail pulled out the back. Cute! This look says either, "I woke up 15 minutes ago," or "The grease build-up on my hair is so rancid, the protective layer of cloth around my scalp is necessary."

I wouldn't want to appear prejudiced against people with long hair, though. Ball caps look careless on everybody.

There is also a peculiar phenomenon, which you can't see, but you can smell when you sit down in class: smoky-bar jeans. Without question, jeans should be worn two or three times between washings unless you spill something on them. That is why smoky-bar jeans happen.

You sit down in class, and maybe it's you or maybe it's you and nine other people, but something smells like 2:30 a.m. on New Year's Day, when your parents were returning home from their round of parties — only more stale.

Although smoky-bar jeans are as slovenly as anything, they're forgivable, because the smell is virtually impossible to detect until you take it someplace it really doesn't belong. Then, what can you do?

So what's wrong with us?

Don't we take any pride in our personal appearance?

Sure we do. After all, no generation in recent history has plunged to the depths of slovenliness that today's traditional college students reach on a daily basis.

Nobody looks sloppy as well as we do.

Take Bob Dole, World War II veteran, for instance. There was that brief period right after he retired his Senate seat when he tried campaigning without a tie. It was a really good effort to slack off a little on the formality, yet he couldn't quite carry it off.

Thanks for playing.

Then consider President Clinton, the baby boomer. He could've been our dad. He dons those jogging shorts, and the time is right for them. Still, I find myself wanting him to go put his regular, presidential clothes back on.

These two simply aren't the proud slobs we are.

Up to this point, it seems like a good thing that each successive generation has grown a little more comfortable with venturing out of the house without regard to neatness.

It's the future I'm worried about — wind pants at the office.

No, the 'Beowolf' reference to Cain isn't from 'Pulp Fiction'

MY

Christy
LITTLE

I thought as a young teacher, I would be particulariy adept at understanding my students.

After all, I only graduated from high school in 1992.

I'm still technically a college student.

I dance; I watch too much football; I reminisce a great deal about my experiences at my sorority and the Collegian.

At the same time, I do my best to continue to wade through the classics I've never read, and I keep up on current events faithfully.

I consider them a duty to my content areas, and I enjoy performing them.

What I have found, though, is that matters of cultural reference are already beginning to change.

For example, I was teaching "Beowulf" to my senior English classes when the following event took place:

"So, it is important to associate Grendel with evil and sin," I told the class after reading the introduction to "Beowulf."

"This line tells us he is the spawn of Cain, so he is one of the descendants destined to — "

"Hey, Miss Little!"

I looked at Tim. "Did you have a question?"

Tim looked triumphant. "No, not really. I just wanted to say that I know where that part about Cain comes from."

He looked around the room proudly. "That's from 'Pulp Fiction'!"

There was an understandable pause in the room. Two of my wiser students closed their eyes and quietly shook their heads.

The remainder of the class looked at me expectantly.

I had to proceed carefully, here.

I knew my kids would flip to hear I'd seen "Pulp Fiction," though they didn't even have their driver's licenses when it came out.

"Well, yes, they talk about that in 'Pulp Fiction.' But — "

"(Gasp) Miss Little, YOU'VE seen 'Pulp Fiction'?"

I eyeballed the class. "Yes, I have." (A common misunderstanding about teachers, including those who are not even college graduates, is that we probably never get out of the house.)

"Did you LIKE it?"

Oh, goodness. I had a dilemma on my hands.

"Yes," I answered. "I thought it was great. I watched 'Reservoir Dogs' after that."

The reverential silence that greeted that remark gave me a chance to get back to the topic at hand.

"'Pulp Fiction' does talk about Cain and Abel," I said. "But 'Pulp Fiction' got that from the Bible."

I added, "The Bible came before 'Beowulf.' That came before 'Pulp Fiction'. 'Pulp Fiction' is from 1994, while the Bible and 'Beowulf' long preceded the 10th century."

There was a thoughtful pause.

"So," I concluded, "it goes to show you that reading classics — and the Bible, for that matter — can very well help you understand popular culture better. You'll hear references like this in music, movies, television — even 'Pulp Fiction'."

There are, of course, many other reasons to read the classics.

I was a faithful adherent to education professor David Byrne's mention of a classics-based education, in which students would learn all the world's great ideas and values through reading.

Realize, of course, these students are largely interested in what they can relate to completely violent movies such as "Pulp Fiction."

To tell high school students that reading "Beowulf" is for their own good is a little like trying to tell a 4-year-old that penicillin will cure his strep throat.

The reasoning simply is not there, even if the cure can be administered, the medicine still doesn't taste so good.

Unfortunately, such knowledge has to be administered in small doses with as many interesting anecdotes as humanly possible.

After that, I had my students turn to a section of their book that included the passage about Cain and Abel, as I now understood that not everyone was familiar with the story, and class continued uneventfully from there.

Only five years separate me from this class. I'm still a graduate of the '90s.

> "It is only fair to those students that I acknowledge the culture they embrace — regardless of how much it resembles 'Pulp Fiction' — at least so I can relate to them and then share the values and ideas I have learned from the culture of and preceding my own time."

But times are changing quickly.

As a whole, are these students culturally illiterate?

Or, at 22, am I already falling out of touch?

I will need to decide how I am going to stay in touch with students, h at 25 or 35 I will still understand the books and movies they talk abou class.

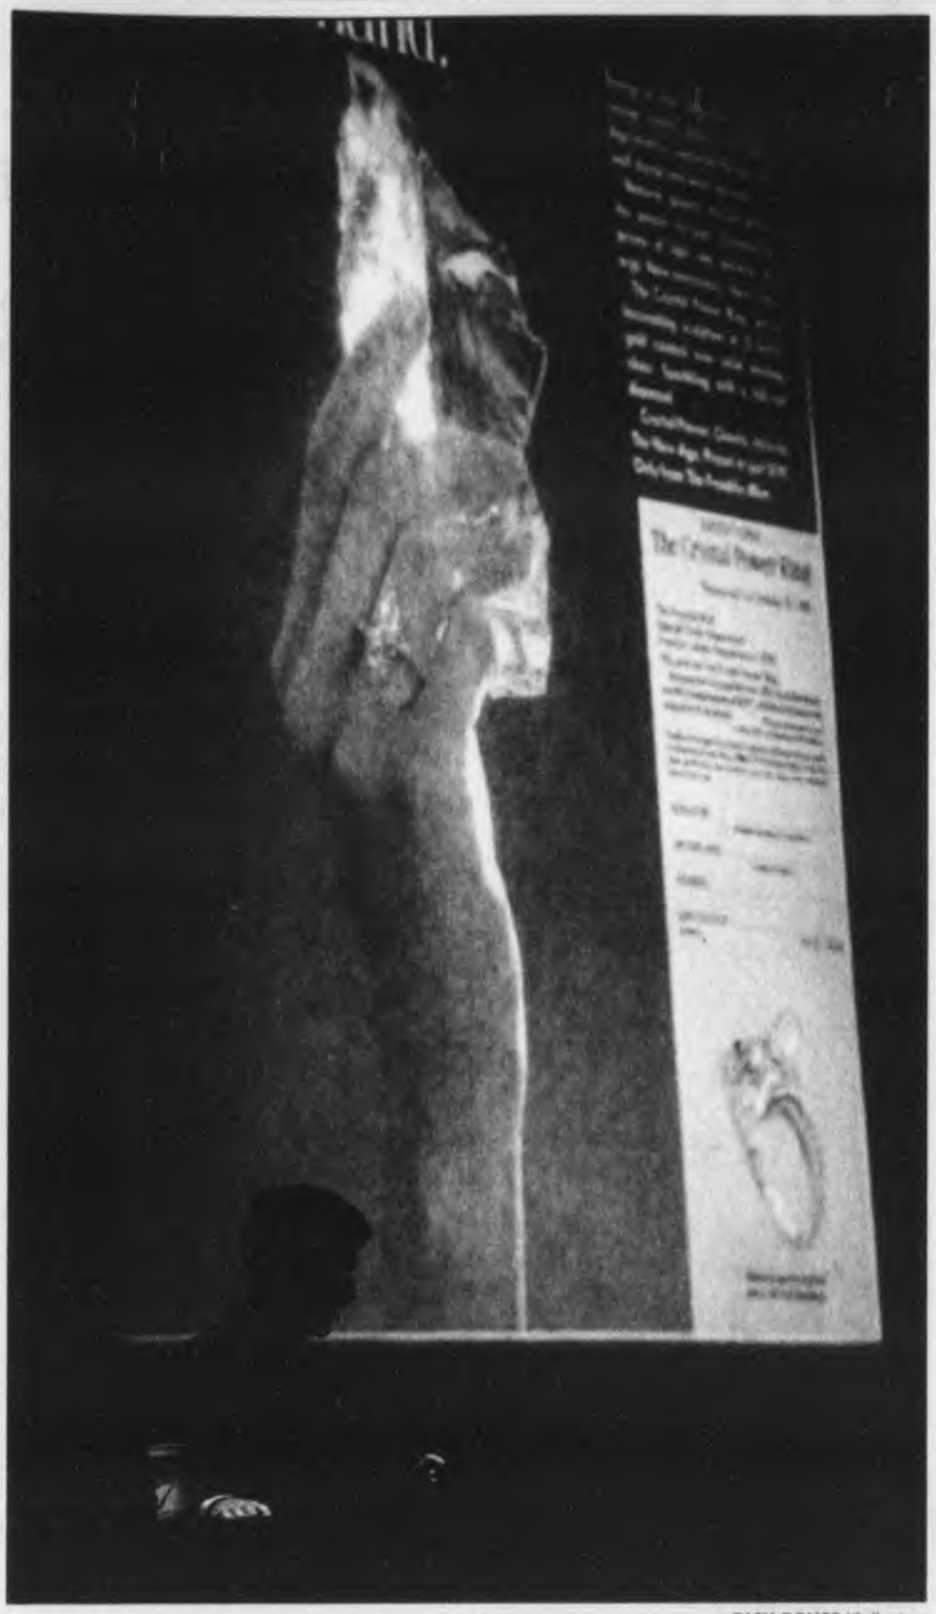
It is only fair to those students who I teach that I acknowledge the c ture they embrace — regardless of how much it resembles the movie "P Fiction" — at least so I can relate to them and then am able share the v ues and ideas that I have learned from the culture of and preceding my o time.

But how does one explain that reading a novel l "Jane Eyre" can derive the same — if not more — pleas as watching "Pulp Fiction?"

An unfortunate aspect about the classics — to tod students, anyway — is that they are not accompanied b soundtrack.

The dialogue is as equally witty as the movies, classics use language that doesn't appeal to teen-agers wl a four-letter word more easily, though vulgarly, expresses same idea.

Essentially, we are coming to an age where stude can better describe their childhood experiences with M than with the library.



A book that isn't snappy, fast-moving and basic devoid of content is not worth sifting through unless y English teacher is going to force-feed it to you.

How I will make students understand the values ideas of the content I teach, or even how to relate it to po lar culture, will be an arduous task at best.

If "Pulp Fiction" has replaced the Bible as the reference of popular c ture, then times are changing indeed.

It has nothing to do with religion, but rather what we contemplated children — should we or should we not be our brother's keeper, or whet we liked the "Lightening Crashes" video by Live.

JON RITTENHOUSE stands in front of a slide screen during his speech on the occult in McCain Auditorium Monday night. The speech was sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ.

Occult speaker: supernatural not an answer

MATT BASLER
staff reporter

Some people believe they can communicate with the dead or conjure up spirits by using a Ouija board.

Not Jon Rittenhouse.

He believes people looking to find answers in the occult about religion and power will come up empty in their findings.

Rittenhouse, a Christian researcher who lives in California, has given lectures and speeches on the supernatural and the occult for 13 years.

He travels around the country and has spoken at more than 75 colleges and universities.

Students filled the seats of both levels of McCain Auditorium Monday night to hear Rittenhouse speak about whether the occult was a doorway to the supernatural or a dangerous dabbling.

Rittenhouse said tolerance is understanding but not necessarily accepting it. He went on to explain about matters of tolerance and truth.

"If we didn't know truth, we wouldn't know what to or not to tolerate," he said.

Rittenhouse said he did not want to offend anyone but instead wanted to offer different explanations in hopes students would be challenged in their beliefs and seek truth in what they believe.

However, Rittenhouse said the supernatural and the occult offer nothing to someone looking to fill a personal, spiritual void.

"I don't believe that the occult will satisfy the spiritual longing in our hearts," he said.

Rittenhouse said the occult is dangerous, because it claims to do things it cannot.

Rittenhouse spoke of the different aspects of the occult ranging from Satanism to Ouija boards and explained how these were dangerous because they didn't offer truth and were often misleading.

Rittenhouse said many people believe crystals possess a type of spiritual power, both good and bad.

To dispel this, he played a videotape of an illusionist using crystals to start fires and break champagne glasses.

The illusionist then said the presentation was all an illusion, used to trick people into thinking crystals did have some type of power.

Rittenhouse used examples like this to illustrate how dangerous the power of the mind and the supernatural could be.

The presentation was sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ and lasted about 90 minutes, followed by a question-and-answer session in which many students participated.

Funding request includes bike paths, better campus safety

SCOTT CONNER
staff reporter

The K-State administration requested funding from the City/University Projects Committee for improvements such as bicycle paths and campus safety at its meeting Monday night.

These projects are part of a list the committee will approve at its next meeting on Dec. 4.

After the committee approves the list, it will send it to the city commission for final approval.

The other projects presented for funding were the K-State Libraries/Manhattan Public Library Project, support for the University Gardens project, a new community telecommunications facility, an assessment for street improvements on north College Avenue and a new traffic signal at the corner of Denison and Kimball avenues.

The projects were presented to the committee by Tom Rawson, administrative and financial vice president at K-State, and other University staff.

The budget for these projects is about $738,000 for 1998.

A large portion of the budget includes funding to help pay for the assessment of a street-improvement project that was completed on College Avenue.

In 1994, a project was approved for street improvements on a half-mile section of College Avenue that runs north of Kimball Avenue.

In 1996, the City of Manhattan created a benefit district to help pay for the improvements.

Owners of the property adjacent to the street were assessed half of the project costs. K-State, which owns all the land on one side of the street, was assessed $127,932, which will be paid under the 1998 budget.

Another project discussed was a request for $50,000 for ongoing bicycle infrastructure improvements.

Mark Taussig, a facilities planning assistant for the University, reported to the committee that the improvements are based on recommendations from the bicycle master plan created to advise the city on how to improve existing and create future bicycle pathways.

The improvements requested for 1998 include the development of bicycle routes and additional bicycle parking on campus.

The second project discussed was a request for funding to improve lighting on the southwest end of campus, which includes Nichols Hall, McCain Auditorium and the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

This is needed because of the increasing amount of public use of the area.

The K-State Libraries/Manhattan Public Library Project was the next item on the list.

The project has created a community information center by connecting the Manhattan Public Library and K-State libraries.

Brice Hobrock, dean of Farrell Library, reported to the committee that the computers that link both libraries are now in operation and additional funding would go toward purchasing new computers, purchasing database licenses and hiring administrative staff for online community resources.

Taussig said the University Gardens support project will help build a visitors' center for the new 12-acre project to help beautify and provide an educational resource.

Also included on the list of projects is a plan to develop a community electronic telecommunications facility.

This high-tech facility will be housed in the K-State Student Union and include desktop videoconferencing software, computers that will aid in the decision-making process in meetings and new multimedia equipment.

Jack Sills, senior associate director of the Union, said there are not very many of these centers in this part of the state and it would attract more groups to visit Manhattan as a conference site.

Also on the list was a request of funding for a new stoplight for the corner of Denison and Kimball avenues. Rawson said the stoplight would greatly improve the traffic congestion at this intersection.

With one regatta under its belt, the K-State crew team showed substantial progress at the Head of the Iowa Rowing Regatta, sponsored by the University of Iowa in Iowa City.

"We had a great weekend," Coach Jenny Hale said. "There was such pleasant improvement in so many ways."

The Wildcat entry included one varsity four, two novice eights and one varsity eight. The Novice-A boat placed third out of 16 in its division, behind two boats from Iowa and ahead of both boats from Kansas.

"We had about 16 boats in that race, and that's the boat we really concentrated on," Hale said. "We still haven't cleared about five athletes through the NCAA Clearinghouse, some of which would have been in that first boat. So to keep up with Iowa and Kansas is great."

The varsity four finished 12th out of 13, the Novice-B finished sixth out of 16 and the varsity eight finished fifth out of nine.

Although none of the boats medaled, Hale said she was impressed with their progress.

"They were much more focused, from the moment we left Manhattan," Hale said. "They got a regatta under their belt at the Head of the Kaw, but in Iowa they showed were really ready to race.

"The goal up there was to do things together. Whether it was unloading the trailer or getting together for the team meetings or on the water, we wanted to work together as a team and we did that," Hale said.

With winter approaching, the crew team has completed its intercollegiate season for the semester. Hale's biggest concern coming into the season was getting the team acquainted to the sport. After two meets, she said they have achieved that and more.

"Because Kansas and Iowa have been at this for three years, for us to be hanging with them time-wise, and also to be able to go out and not get passed by them and compete with them technically, that is a good barometer of where our program is," Hale said.

The Cats will conclude the fall semester with an intrasquad scrimmage Saturday at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

Club rebounding from rough season

JEREMY KELLEY

After coming off a poor season last year, the K-State men's volleyball club looks to improve from its standing a year ago.

"We have a lot more structure this year," Brian Combs, club president, said. "We got reorganized in a formal status."

The volleyball team, which didn't register for club status last year because of a lack of funds, has started play this year in hopes of having more success than last year.

"Last year we had disorganization, and nobody really wanted to take charge," Combs said. "When you don't have University funding, it takes a lot from your pocket."

This year, the team has attained club status at K-State, and Combs is in the process of registering the team as a United States of America Volleyball team. The team would compete in the Heart of America division.

"If we were a USAV volleyball team, we could compete in many tournaments that are sanctioned for members only," Combs said. "I think it would greatly improve our play."

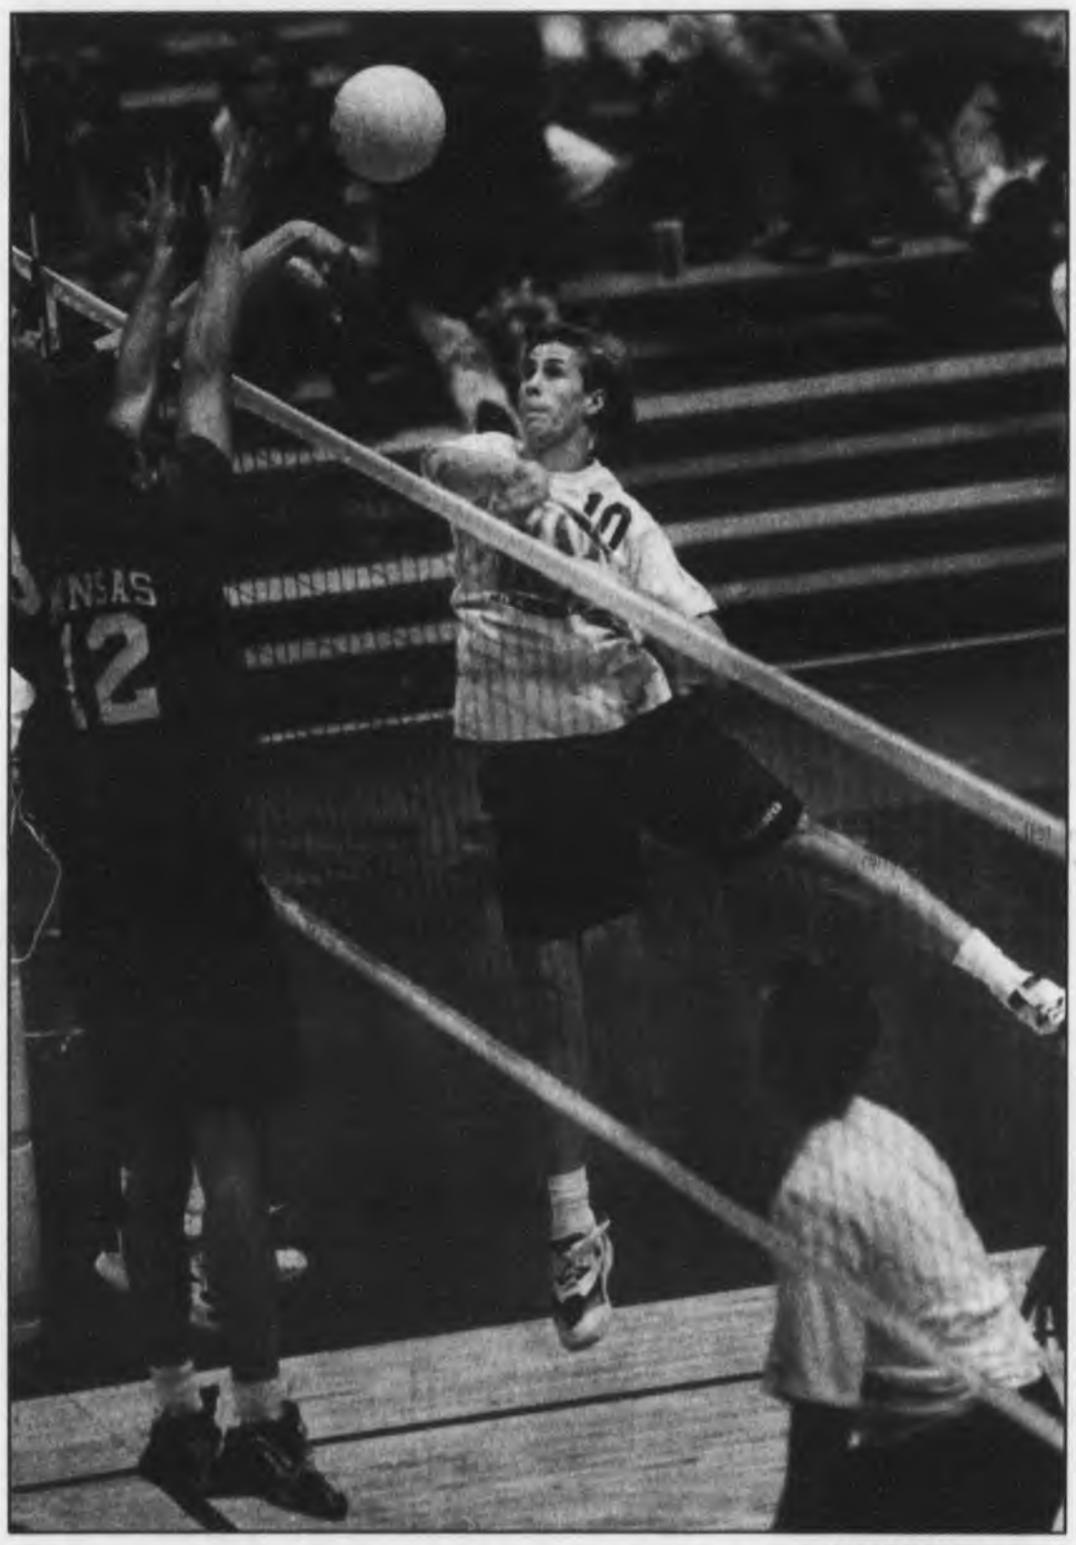
The club currently has only one sponsor, K-State, but is looking for another.

"We have had a lot of discussion about it, because it would greatly increase our funds," Combs said.

Combs said he has been taking charge of the recruiting side, usually by word of mouth but sometimes by going to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

"A few of us may go to the rec sometimes and play a pick-up game and scout other players," Combs said. "However, club play is much more organized than rec play. It's a lot more competitive."

Combs said the Wildcats have had a couple of games to start the season, but nothing that was very impressive.



"We played Kansas University, but our offense was pretty much nonexistent," Combs said, "We are progressing slowly as a team."

He said the slow progression was due to the large number of inexperienced players.

"We have a lot of young guys this year," Combs said. "But hopefully as people's skills improve, we will too."

Combs said he thought the team had been practicing better and was coming together.

"We are going to get better and better the more we play," Combs said. "We are coming off a bad year, but hopefully we can have what it takes this year."

BRIAN COMBS, graduate student in industrial engineering and men's volleyball club president, watches as his spike is deflected by KU opponents during a match earlier this season in Ahearn Field House. The volleyball club has recently attained club status at K-State after a year without that status. It is also in the process of registering as a United States of America Volleyball team where it would compete in the Heart of America division. While the club currently has only one sponsor, K-State, it is looking for another.

Men's Club Rowing
Head of the Iowa Regatta
- Men's single — first out of six
- Men's varsity lightweight four — first out of five
- Men's varsity open four — second and seventh out of 11

The K-State men's rowing club had a successful Sunday outing at the Head of the Iowa Rowing Regatta in Iowa City.

Two boats placed first in their races, with the Wildcats adding a second and a third place finish.

Charlie Tierney, junior rower from Manhattan High School, defeated five other boats to win the men's recreational single, and K-State's varsity lightweight four also placed first.

The men's Open-A finished second out of 11 boats in the varsity four competition, with the Open-B coming in seventh. In the varsity eight race, the Cats Open-A boat placed third out of eight, with the Open-B finishing eighth.

Bye week gives Wildcat fans chance to try out different things

Do you often find yourself subconsciously dreading that little, football-barren weekend sandwiched between gridiron clashes with Oklahoma and Kansas?

Do you feel the result of staying in Willieville during this time period will bring hours of activity absence, filled only by the "Diff'rent Strokes" marathon?

Well, never fret, because there are plenty of sports-related activities crawling around campus to keep you busy and well-tuned before the showdown in Jayhawk-town. During the upcoming bye week, you have the opportunity to discover many activities located within the Manhattan confines.

First off, if camping is your cup of tea, load up the Yugo with plenty of pork 'n' beans and other enticing entrees and head for the mountains of Tuttle Creek for a rock-'em sock-'em weekend of roughing it. Many students already know of this little activity, but unless you do it the right way, it isn't worth your time.

Jon BALMER

In order to take full advantage of this rugged escapade, one must pack the camping essentials: marshmallows, hotdogs, flashlights, sizable tents, thick, wool socks and condiments galore.

Where does one nab these condiments, you say? By just stopping at your local McDonald's or other area fast-food haven, you can pick up little packets of all the mustard and ketchup packets you'll ever need to flavorize the fireside cookings of hotdogs or burgers. Don't limit yourself to these grubs, however, because the morning meal plan can be even more exciting. Just try serving up a batch of flame-tempered scrambled eggs, and you will realize the true capabilities of your outdoors side.

If you wish to abstain from smelling like smoke for the weekend, there are plenty of closer sporting options. By donning a leather helmet and a nice pair of knickers, you can re-enact the glories of old school football in historic Memorial Stadium. Just round up some cohorts ready to relive the past, and you've got football action in a really cool stadium. You can envision yourself as one of the great purple-clad warriors of the past and, in the process, stay psyched for the upcoming battles of K-State's modern-day Cats.

Elsewhere in Mannytown, battles of another kind can be fought at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. Within the isolated cubes of the racquetball courts, you can take in a game based on hitting a little blue ball really hard. After learning the basics of this game, you will soon be dashing from side to side, walloping the ball against every wall possible.

Just be careful not to get too involved, because one misdirected shot of fury could drop your challenger and produce a nice welt, courtesy of your targeting. If you don't fashion yourself as a racquetball player, perhaps rugby will satisfy your craving. If you can't play on the club team, all you need is a rugby ball and some lads and lasses ready to grind it out. This sport is a wee bit physical, so if you don't like scrumming it out on the grass, you might want to pass. But if it is your game, a grassy field can provide hours of good, smash-mouth excitement sure to keep you on track for the KU contest.

If none of these suggestions have filled your weekend void, perhaps the best thing to do is to get a headstart on your Sunflower Showdown game-wear accessories. Choose the right body-paint combinations, get a giant Powercat-devouring-a-Jayhawk tattoo, begin designing your sign, or just think of some KU-taunting chants. All of this can be done while watching other schools duking it out on the tube, so the weekend will not pass by as a wasted two days.

There are many other Manhattan mysteries just waiting to be discovered out there, so don't limit yourself to my feeble suggestions. Go out and conquer new terrain, scale large objects or just run like a madman up and down Aggieville, chanting, "Can't wait to beat them Hawks!" Just get out and do something, because this little area that is college headquarters has much more than just Taco Huts and Vistaburgers to offer.

Dear Sooners, Many thanks

Lockett

- Wildcats' winning began with Sooners overlooking Tulsa native Kevin Lockett.

BRENT STOVER
contributing writer

About the only thing Kevin Lockett didn't do Saturday against Oklahoma was win the Heisman Trophy.

What he did do was put up Heisman-like numbers. And he did it against the school that overlooked him coming out of high school — a fact his brother in the stands reminded him of before the game.

"He just gave me a little extra incentive before the game," Lockett said.

"He told me, 'Hey, remember this is OU, you know. They didn't recruit you.'"

With his first catch, coming late in the first quarter, Lockett set the K-State career receptions record with 180. That was just the beginning.

He went on to catch 12 passes on the day for 157 yards, both career highs.

Lockett's 12 receptions left him just one short of the school record for most catches in a game.

"I don't think it's really hit me yet," Lockett said. "I don't think it'll really hit me until maybe when my career is done here."

The game marked the 40th in a row, in which Lockett has caught a pass. It was the 25th-straight outing, in which he has made at least two receptions.

Lockett found holes in the Oklahoma secondary all game long, usually underneath the Sooner zone defense.

"We did a good job, early in the game, when they were playing man-to-man, of getting open and hitting some passes," Lockett said. "That kind of forced them to play a little bit more zone, than maybe they were wanting to try to do."

The Oklahoma secondary took away the sideline patterns so the Wildcat receivers did the next obvious pattern, utilizing the middle of the field.

That gave Lockett the opportunity to do some things after he caught the ball.

"They were worried about us hitting some routes down the boundary," he said. "The coverages they were playing a lot of the times opened up the middle, and that's why myself and a lot of the other receivers caught some passes over the middle."

Lockett has won all four games against Oklahoma in his college career.

However, the Tulsa, Okla., native saved his best game for his last meeting between the Cats and the Sooners.

"Personally, for me to have a big game, it just kind of makes them realize, 'Hey, maybe in the future we've got to start looking at the Oklahoma recruits a little bit better.'"

That's not bad advice, coming from the best receiver in K-State history.

KEVIN LOCKETT, K-State senior wide receiver, catches a touchdown pass just out of reach for University of Oklahoma defensive back Mike Woods during Saturday's 42-35 victory at KSU Stadium. Lockett caught 12 passes for 157 yards against the Sooners, including this touchdown receptions.

Although the survey does not list salaries in order from highest paid to lowest paid, information is easy to find.

The survey is published every three months, starting in January. The survey does not include bonuses, fringe benefits or overtime rates.

According to the latest salary survey from September 1996, some of the highest paid majors are health science, pharmacy, electrical engineering, agricultural engineering, chemical engineering, investment banking, and actuarial and management information systems.

"The benefit to the student or job-seeker is their ability to compare from one quarter to another how many offers are made and the percentage changes over time," Fraser said. "They can measure what the range is."

The salary survey lists combine data for men and women but also lists them separately.

The survey also has separate listings for bachelor's, master's and doctoral degrees.

Some majors are listed several times, but all majors are listed according to curriculum. Majors may also be listed by functional areas.

Curriculums on the survey lists are business, communications, education, home economics, humanities and social sciences, engineering, agriculture and natural resources, computer sciences, health sciences, and other sciences.

How much money can a graduate make?

SENATE

"The president must adopt a bully-pulpit kind of stance and increase the penalties for drug trafficking," Roberts said.

Many students and U.S. citizens are also concerned about government control of health care.

Rosile said the subsidizing of health care is just an added expense for tax payers.

"The government should not subsidize health care. They should get the hell out, especially the federal government," Rosile said. "This program accelerates medical costs."

Thompson said a lot of people can't afford health care and someone needs to help them. She said people who need health care should get a good job so they can pay for their own health insurance.

"I want to put the Medicare system back on solid ground and cut the paperwork," Thompson said.

Roberts said health care must be affordable for those who wish to have it.

"The only way to do this is to use tax credits for long-term care and provide a safety net so others can have health care," Roberts said.

Other government subsidies also cause debate among the candidates.

"Welfare should be totally at the discretion of the state," Marney said.

> "Federal welfare should be abolished. That's bullshit. The states will be better if they have money left in the state."
> • STEVEN ROSILE
> LIBERTARIAN PARTY CANDIDATE

For the most part, Rosile agreed with his opponent. "Federal welfare should be abolished. That's bullshit," Rosile said. "The states will be better if they have money left in the state."

Thompson and Roberts are the forerunners, even though there are two other candidates in the race.

Thompson said she thought her experience as state treasurer gave her great experience toward this Senate seat. She said she wanted voters to just look at what she has done in the past.

"I have proven that I can balance a budget," Thompson said. "As state treasurer I doubled production and cut the budget by 4percent, and this created $200 million in non-tax revenue."

Roberts said he wanted voters to look at the bills that have passed while he has been in Congress, all of which he proposed.

"I have been able to achieve bipartisan reform in my days in Congress," Roberts said. "I have the right kind of experience, and with my record I can better Kansas."

months after graduation. This loan can never have an outstanding balance more than $1,000 and requires a co-signer.

Students may also be able to change their classification for need-based financial aid by claiming themselves independent of their parents. This is based on several questions on the financial aid application. If students were born prior to 1973, were in the military, are in a program beyond a bachelor's degree, are married, are an orphan or was a ward of the court, or if the student has a dependent child, they may qualify to file the application as an independent.

Moeder said students can appeal this ruling and in some cases have it overturned, making them independent and eligible for need-based aid.

"I always suggest to every student that they apply for federal aid at least one time to find out where they stand in the process," Moeder said. "Students should never let someone tell them not to apply because they will never qualify. They should just go through the process and let the federal government tell them where they stand."

PUMPKINS

are dry and light brown, they are done, but let them cool before eating.

Once the seeds are removed, the pumpkin can be cooked. There are three ways to cook pumpkins. They can be boiled, baked or microwaved. To boil pumpkins, cube and cook in a covered pot with 1 inch of boiling water for 20-25 minutes or until tender. Drain the water and mash the cubes.

To bake the pumpkin, cut it in half, place the halves cut side down in a shallow baking dish with 1/4 cup water, and cover with foil. Bake at 350 degrees Fahrenheit until tender; you can test it with a fork. Take it from the oven, let it cool, and scoop the flesh from the skin. Then mash it.

Microwaving a pumpkin is easy, too. Cut the pumpkin in half, puncture the skin of the pumpkin, and put it in a microwave roasting bag, or place in a shallow, microwave-safe dish, cut side down. Add 3 tablespoons of water and cover with plastic wrap, leaving a small vent for steam. Microwave on high 15 to 20 minutes or until tender, and rotate the dish once or twice. Once the pumpkin cools, scoop out the pulp, and mash.

OK, you're finished with the pumpkin. Now what do you do with it?

PUMPKIN PANCAKES

For breakfast, add 1/2 cup cooked pumpkin to 2 cups pancake mix, 3/4 teaspoon pumpkin-pie spice, and eggs and milk according to package directions. If batter is too thick, add 1 to 2 teaspoons more milk.

You can also stir two tablespoons of pumpkin into a serving of hot oatmeal and add brown sugar and cinnamon.

PUMPKIN SOUP

For lunch, try pumpkin, potato and onion soup.

In a medium saucepan, empty one can of cream of potato soup. Gradually add 2 cups milk, then stir in 1 cup solidly packed pumpkin. Add 1/2 cup chopped onion, 1/4 teaspoon salt, 1/8 teaspoon pepper and 1/8 teaspoon ground nutmeg. Bring to a boil while stirring frequently, then reduce heat and cover. Simmer for 5 minutes. This recipe yields 4 cups, or 4-6 servings.

PUMPKIN CAKE

Pumpkin cake, instead of pie, might be nice for a change.

Mix 1/2 cup chopped dates, 1/2 cup chopped walnuts and 2 tablespoons sifted flour, then set aside. Melt 1/4 cup butter over low heat, and blend in 1 cup packed brown sugar. Remove from heat. Stir in 2/3 cup cooked pumpkin and 1 teaspoon vanilla. Beat in 2 eggs, one at a time.

Sift 1/2 cup flour with 1/2 teaspoon each baking powder, cinnamon and nutmeg plus 1/4 teaspoon each ginger and soda.

Add to pumpkin mixture, and mix thoroughly. Stir in dates and nuts, and turn onto a greased 9- by 1-1/2-inch round baking pan. Bake in 350° F oven for 25 minutes. Serve warm with whipped cream. Yields 8 servings.

OTHER USES

Those pumpkins make excellent candleholders. Hollow them out, put a little jar inside, and stick a candle in the jar. Or fill the jar with water, and add mums and decorative leaves.

The information and recipes in this story were supplied by the Riley County Extension Service.

For more pumpkin recipes, just go to the Riley County Extension Office, second floor, County Office Building, behind the courthouse in downtown Manhattan.

Artist adds sculpture to West Stadium

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

The West Stadium drive-by sculpture garden is part outdoor workshop and part outdoor gallery.

Artist Robert Harrison will add to the collection this week when he conducts a sculpture-building workshop with students.

A native of Helena, Mont., Harrison will work with students today through Saturday in the workshop. Harrison will also present a slide lecture on his art today in the K-State Student Union Little Theatre.

Anna Holcombe, head of the Department of Art, said Harrison specializes in large-scale sculpture, not necessarily outdoor sculpture.

She said she heard from other colleagues about successful workshops with Harrison at other universities and thought it would be a good experience for K-State students.

"We looked at this as a real educational way the students could work with an artist instead of just seeing their slides," Holcombe said.

Holcombe said she was initially introduced to Harrison's work while on sabbatical in Helena.

Harrison visited campus in the spring in order to prepare an initial design for the workshop, although the finished design will mutate over the course of the workshop.

Pirates! The Ballet

Performers pirouette across McCain stage, modern ballet brings audience fits of laughter review by Ashley Celler • photo by Clif Palmberg

I have never seen a ballet performance quite like "Pirates! The Ballet." Although it was predominantly a ballet performance, it included several other types of singing and dancing.

The ballet opened with four opera singers dressed as audience members roaring into the auditorium, acting as if they could not find their seats. The audience was laughing, and I could tell this would not be a typical ballet.

The story is about a boy named Frederic, who was forced into becoming a pirate through a misunderstanding by his hard-of-hearing nurse. He is about to turn 21, when his indenture to the pirates will be over. In addition, he has fallen in love with the daughter of the major general, Mabel.

The opera singers sat on either side of the stage in seats as if they were sitting in the audience. They acted as narrators throughout the show, commentating on what was going on in each scene.

The lyrics were very funny and unlike a lot of opera music, and the words were easy for the audience to understand. The singers/narrators added flavor and humor to the show, and made it even more interesting to watch with their constant discussion.

The choreographer, Daryl Gray, combined different dance styles with ballet and used these different types of dance to define each character.

For example, the opening scene introduced all of the pirates, and from the dances they performed, the audience formed an idea about their personalities. There was hip-hop and funk dancing, and they used a lot of flips and outrageous movements to illustrate their humorous and devious personalities. The pirates' bright costumes also gave the impression they were not evil pirates.

Even though every character was entertaining to watch, my favorite characters were the police officers. Their movements and costumes reminded me of Charlie Chaplin, with their canes and little black hats, and the way they walked, with their feet turned out and their heads bobbing to the music. Their dance routines included tap, acrobatic flips and funk moves.

I wasn't sure how they were going to put all the dance styles together and make it work, but it was fun to watch.

Gray is an incredible choreographer. He combined different aspects of the show and made the contrasting dance styles flow together.

My favorite set was a night scene with realistic stars and a moon. The sets were subtle, but they were pretty and complemented the dance scenes.

So much acting can be illustrated through dancing, even ballet, which is thought of as so graceful and conservative. I was pleasantly surprised by this entertaining performance.

PIRATES CHEER and celebrate as they entertain the McCain Auditorium audience. Sunday night in "Pirates! The Ballet." The singers and dancers are members of the Queensland Ballet, from Queensland, Australia. Their performance at K-State was a stop on their American tour.

Disabled vote their health needs, seek ways to research candidates

KEENE, N.H. — Mary Stark-weather has just one question for Bill Clinton: Will his bridge to the 21st century be wheelchair-accessible?

Starkweather, 29, suffered a head injury at 18, and now moves around in an electric wheelchair. This year she'll do something she's never done before — exercise her right to vote.

At a recent workshop for disabled people who want to learn more about voting, Starkweather said it is difficult to get information on candidates. Sometimes she has trouble getting in the door at campaign offices and, once she is there, people seem reluctant to talk to her, she said.

Some suggest she call for information or read campaign literature, but Starkweather said it's easier for her to understand words spoken to her face than those said over the phone or written down.

"From the paper to my brain it gets lost," she said in halting speech.

Monadnock Developmental Services, a nonprofit agency, conducted the workshop, which had seven participants. Only about 30 agencies nationwide conduct voting workshops for the disabled, according to the Americans with Disabilities Vote, a national nonprofit group in Washington.

For most of the participants, next month will be the first time they cast their votes.

"This is very important for us ... having places like here to come learn about issues that are important to us," said Jeannine Snyder, 38, a workshop participant who serves on the board of Monadnock Services.

"We want so much to be a part of a society where we're always trying to fit in someplace," she said.

Snyder had filled out an absentee ballot but attended the workshop because she wanted to learn.

"It's my second time voting, but it's still very confusing," she said.

Starkweather said she decided to vote this year because she wants to help elect candidates who will think about the needs of the disabled.

"I like to stand up for the people that are handicapped and who need help with our talking, walking or thinking," she said.

The two-session workshop addressed why the disabled should vote, issues affecting this year's election, how to register and what happens at polling places.

At the end, Starkweather, Snyder and the others cast practice votes in a booth that, although wheelchair-accessible, could not accommodate all types of wheelchairs.

It was especially troublesome for those who needed help filling out their ballots.

After the practice session, the staff tallied the results.

"Clinton won by a landslide," staff member Gail Connelly proclaimed. "Actually, it was unanimous."

The Governor's Commission on Disability sent out 6,600 newsletters featuring interviews with gubernatorial candidates on managed care, disability benefits and other issues affecting the disabled, Director Michael Jenkins said.

Architecture thesis exhibition show in gallery

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

The connection between sculpture and urban planning becomes a physical reality in a new art exhibit in Seaton Hall's Chang Gallery.

"The Relationship of Form and Space in Producing Urban Morphology: A Study of Analogy of Body in Sculpture and in City" is a complex undertaking for a gallery show.

The show, Tali Cohen's master of architecture thesis exhibition, breeds its complexity from the point that it balances between an art exhibit and an architectural exploration.

Cohen's connective tissue between the two strains of art and design is a comparison of negative space in the sculptor Henry Moore's reclining figures and the urban plan of the Italian town of Siena.

The project started with Cohen's studies during an architecture program in Italy during spring 1995.

"I discovered a medieval hill town, and it was fascinating to me," Cohen said. "I wanted to study it."

When she came back to K-State, she had decided to change her graduate thesis and embark on a comparison of sculptural forms and the negative and positive spaces of the city plan.

First, however, Cohen had to learn the art of ceramic sculpture.

"The sculptures in the gallery are the results of 1-1/2 years of hard work," she said. "I discovered clay in Italy, and I wanted to explore with it more.

"I went to the art department and took ceramics courses — that's how this all came together."

It also helped to have Anna Holcombe, head of the Art Department and an accomplished sculptor in her own right, as a graduate adviser, although similarities between Holcombe's and Cohen's work are few and far between.

Picking Moore's sculpture as the touchstone for the project is obvious.

Moore's own works are masterpieces of form and complexity and negative and positive spatial relationships.

Cohen worked from scanned images of Moore's sculpture, having no three-dimensional example for her use.

Similarly, the voids of the city plan of Siena used for comparison are taken from overhead photographic plans of the city.

Combining these two two-dimensional pieces to create the three-dimensional sculptures, which are an amalgam of the two, is the intuitive brilliance of Cohen's work.

Cohen said her thesis show differs from an MFA show in that artists are only required an artist statement, while she has prepared a companion document which explains the concept and process of the show in great detail.

For those with less patience for reading, the show still stands alone as an exhibit of sculpture.

"It takes time," Cohen admits. "I'm not expecting everybody to come into this show and understand everything.

"It's a very abstract experience."

The sculptural pieces by themselves are white, giving them a somewhat skeletal appearance, albeit a fragmented, unnatural skeleton.

Cohen said there was a desire for color, but it distracted the form of the pieces too much.

"Their power rests in their formlessness," she said.

The elegance of each piece is created by the brittle thinness of the clay used and the metal stands elevating them.

"I wanted to keep the delicate thickness of the material — maybe to defy gravity," Cohen said. "I wanted to make the impression they are floating."

Cohen said she wanted to create the feeling of a vessel containing something, in this case a void.

What of the practical quality of this design process?

"I consider the process open-ended," she said. "The forms are in a state of becoming and transforming. I'm not redesigning the city, but I'm offering a different way of looking at the city. This project changed my perspective about everything.

"The void is the cavity in the city, and that is what my sculptures are trying to propose."

The master of Architecture Thesis Exhibition of Tali Cohen is in Seaton Hall's Chang Gallery until November 1.

Chang Gallery hours are Monday through Friday 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Car fire aftermath

CARLOS DOTSON, Junction City resident, holds his daughter, Mercedez Dotson, as the Riley County Fire Department puts out a fire in the 1989 Mercury Tracer the Dotsons had been passengers in. The car, owned and driven by Daryl Jackson, Junction City resident, caught fire early Monday afternoon on Kansas Highway 18 one mile east of Ogden.

Jackson said the breaks went out, and it felt like something had blown up under the car, but because the car was traveling up a hill, he was able to stop, and the passengers were able to get out.

Doug Messer, Riley County assistant fire chief, said it is unknown what caused the fire.

"I couldn't say for sure," Messer said. "There is indication that the problem was in the fuel line or fuel filter, but I can't say for sure, because there was so much damage."

Theresa Dotson, Mercedez's mother and passenger in the car, said the car exploded minutes after they got out of the car.

"We stepped out and the car blew up behind us," Theresa Dotson said. "It was just like we were in the movies."

Gardeners beware: winter lurks, saving roses requires preparation

JANN STOUGH
staff reporter

As the cold of winter begins to set in, it's time to put the roses to bed. To have a healthy rose garden in the spring, it's important to take proper care of the flowers before winter.

"Once your plants are dormant, you can put them to bed in early November," said Alice Leduc, professor in horticulture forestry and recreational resources.

Plants go dormant after the first big freeze, Leduc said.

"Water the plants really well before the ground freezes. Then wait until it gets to be 28 to 30 degrees at night, when you see the tops to start to get dry and wilt," Lesa Sailor, Blueville Nursery manager, said. "After this, growers can start to winterize their roses."

The first step in preparing the roses is to cut each individual plant down to about 3 feet, Leduc said. This will keep the wind from whipping at the plants and breaking branches off.

"We use a mixture of soil and mulching material to make a mound at the base of each rose," Leduc said.

When choosing the mulching material, use caution.

"The biggest mistake growers can make is to use leaves and grass as compost to make the mound," Sailor said. "These will mat down and shed water away from the plant."

Leduc said the mound should be at least 12 inches wide and 12 inches in diameter. This will help maintain an even temperature for the plant throughout winter.

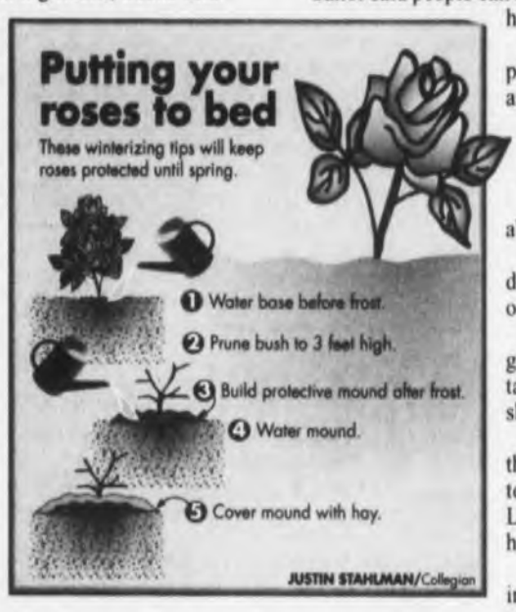
"After we've formed the mound, we'll come back in and cover with prairie hay to help insulate the soil and keep the ground temperature from getting too cold," Leduc said.

The mound at the base of the rose bush is important, but it won't help unless the plant gets water, said Phyllis Lamont, project manager at Horticulture Forestry and Recreational Services.

Sailor said people can also use a rose collar or rose cone to help keep the mulch in place.

"With the cone, you should still put a mound at the base of the plant, and you should be careful not to let too much moisture accumulate in the cone and mold the stems," Sailor said.

The last step is to just forget about the roses.



"After the roses are put to bed, don't worry about them until the first of April," Leduc said.

In the spring, the mound can be gently removed, as long as care is taken not to break off any new shoots, Leduc said.

"To encourage new growth after the winter, we prune our plants down to 10 inches above the ground," Leduc said. "This will help you get healthier, larger flowers."

Leduc said the cost of winterizing roses varies. It all depends on the mulch and the number of plants.

Leduc said the K-State rose garden, on the north side of Throckmorton Hall, has about 500 individual rose plants to winterize.

GM continues contract negotiations with union

DETROIT (AP) — The United Auto Workers said Monday it has no immediate plans to strike General Motors Corp. despite the failure of weekend contract negotiations. Talks resume Tuesday.

UAW president Stephen Yokich said he is committed to reaching an agreement at the bargaining table and that GM's 215,000 workers would continue to work.

Negotiators met for about 17 hours at GM's headquarters, recessing just before 2 a.m. Monday, two hours after the union's strike deadline.

Once the deadline passed, the union's extended contract expired and it was free to call a strike. Union locals can still strike with the national union's approval provided they don't have a local agreement in effect.

"These locals are going to have to take a look at it themselves," Yokich told a news conference at union headquarters.

Neither the union nor GM would say what was holding up the talks, though Yokich said several locals had "some sticky issues" that UAW leaders decided to resolve before signing the national pact.

GM chief negotiator Gerald A. Knechtel repeated what he had said all weekend: There had been significant progress on many issues, but GM remained committed to securing the flexibility it needs to become more competitive.

KENT GLASSCOCK
STATE REPRESENTATIVE
Leadership that Works

Kent worked hard with Republicans & Democrats to:	As a result, those of us in the 62nd District received:
✓ Cut taxes and manage the budget.	$1.3 billion in tax cuts and a state budget that actually went down!
✓ Provide needed support for K-State and Public Education.	Salary increases plus a share of tuition increases at K-State along with $60 million for Farrell Library and classroom construction. $113 per pupil increase for public schools.
✓ Build a stronger economy and promote job growth.	$500 million back in the Kansas economy through a moratorium on unemployment taxes and enhanced tax credits for job creation.
✓ Reform state government.	Repeal of hundreds of unneeded rules and regulations, welfare reform to keep assistance payments from being spent on drugs, a tough new Juvenile Justice Authority, and a 5 percent reduction in the state workforce while protecting K-State and education employees.

Kent Glasscock provides leadership we can count on in Topeka. He deserves our vote on November 5 and we deserve his strong leadership for our district and our state.

Jewell cleared in Olympic Park bombing

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — For 88 days, Richard Jewell stoically stood his ground, professing his innocence while he was branded the FBI's chief suspect in the Olympic Park pipe bombing. Finally cleared by prosecutors, the weight of suspicion lifted, he let his guard down and cried.

The tears came Monday as he recalled the bodies of friends injured by the blast and when he turned to his mother, who buried her head in her hand. "Mom, thanks for standing by me and believing in me," he said, his voice choking. "I love you."

Another emotion — anger — came out as he lashed out at reporters and investigators who had depicted him as the man who brought the specter of terrorism to the Summer Olympics.

But at the end of the press conference, he calmly delivered a message.

"I thank God that it has now ended, and that you now know what I have known all along," he said in a firm voice. "I am an innocent man."

The July 27 bomb blast at Centennial Olympic Park — the informal gathering place for spectators at the Games — killed one woman outright, was blamed for a cameraman's death and injured more than 100.

Jewell initially was hailed as a hero for alerting authorities to a suspicious knapsack and helping to evacuate the area. He gave numerous interviews until, three days after the bombing, the Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported he was a suspect.

Reporters staked out his apartment complex for days and followed his every move, while Jewell refused to comment. His mother, Barbara, in August tearfully begged President Clinton to end the nightmare.

"I felt like a hunted animal, followed constantly, waiting to be killed," Jewell said. "The media said I fit the profile of a lone bomber. That was a lie. The media said I was a frustrated police wanna-be. That was a lie. I was, then and now, a law-enforcement officer."

On Saturday, federal prosecutors gave Jewell's attorneys a letter clearing him as a suspect. To Jewell and his attorneys, the letter was a weak attempt at an apology.

"While the government can tell you that I am an innocent man, the government's letter cannot give me back my good name or my reputation," Jewell said.

"In their mad rush to fulfill their own personal agendas, the FBI and the media almost destroyed me and my mother."

His lawyers plan to sue the Journal-Constitution and NBC for comments Tom Brokaw made in early news reports about the bombing. The Journal-Constitution on Monday defended its stories about Jewell as accurate and appropriate.

A lawsuit against the FBI is being considered.

"I don't have enough words, I can't cuss enough, to describe the way they have treated this man," said Watson Bryant, one of Jewell's lawyers.

He also lashed out at the FBI about affidavits released Monday that were used to gain warrants for searches of Jewell's home and other property in the days after the bombing, saying they are full of half-truths.

The papers, which a judge had ordered unsealed with names blacked out, quote several acquaintances speaking of Jewell's fascination with police work. They also quote witnesses who saw Jewell in the vicinity of the explosion, but none who saw him handle the bomb.

"I think the American public should be shocked at how little it takes for the government to get a search warrant," Bryant said. "Who are these people?"

The FBI obtained a warrant to search Richard Jewell's property by telling a judge that he was fascinated by cop stuff and had a cursory knowledge of bombs.

But the 10-page affidavit unsealed Monday contains no hard evidence that Jewell had anything to do with the explosion at Centennial Olympic Park except being at the scene as a security guard.

"I think it is very disturbing to the American public that with all the resources the FBI had ... the FBI did not have a solid idea who committed this crime," Bryant said Monday. "This affidavit is filled with half-truths and filled with lies." FBI spokesman Jay Spadafore declined to respond.

As he did after the bombing, Jewell again Monday tried to place the hero label on others, such as officers who placed their bodies between the package and the crowd.

"When the explosion occurred, I saw my fellow officers and friends flying through the air. I saw people lying on the ground hurt, badly hurt," he said in a trembling voice. "I moved people away from the unattended package and I evacuated people from the sound tower. All I did was my job."

What Jewell now wants is a chance to restore his image and to try to pursue a career in the work that he loves.

"Anybody who knew me knows I could not hurt another person," Jewell said. "I love people. I love children. I am a public servant. ... I don't look at law enforcement as a job."

Cuban investors attack U.S. sanctions, lawsuits

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LUXEMBOURG — Americans who sue European companies doing business in Cuba face countersuits in European courts, after the European Union voted Monday to retaliate against a U.S. law it deemed unfair.

The measure allows Europeans to countersue to recoup damages assessed in U.S. courts under the Helms-Burton Act.

The new law also strikes back at U.S. legislation allowing Washington to slap trade sanctions on foreign companies investing in the oil sectors in Libya and Iran.

"Equipped with this weapon of self-defense, we will be much better able to get a genuine negotiation from a fair and balanced position," said EU Foreign Trade Commissioner Sir Leon Brittan.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Nicholas Burns said it was inappropriate for the Europeans to retaliate.

"We'd like to see more talk from the Europeans about democracy in Cuba," Burns said.

The accord was reached after a last-minute compromise with Denmark, which opposed proposals for retaliatory EU trade legislation, arguing it could mean an erosion of Danish sovereignty. Britain was vague about the compromise.

Signed by President Clinton in March, the Helms-Burton Act allows U.S. companies to sue foreign firms that use property taken from American businesses after Cuba's 1959 revolution. It also bans executives of such companies from entering the United States.

Under the EU legislation, which takes effect immediately, European nationals who are sued under Helms-Burton and lose in a U.S. court, can countersue in Europe to claw back the damages.

The legislation also requires European companies to notify the EU if an action is started against them. This is intended to discourage European companies from settling out of court in the United States.

Following a poll conducted by the Kansas State Collegian staff, these are the questions you said you wanted answered by the candidates. Other issues have been answered in a series of articles throughout the past weeks and can be found in the Electronic Collegian archives at (http://collegian.ksu.edu/election).

How do you define family values?
What is your stance on abortion?
What's more important, cutting the national debt or cutting taxes? Why?
Should the government subsidize health care?
Should the government help pay for college?
What should be done about drugs?
What should be done about welfare?
How important is protecting the environment compared with economic issues?
How much of a role should the United States play in foreign affairs?
How much power should the federal government have over the states?

president

* Bill Clinton

Bob Dole

Ross Perot

FAMILY. CLINTON. Our first challenge is to cherish our children and to strengthen America's families. Family is the foundation of American life. If we have stronger families, we will have a stronger America," Clinton said. DOLE. Dole said his values are love of God, country and family; commitment to honesty, decency and personal responsibility; and self-reliance tempered by a sense of community. He said he will use the bully pulpit of the presidency to speak out on important moral issues of the day. PEROT. No response.

ABORTION. CLINTON. Pro-choice. DOLE. Pro-life. PEROT. Perot said he is pro-choice. "The government should not intrude on a woman's personal decision to have an abortion. This is a choice that should be made between a woman and her god," he said.

TAXES. CLINTON. He said he is committed to balancing the budget while providing targeted tax cuts for education, child-rearing and home-buying. He said he will continue to work to open foreign markets to American goods. DOLE. He said his plan allows for a balanced budget and lower taxes, and it will balance the budget in six years. PEROT. Perot said Congress must pass a constitutional amendment that requires a balanced budget with deficit spending only in national emergencies. This will help reduce the national debt. Taxes should be reformed to begin paying off the $5.1-trillion national debt.

HEALTH. CLINTON. The government should subsidize health care through full funding of women's, infants' and children's programs to expand nutritional services for mothers and their children and working with states to expand Medicaid coverage to uninsured people. DOLE. Dole said he believes in offering subsidies to help low-income Americans by health insurance, but he does not think the government should take over the health-care industry. He said he supports protecting, improving and strengthening Medicare. PEROT. He said the government should not take any medical decision away from doctors and patients.

COLLEGE. CLINTON. He said government should pay for college through offering refundable tax credits to students in the first two years of college, calling for tax deductions for the cost of college tuition and training, increasing the work-study program, increasing minimum Pell Grants and offering $1,000 merit-based grants to the top 5 percent of high-school graduates. DOLE. He said government should help pay for college by increasing funding for student loans, keeping interest rates low for parents who take out loans for their children, increasing the maximum Pell Grant award for the most needy students and creating education investment accounts to encourage low- and middle-income parents to save for their children's college education. PEROT. No response.

DRUGS. CLINTON. He said he supports elevating the Office of National Drug Control Policy to full Cabinet-level status, developing a comprehensive drug-testing program for the federal criminal-justice system and increasing the number of border-patrol agents. DOLE. Dole said he would increase the war on drugs by spearheading the creation of community-based anti-drug coalitions, encouraging the entertainment industries to embrace a no-use, zero-tolerance message in the products aimed for America's youth and enhance the anti-drug role of the National Guard. PEROT. Perot said he would increase spending on addiction and educational programs, punish those who try to sell drugs with a strict sentence and establish an international treaty that the United States will fight drug production and smuggling anywhere in the western hemisphere.

WELFARE. CLINTON. He said he believes in granting states flexibility to reform their own welfare systems through waivers and ensuring work is a better deal than welfare by increasing the minimum wage and expanding the Earned Income Tax Credit. DOLE. Dole said his welfare-reform plan will allow maximum flexibility for states to implement reform by ending the federal entitlement, require able-bodied welfare recipients to find work within two years and put a five-year lifetime limit on welfare payments. PEROT. He said a job that pays well is the ultimate welfare reform. Perot said he does not believe in denying unwed mothers benefits. The government needs to stop sending jobs that pay well to other countries by signing agreements like NAFTA and GATT, he said.

ENVIRONMENT. CLINTON. He supports banning nuclear-weapons testing, requiring industries to disclose information about toxic releases and increasing the number of chemicals industries must report. He also proposes fighting attempts to close national parks and reforming the Wetlands and Endangered Species programs to protect the environment while lessening hurdles for homeowners. DOLE. Dole said he has voted for and helped pass every important piece of environmental-protection legislation in the past 25 years. He also said he will continue to support policies that keep the environment safe and clean, that protect property rights and allow states and local communities to meet their individual challenges. PEROT. Perot said preventing pollution is more cost-effective than cleaning it up. Regulation is not the answer, but providing individuals and businesses incentives to do the right things will help.

FOREIGN. CLINTON. "Where our interests and our values are at stake, and where we can make a difference, America must lead," Clinton said. DOLE. Dole said his goals are to maintain U.S. economic, political and military access to key regions. PEROT. No response.

POWER. CLINTON. He believes states should have the flexibility in reforming their Medicaid programs and the ability to apply for waivers to reform their own welfare programs. DOLE. Dole said he wants to allow states flexibility in redesigning their Medicaid and welfare programs, allow states the flexibility to stop welfare payments to unmarried teens and give states flexibility to meet the environmental challenges of their state. He said he carries a copy of the 10th Amendment around with him at all times. The 10th Amendment grants all powers not given to the federal government to the states. PEROT. No response.

John Frieden

Jim Ryun

Art Clack

FAMILY. FRIEDEN. It's important to have close families that help and support each other. Families should stay together, work together, worship together and love one another. We can't promote good family values by leaving people in helpless poverty. RYUN. They are defined by each family because every family has its own set of priorities. CLACK. Each individual has an obligation to do their best for themselves and their family. Those who don't will get bred out of the gene pool.

ABORTION. FRIEDEN. The question of abortion is best left to the woman, her family and her God. Most people don't want politicians interfering with that decision. RYUN. Pro-life. CLACK. It's your decision, right or wrong. If the government gets involved, we know force will be involved.

TAXES. FRIEDEN. The budget can be balanced if some hard choices are made. Once you begin dealing with the budget issue, you can pursue a common-sense tax-reduction program for the working class and small businesses. RYUN. We can balance the budget and take care of the debt with tax reduction. This will generate more jobs and more taxable revenue and provide for tax relief. CLACK. The government is a drag on the economy. We have to cut taxes, and we have to cut the deficit.

HEALTH. FRIEDEN. The government already subsidizes health care. We need to start considering some form of a national health-care plan. Health insurance is unaffordable or unavailable for too many people. RYUN. Medicare and Social Security must be preserved. Health insurance should travel with people when they lose or change jobs, offering coverage for a grace period. A greater percentage of health-care costs needs to be tax deductible for the self-employed. CLACK. No, the government should not subsidize health care. The more you get government out of health care, the cheaper it becomes.

COLLEGE. FRIEDEN. Any person wanting to continue their education shouldn't be denied access because of a lack of funding. Education is the best investment in the future. That investment includes student loans, Pell Grants and assistance to students that need help to move forward. RYUN. Student loans need to be available and ensured as an avenue for students to continue their education. CLACK. The government already pays for 80 percent of college because it taxes parents and many students so heavily they can't afford college. We want the government to reduce itself so that people have the money to educate themselves.

DRUGS. FRIEDEN. We need stronger enforcement and better efforts to slow the flow of drugs across our borders. That isn't a solution in and of itself. It must start at the local level with families and education. RYUN. We need responsible people in leadership who will fight drugs and provide programs that discourage drug use. CLACK. Legalize them. Prohibition doesn't work. That was proven with alcohol. Instead, prohibition makes it profitable. The large profits create violence among drug dealers over turf and money.

WELFARE. FRIEDEN. Something is wrong with a system that keeps families apart and discourages people from going to work. The welfare reform Congress passed seems to be a step in the right direction by placing people in jobs and keeping families together. There are concerns that it fails to meet the needs of children and needs to be monitored closely. RYUN. We need to provide people who have lost their jobs or are in an unfortunate situation of needing welfare a reasonable length of time, five years, for either retraining or finding another job. We need to provide help when people need it but not let them depend on it for life. CLACK. We need to reduce government taxation so people will be able to afford to take care of themselves instead of betting on the good nature of their neighbors.

ENVIRONMENT. FRIEDEN. We only have one environment, and we must preserve it. Public lands should not be privatized because they are an asset to the public and should be protected. We do need to work on environmental issues with some economic logic. RYUN. The environment is important and needs to be protected. We need to balance environmental concerns with reasonable scientific evidence and bring a little more reason into some of the Environmental Protection Agency requirements. CLACK. If we are really interested in preserving the environment, we will put the responsibility on the people closest to the problem and empower people to do what's right.

FOREIGN. FRIEDEN. The United States shouldn't be a worldwide policeman. From a military standpoint, when we intervene in some country's affairs, we need to have a clear focus and clear time frame for entering and leaving. Humanitarian and economic issues should be assessed case by case, but as a world leader we do have a responsibility. RYUN. If we have a set purpose for intervening in another country's affairs that is agreed upon by both houses of Congress and the president, then we should be there. If we are becoming a police force, then I have questions about our involvement. CLACK. People interact through dollars and bullets. As long as we interact with dollars, we should have as much involvement as we can afford while keeping our bullets to ourselves.

POWER. FRIEDEN. The federal government has a role to play, but they are in a position of trying to be all things to all people and they can't. They need to let states and local units of government make policy and handle programs they're in a better position to handle. RYUN. The federal government should return more power back to the states, allowing states to control certain decisions and economic issues. This gives the states a greater opportunity to serve the needs of the constituency. CLACK. Both state and federal governments should have what the Constitution says they should have, not what the courts interpret they should have.

u.s. senate (dole seat)

Jill Docking

Sam Brownback

FAMILY. DOCKING. "Government can help families by providing them with the tools they need to succeed in raising their kids -- such as safe neighborhoods, good schools and affordable access to college." BROWNBACK. Brownback said government does not set our cultural values, so it should reverse "anti-work and anti-family biases in our tax and welfare systems."

ABORTION. DOCKING. Docking said she is pro-choice. "I oppose federal funding of abortions, except for rape, incest and the life of the mother." BROWNBACK. Brownback said he opposes abortion other than in cases threatening the life of the mother, rape or incest.

TAXES. DOCKING. She said her first priority is a balanced budget. This is possible even with targeted tax relief. BROWNBACK. A member of the House Budget Committee, he cited his role in putting together a balanced budget plan. He said the tax code is unfair and should be "a flatter, fairer and simpler tax code -- one that rewards work and success rather than punishing it."

HEALTH. DOCKING. "I oppose creating a huge government program which would make radical changes to our health system. I do support balanced, incremental, cautious reform," she said. BROWNBACK. He said he advocates moderate, gradual reform, which would keep insurance companies from denying coverage for pre-existing conditions, guarantee portability of benefits from one job to the next, encourage medical savings accounts and allow full deductibility of health insurance for the self-employed.

COLLEGE. DOCKING. Docking said she wants to keep student loans strong, consider tax incentives and continue student grant programs. BROWNBACK. "The Republican Balanced Budget Plan increases the volume of student loans by 42 percent from 1996 to 2002," Brownback said.

DRUGS. DOCKING. She said she supports a two-pronged attack on drugs: first, tough punishment; and second, education and treatment. BROWNBACK. He said the federal government should support state and local efforts and education and treatment, as well as assisting in enforcement of anti-drug laws.

WELFARE. DOCKING. "We must reform the welfare system from one which has unfortunately encouraged dependency, into one which provides job training and education and places people in jobs," Docking said. BROWNBACK. Brownback said welfare should be handled by state and local government, which he said would "restore the traditions of individual responsibility, family stability, self-reliance and economic opportunity."

ENVIRONMENT. DOCKING. "I strongly oppose the reckless attempts of the current Congress to dismantle the many accomplishments of our environmental laws," she said. She said she is dedicated to environmental protection. BROWNBACK. "Economic growth is vital for environmental progress. It takes a healthy, growing economy to afford the technological mandates of environmental law. Furthermore, advances in technology, which benefit the overall economy, will also benefit the environment," he said.

FOREIGN. DOCKING. "The struggles for power in regions of the world, and the proliferation of weapons reinforce the importance of being attentive to our long-term defense needs and being involved in world affairs," Docking said. BROWNBACK. A member of the House International Affairs Committee, Brownback said he helped deal with Bosnia, North Korea and Haiti, among others. "In the Senate I would continue to pursue a policy of only committing U.S. troops when our strategic and vital interests are threatened," he said.

POWER. DOCKING. Docking said better communication is needed between the levels of government, but she said she is concerned that decentralization will shift tax burdens to the states. BROWNBACK. "Only what is allowed under the Constitution, which means the federal government has vastly too much power now," he said.

u.s. senate (kassebaum seat)

Sally Thompson

Pat Roberts

FAMILY. THOMPSON. Parents teaching children a strong work ethic in which the mother takes care of the children. ROBERTS. Two-parent family where love and respect is taught and there is a chance for economic opportunity.

ABORTION. THOMPSON. Pro-choice. ROBERTS. Pro-life.

TAXES. THOMPSON. We can cut both. We can balance the budget with leftover taxes. We can put tax credits on small-level businesses, take money from polluters and have plenty of money left over for education, Social Security and Medicare. ROBERTS. Both can really be done and need to be done, but I think cutting debt is more important, because we can't keep spending money we don't have to spend.

HEALTH. THOMPSON. People can't afford health care. Somebody needs to help them. ROBERTS. Government should be a partnership and provide a safety net so others can have health care.

COLLEGE. THOMPSON. Yes, through tax credits. The government needs to provide student loans. ROBERTS. Yes, government has a role to play in education.

DRUGS. THOMPSON. No solution other than keeping kids educated. We need to keep kids active and make them feel important. ROBERTS. The simple solution is to just say no. We can also increase the penalties from drug trafficking.

WELFARE. THOMPSON. The key is skilled job training for recipients and tax credits for small businesses. ROBERTS. Keep program at federal level so no one goes hungry and have a safety net. We also can put work incentives on and run better taxpayer and recipient programs.

ENVIRONMENT. THOMPSON. It's a part of economic issues. We need to start looking at the cost benefit. It's all about the future. We need to have clean air and water for the future. ROBERTS. We need to prioritize environmental response. The farm bill is the strongest environmental bill ever passed in Kansas. We need to work with the federal government using sound science.

FOREIGN. THOMPSON. We need to have a strong bond with the United Nations and help countries uphold democracy. Everybody needs to pay a fair share. ROBERTS. We need to safeguard the national interest, make foreign policy strong and predictable, and do a better job of addressing what our national interest actually is.

POWER. THOMPSON. As little as needed to maintain control at the local level. We should strive for a national framework of standards. ROBERTS. I hope it doesn't interfere at all. They shouldn't try to bankrupt local government.

questions

Following a poll conducted by the Kansas State Collegian staff, these are the questions you said you wanted answered by the candidates. Other issues have been answered in a series of articles throughout the past weeks and can be found in the Electronic Collegian archives at (http://collegian.ksu.edu/election).

Which is more important, lower property taxes or higher school funding? Why?
What should be done about welfare?
What is your stance on abortion?
How important is the environment when compared to economic issues? Why?
What is your specific stance on gun control?
How high do the regents universities rank in importance to funding? What is more important?

kansas senate 22

Ruth Schrum

* Lana Oleen

TAXES. SCHRUM. Believes sales tax and income tax should help with the burden on property tax. She says she believes in tax fairness. She said property taxes have been hit hard in Kansas for a long time. OLEEN. Said she believes there is a balance that can be reached. School funding is a priority, but, if watched closely, property taxes can go down while funding goes up. She said this has happened in Kansas in the past year.

WELFARE. SCHRUM. She believes people should work if they are able. She said some people cannot work, though, for a variety of different reasons. She said she believes in getting people involved and people taking responsibility for their life. OLEEN. She said she supports the new welfare reform and believes people should work if they can. She said Kansas is ahead of the game when it comes to welfare and believes people will be given more of an opportunity for jobs with the new reform.

ENVIRONMENT. SCHRUM. Did not address the economy but did say the environment is a very important issue. She said rivers in Kansas have gotten to the point at which canoeing and other activities are difficult to do because of unclean water. OLEEN. Says there must be a balance. We have the technology to make things better than what they were. Businesses must take responsibility for this.

GUN. SCHRUM. Supports the Brady Bill. She said she does not support concealed weapons. She said she believes, though, that guns in the home are fine. She does not want to worry hunters, though. OLEEN. She said she supports the current law and that she does not support the carrying of concealed weapons. She said guns for sport are fine.

REGENTS. SCHRUM. She said she does not support Washburn University's entrance into the regents system and feels the regents are very important to this district because of K-State. OLEEN. Does not support Washburn University's entrance into the Kansas Board of Regents. Believes the regents are a very important issue. She believes K-State is a priority, especially in District 22.

kansas house 66

* Sheila Hochhauser

Jeff Peterson

TAXES. HOCHHAUSER. She said she adequate funding for schools is the most important issue. The growth in the economy and growth in appraisal of property made up the difference, so schools are not affected adversely. PETERSON. Would not reduce property taxes that would be detrimental to education. His first priority is to a strong public-education system.

WELFARE. HOCHHAUSER. Supported a welfare-reform bill that would allow recipients to keep more of the earnings they made when they went to work and not have their benefits cut off completely. PETERSON. Supports extending the welfare program to the states.

ABORTION. HOCHHAUSER. pro-choice PETERSON. Supports current laws saying abortion is the mother's choice until the fetus can survive without her.

ENVIRONMENT. HOCHHAUSER. Said the two can be balanced, and specific cases merit different actions. PETERSON. Said he doesn't think this district would have that type of conflict. This is an area designated for business growth. Supports projects like the parks program.

GUN. HOCHHAUSER. Does not support concealed-carry law. PETERSON. Said this is a federal issue and supports the assault-weapons ban. Does not support a law permitting people to carry concealed weapons.

REGENTS. HOCHHAUSER. Said she has always viewed K-State as the premiere economic resource of this community and knew she would have to go to battle for K-State. PETERSON. Wants to help keep higher education strong statewide. "There's some need for strong leadership for higher education," he said.

kansas house 62

Robert Littrell

*Kent Glasscock

TAXES. LITTRELL. No. 1 priority is education. GLASSCOCK. There is no finer or more important issue than the capacity of Kansas to educate its brightest young people and prepare them for roles in the community so they can help build the collective future.

WELFARE. LITTRELL. This could create a large homeless population that would feed crime and social unrest. We have to make sure we don't get too punitive in these cases. GLASSCOCK. Said he agrees with the new legislation but thinks it will be challenging. Concerned about children in families who reach the five-year limit.

ABORTION. LITTRELL. Pro-choice. GLASSCOCK. Pro-choice.

ENVIRONMENT. LITTRELL. The environment is more important than economic issues. It's hard to measure natural beauty in economic terms. GLASSCOCK. There has to be a balance between industry and environmental preservation. We have to realize we don't have a pristine environment.

GUN. LITTRELL. More deaths have resulted from misuse of handguns than if they had not been available. GLASSCOCK. Favors concealed-carry law and strict gun regulations.

REGENTS. LITTRELL. Also favors regents funding and has strong loyalty to K-State. GLASSCOCK. Strongly supports funding Kansas Board of Regents institutions, especially K-State.

state board of education

Eloise Lynch

Scott Hill

DO YOU SUPPORT TEACHER LICENSURE, WHICH DOESN'T REQUIRE TEACHERS TO KNOW ABOUT ALL THE SUBJECTS THEY TEACH?

LYNCH. "If we were to do that, a person could teach physics or chemistry without having had physics or chemistry." HILL. This needs work, or schools will lose specialization.

DO YOU SUPPORT QUALITY PERFORMANCE ACCREDITATION, WHICH REQUIRES ALL SCHOOLS TO MEET CERTAIN STANDARDS?

LYNCH. Supports QPA, which she said makes schools accountable for teaching.

HILL. Opposed to QPA dictating all schools will be run in the same way, but supports the assessment testing aspect.

DO YOU SUPPORT CONSOLIDATION OF SCHOOLS?

LYNCH. Sovereignty lies with the state, and consolidation is sometimes in the best interest. HILL. Towns die when schools move away, and small schools are essential to rural atmosphere.

county commission

* Karen McCulloh

Bob Newsome

DO YOU SUPPORT A COUNTY ADMINISTRATOR, MANAGER OR FACILATOR POSITION?

McCULLOH. The county commission is basically a policy board. We make the decisions and are responsible for making sure they're executed. The county needs to create a position to execute these decisions. NEWSOME. I'm opposed to the concept for three reasons: One, it increases the cost of county government; two, the citizens and taxpayers have much less contact and influence with a county manager than they do their county commissioners; three, it increases the size of county government.

DO YOU SUPPORT THE PROPOSAL ON THE BALLOT FOR THE LEC?

McCULLOH. This is a good site. I always liked this site better in that it puts the police in the center of the community. You don't want to build the Taj Mahal, but you don't want to build something so cheap that you'll be paying for the maintenance for years. NEWSOME. I support the concept of a new jail, and I strongly support our police department. But Newsome is neutral about this proposal.

county clerk

Jan Galitzer

Rich Vargo

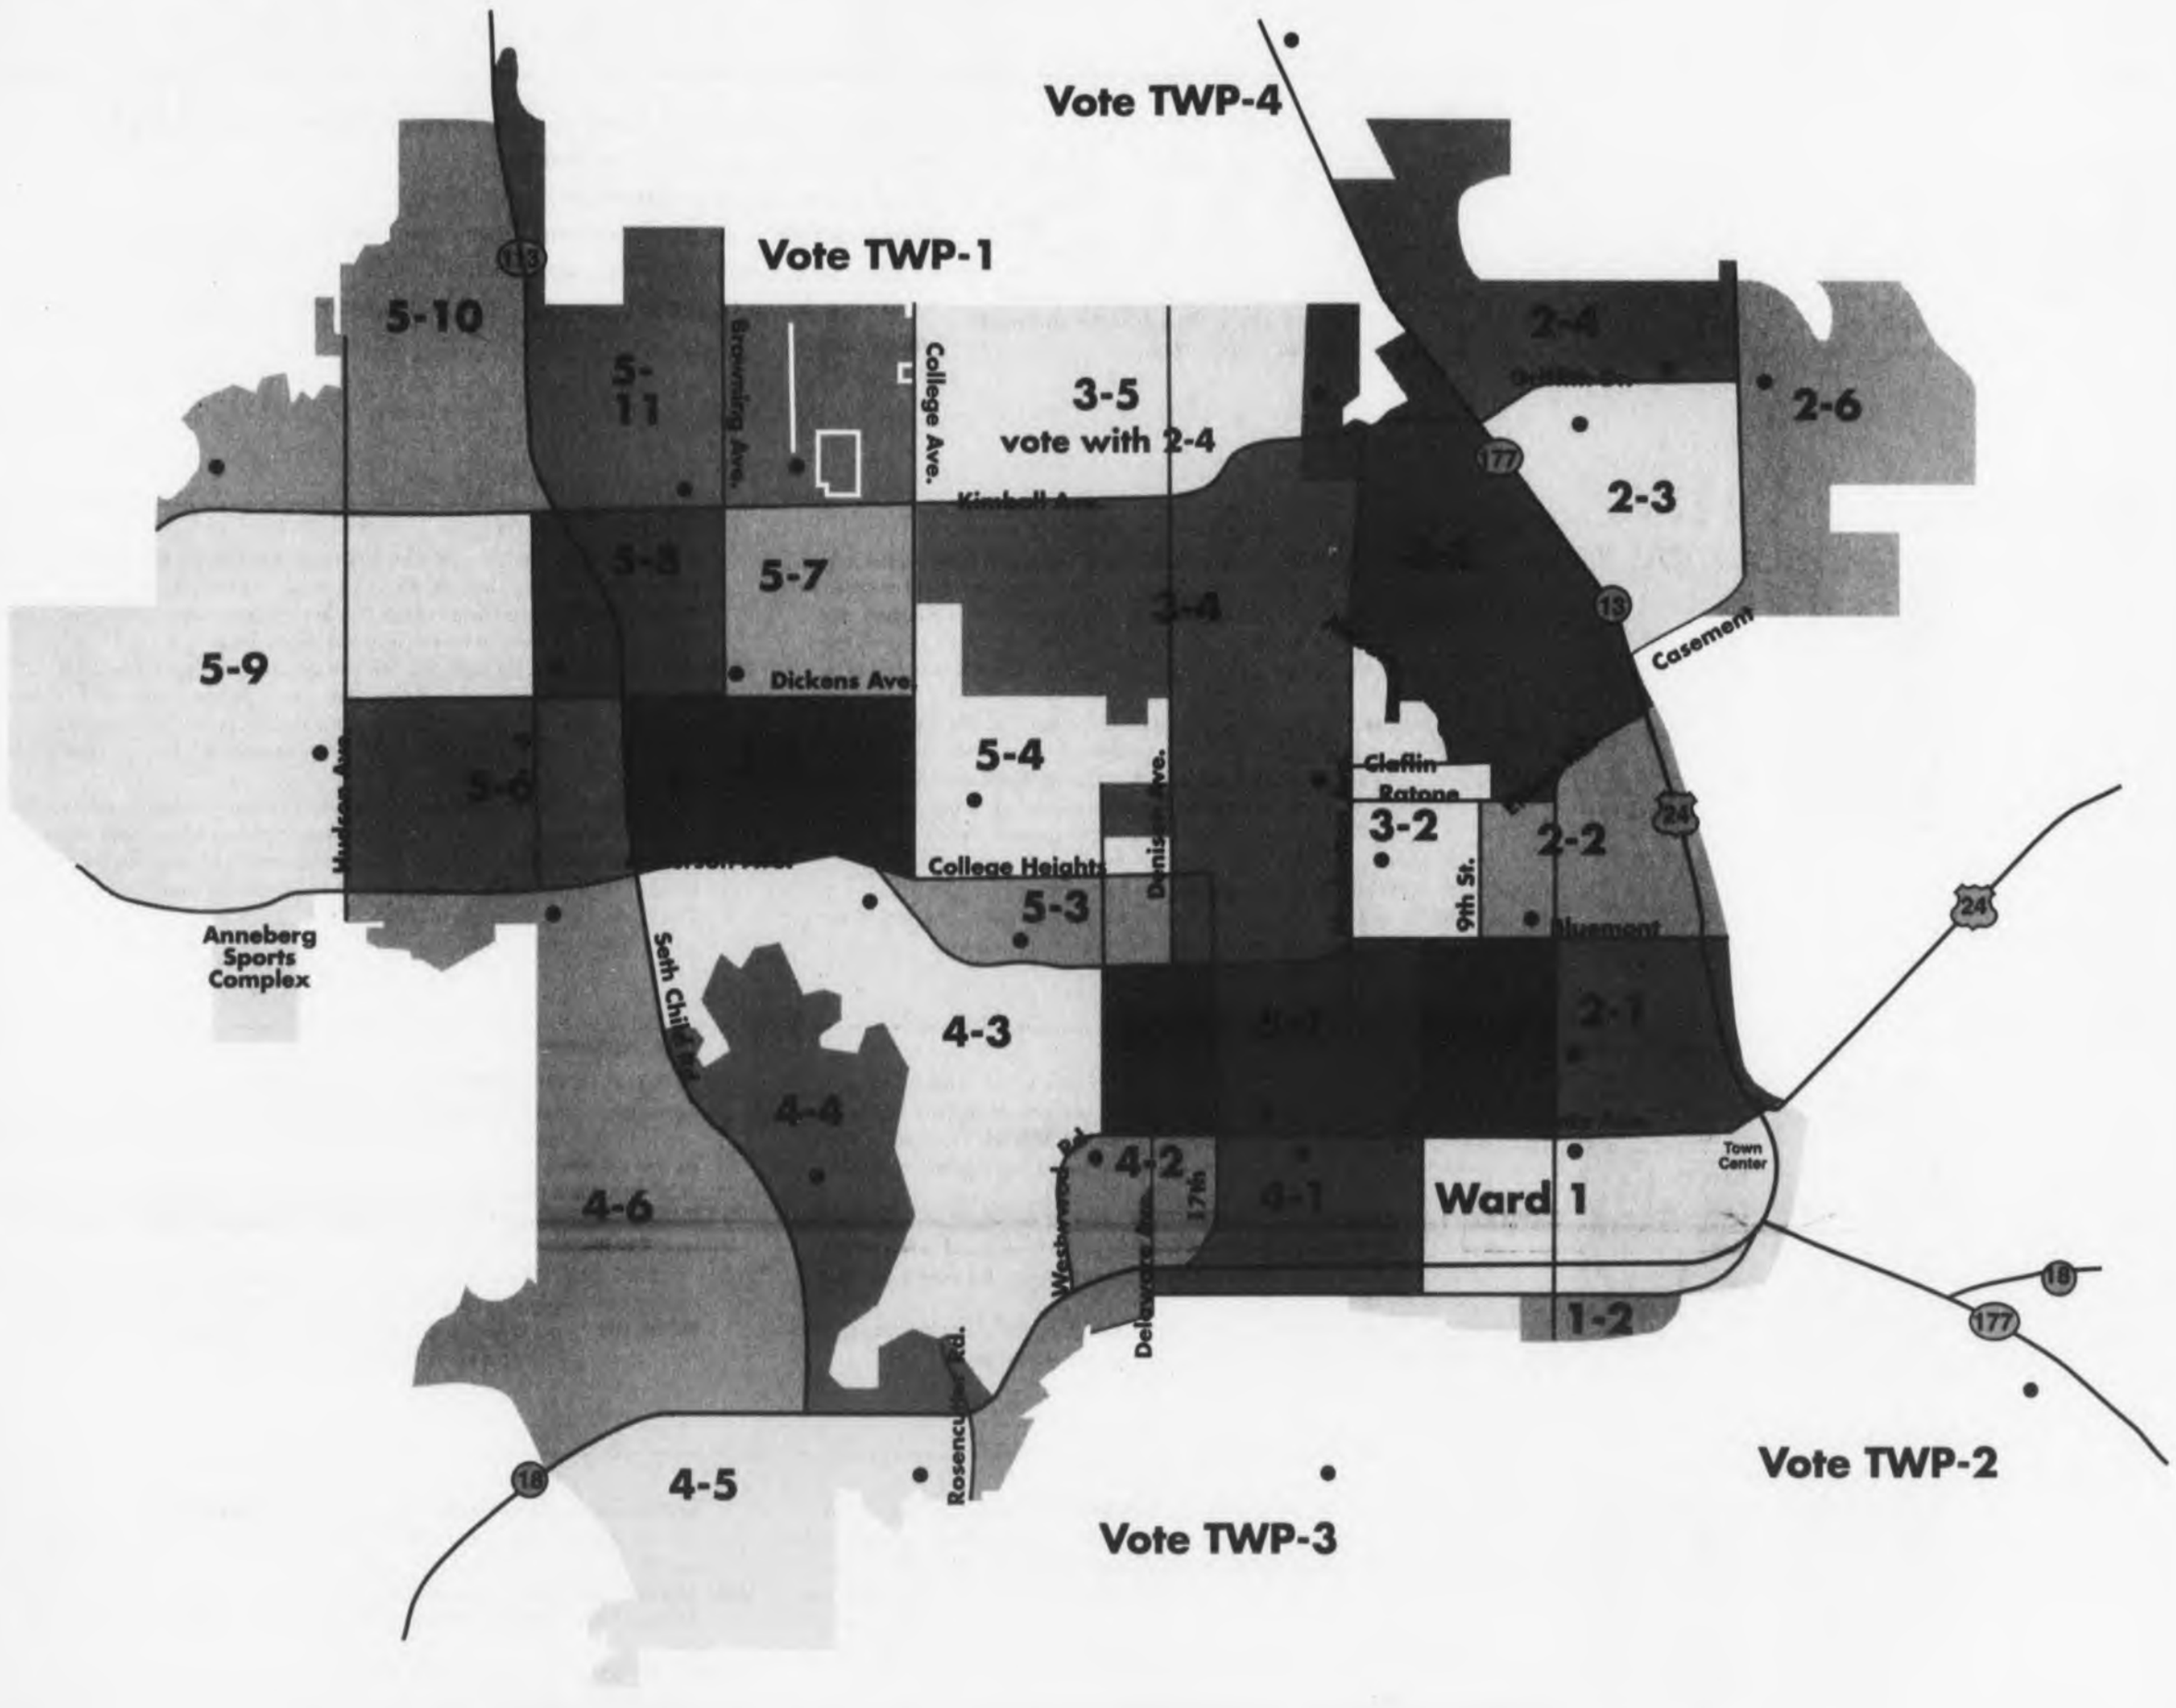
GALITZER. Worked on the administration of the U.S. Department of Agriculture grant in K-State's extension office, the conference division of Continuing Education and various volunteer boards in the community.

VARGO. Has worked as an accountant in the county treasurer's office and is a mutual fund accountant and income-tax preparer and consultant.

ballot issues

ISSUE 1. BARS and FOOD.
THE ISSUE WOULD DROP THE REQUIREMENT OF DRINKING ESTABLISHMENTS TO HAVE 30 PERCENT OF SALES COME FROM FOOD .

PRO. This issue would help local bars that are struggling to meet the quota.



CON. This issue would make it harder for students to get inexpensive food.

ISSUE 2. THE LEC.
THIS ISSUE WOULD APPROVE PLANS TO BEGIN BUILDING A NEW LAW-ENFORCEMENT CENTER AT SETH CHILDS ROAD AND FORT RILEy BOULEVARD, WHICH WOULD INCLUDE A JAIL, PATROL AND RECORDS DEPARTMENT, AND INVESTIGATIONS DEPARTMENT.

PRO. This issue would replace the current facilities, which have been called inadequate.

CON. This issue would be expensive, costing $10.8 million in sales taxes.

JILL STORY
staff writer

While Bob Dole campaigns across the nation for the presidency, some of his fellow Kansans are campaigning to claim his vacated seat in the U. S. Senate.

Republican Sam Brownback, who was elected to Congress in 1994, and Democrat Jill Docking, an investment broker who has not previously run for office, are the frontrunners in the race.

The campaigns center largely around party politics.

The last year in which Kansans elected a Democrat to the Senate was 1932. Docking said she wants to change that tradition.

A July 28 Kansas City Star article said Docking was alarmed to see Republicans take over the U.S. House and Senate in the 1994 elections. She said the government was leaning too far to the right for her tastes and for what she said she thinks are the tastes of most Kansans.

Docking

"The last election was the first time I remember being nervous as an American about what happened," Docking said in the article."I mean, we swung so far to the right."

Her concerns about the direction the political scene seemed to be swinging, prompted her to enter the Senate race. Docking defeated former governor Joan Finney to advance from the primary.

"If you elect me to the U.S. Senate, I promise you balanced decisions that place the interests of your family and Kansas above partisanship," Docking said in a Kansas City Star profile in July.

Brownback

Docking, who married into the political dynasty of her husband, father-in-law and grandfather-in-law, is seeking votes from moderate-Republicans and Independents in her bid for the Senate seat.

Docking's opponent, Sam Brownback, spent his last two years in Washington, D.C., as a member of the freshman class bent on cutting the budget. He ran for that office on a platform of three words — reduce, reform and return.

In his May 17 speech to announce his bid for Dole's Senate seat, he said this year's Congress has done much toward reducing the federal government and reforming. He wanted to use the Senate seat to move further toward the third R and return to the values which built the country.

"This election is about restoring the American dream, because these next few years must be years of restoration. We must focus on, and deliver on, restoring the American dream — restoring society and restoring faith in our future. That is why I am running for the United States Senate," Brownback said.

Docking and others might be wary of the number of Republicans taking office, but Brownback defended the GOP at the Republican national convention.

"Kansas has long been a Republican state. The secret to our success is simple. We have established a sweeping Republican majority, because we are the party of ideas. We are the party of inclusion. We are the party of the future," Brownback said.

The issues in the campaign are many. Among them are taxes, abortion, balancing the budget, and funding for education.

Taxes are always an issue in any government campaign. Both Brownback and Docking have signed pledges related to taxes.

Brownback signed a Taxpayer Protection Pledge, which opposes any increase in the marginal-income tax rates. He said he supports pro-growth, pro-family tax relief and a $500 tax credit, which would be funded with monies derived from shrinking the government.

"Kansans are taxed too much. We need to cut taxes," Brownback said.

Docking advocates balanced, moderate tax cuts that are paid for and do not contribute to the deficit, according to an issues

Perimeter test to shed light on campus safety issues

ASHLEY WEEKLY
staff reporter

A student group focuses on perimeter lighting to find how much light is reaching crosswalks and sidewalks on campus.

The Illuminating Engineering Society is conducting a campus-lighting survey in which it measures light levels on Denison and Manhattan avenues and Claflin Road. The findings of the survey will be submitted to facilities to inform them on areas of campus that need increased lighting.

Greg Gehrt, fifth-year senior in architectural engineering and IES president, said he thinks the group is providing a service to students.

"We are providing a service to students in that we hope to enhance people's perception of safety on campus. The more light that exists, the more safe people feel," he said.

Gehrt said internal campus has proper light levels. He is just concerned with the external areas on campus.

> "We are providing a service to students in that we hope to enhance people's perception of safety on campus. The more light that exists, the more safe people will feel."
> ● GREG GEHRT
> FIFTH-YEAR SENIOR IN ARCHITECTURAL ENGINEERING AND IES PRESIDENT

Lyle Hays, fifth-year senior in architectural engineering and IES treasurer, said increased lighting is important around this time of year.

"Right now, with daylight-savings time, it is getting darker earlier. There are more people on campus late at night. Anytime more light is present, people feel safer," Hays said.

IES, along with help from the Lighting Systems Design class, took light readings on sidewalks and crosswalks Monday through Wednesday nights. They took readings every 20 feet.

"We are using illuminant readers in order to see how much light is reaching the sidewalks and crosswalks," Hays said.

Light levels are measured using a photometer, a device used to convert light levels to readable measurements. The readings are recorded in footcandles.

A footcandle is a measurement that shows how much light is hitting a surface. A classroom should measure 35 footcandles.

Jenny Tonyes, senior in architectural engineering and IES vice president, said sidewalks should be one to two foot candles and a crosswalk should be two to three footcandles. She said most readings they were getting were not reaching these levels.

Brett Krug, senior in architectural engineering, said some areas were as low as .08 footcandles.

Tonyes said IES serves to promote the illuminating engineering profession. She said IES currently has more than 20 active members.

Clarence Waters, IES adviser and head of the architectural engineering and construction science department, said the club was started at K-State in 1987. He said IES does surveys as special projects every few years.

"We did a measurement in 1991 on internal campus. There have been a lot of improvements made there. They used our last survey to upgrade the lighting," Waters said.

Petition to change minutes causes Moore Hall governing board uproar

SPEED

▶ Sarcastic remarks sparked a petition to change the way minutes are taken at meetings. A motion to make the change failed 26-4.

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

Once an issue has been recognized, a motion made, seconded and voted on, it's over and done with, as far as Joe Ashley is concerned.

Ashley, president of the Moore Hall governing board, said a recent petition brought before the board was recognized, read aloud and voted on.

The petition he referred to is one presented to the board by Bill Luton, Moore Hall resident, at the Oct. 21 meeting.

The petition said board secretary Adam LaGree put too many sarcastic remarks and libelous comments into the minutes.

Luton brought the petition, with more than 40 signatures, which requested to change the way the minutes of Moore Hall Governing Board meetings are recorded.

"It is definitely an inaccuracy that we did not recognize the petition. We did and discussed it for an hour last week and again this week," Ashley said.

Luton presented the petition in what Ashley described as an almost threatening manner.

Ashley read it to himself. Then a motion was made, seconded and passed to read it aloud.

Once it was read out loud, a general uproar ensued, he said, because of the language of the petition.

The text of the petition was written in a libelous fashion, Ashley said.

It attacked LaGree, both personally and professionally.

"If the whole point is to get rid of libelous language, it would be a good idea for him to leave out libelous statements of his own," Ashley said.

"The board referred it to the chief justice to take to the judicial board, but we really have not, because we need a complaint from Adam."

Chief Justice Jason Linenberger said the only person the board would take action against would be the original author, but so far no one has taken credit for the work.

"We cannot bring J-board actions against all 43 people. It's impossible. We do not want to do that, and we don't intend to. We can't," Linenberger said.

Ashley said the board has more important things to do and the petition issue is not productive. Ninth-floor representative Ben Reser said the group spent more time on this one issue than on everything else so far this year.

"I think there's a lot more to this than just the minutes. It's so petty it's got to be more than just the minutes," Reser said. "The most important thing is that we did recognize it."

Moore Hall has a constitution, and it is not null and void, Linenberger said.

Copies of the constitution were available during the elections, which were held the first two or three weeks of the school year, depending upon when different floors held their meetings.

"We make changes every year, and people vote on the revisions," Ashley said. "It passed overwhelmingly."

Linenberger said he found it ironic that the people on the board are returning from last year.

"Adam ran uncontested," Linen-berger said. "Adam realizes this is a petty issue."

At the board meeting Monday, Linenberger made a motion to change the format of the notes.

It was seconded and discussed, and 26 people voted against changing the format of the notes. Four voted to change the format.

Ashley said he would like to see the issue die quietly.

"If it gets bad enough, it can be considered a disruption of a campus organization. At this point it isn't, but if it continues, we may have to take action," he said. "I would say there are quite a few people who are unhappy."

Luton still said the board must follow the rules and that it is not above the law.

"We have been told by one of the members of the judicial board in this building that it was taken to another venue in a different building for review to see if they can seek full prosecution," Luton said.

Moore Hall resident Tim Lytle, sophomore in horticultural therapy, said he thought he would get into trouble because he stated how he feels about the minutes.

"I wish they would talk to me directly and clarify all this," Lytle said. "As far as I'm concerned, they wanted to pursue it further."

Lytle said he still thinks the way the minutes are written is insensitive and wasteful, and the wishes of some people are not being heeded. He said HGB should be for the residents of Moore Hall and not for the board's plans.

"They said it was an attack on Adam's character and an attack on HGB, and it's not," Lytle said.

K-State athlete wins scholarship for academics

SHANE MCCORMICK
staff writer

Who said athletes aren't smart?

Senior center Jason Johnson has been chosen as one of 16 Scholar Athletes by the National Football Foundation and the College of Fame for 1996.

As a student-athlete winner, Johnson will receive $18,000 for post-graduate study. Additional money will be awarded to some of the winners at the awards dinner, which will be Dec. 10 at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York City.

Included in the additional money will be the $25,000 Draddy Scholarship awarded to the top scholar-athlete.

"It's a great opportunity for my education. It is something that I will have to sit down and evaluate and see what I want to do," Johnson said about the opportunity for post-graduate education.

Each athlete must meet a number of criteria to be eligible for the award. Athletes must be in their final year of eligibility, have a grade point average of at least 3.0, have shown superior academic application and performance, have outstanding football ability as a first team player, and have demonstrated outstanding leadership and citizenship.

"I'm immensely proud of Jason," Coach Bill Snyder said. "It isn't an award that you take lightly. It is a prestigious honor."

This is the third time since Snyder has been at K-State that a Wildcat athlete has been awarded the scholarship.

"It just shows that we are getting great students in our program here at K-State," Johnson said. "It just shows that it is one of the best universities in the country both academically and athletically."

Johnson has a 3.8 GPA in marketing. The 16 award winners this year had an average GPA of 3.737.

NATION WORLD

• WOMEN VANDALIZE MISS WORLD CONTEST PRIZES. Sixteen women stormed a showroom Tuesday and smeared cow dung and coal tar on furniture, locks and soaps made by sponsors of next month's Miss World beauty pageant. Officers arrested the women, who believe the pageant demeans women and mainly benefits cosmetics companies. Police charged the 16 women with trespassing, unlawful assembly and assault. They were to appear in court Wednesday. First staged in 1951, the Miss World contest has been staged the last four years in Sun City, South Africa.

• MAD-COW CRISIS CONTINUES. Aggravated by French protests, a German threat, new scientific evidence and British resolve, the worrisome issue of mad-cow disease dominates the European Union agenda today.

The 15 EU farm ministers meet here to seek measures to boost the beef market and support cattle farmers in the wake of the mad-cow crisis, which began with Britain's admission in March that the disease found in its herds appeared linked to a deadly brain illness in humans. Expectations that the meeting will turn into a three-day marathon already show how far the mad-cow crisis has divided the EU.

No matter what else the farm ministers decide, it seems certain the seven-month-old EU ban on British beef exports will stay in place following new scientific evidence published in Britain last week. The study provided the clearest link yet between mad cow disease and its human equivalent.

• SUICIDE BOMB IN TURKEY KILLS SIX. As a police car pulled up to a police station Tuesday carrying a woman detained for questioning, she detonated a suicide bomb that killed herself and five others. The blast in the eastern town of Sivas killed three police officers, the woman, a male accomplice and a passer-by. Nine people were wounded. There was no claim of responsibility, but Kurdish rebels previously have used female suicide bombers against police posts and military installations. In other violence Tuesday — a holiday commemorating Turkey's founding 73 years ago — clashes between Kurdish rebels and Turkish troops in the mountains of southeastern Turkey killed 41 people. Guerrillas killed 14 soldiers in early-morning fighting near Diyarbakir. There were no rebel casualties, but in other clashes around the region, 27 rebels were killed.

• TICKER-TAPE PARADE FOR WORLD SERIES WINNER. Hundreds of thousands of New York Yankee fans released 18 years of frustration Tuesday with an enormous blue-and-white ticker-tape parade through the Canyon of Heroes for the World Series champions. People scaled trees and hung out skyscraper windows for a glimpse of the players who ended the longest championship drought in Yankee history. The Yankees have won 23 World Series titles, the most of any team in baseball. But the last time they pulled it off was in 1978. City Hall estimated the crowd at 3.5 million. A parade for the New York Mets after their World Series championship 10 years ago drew an official crowd of 2.2 million.

SPORTS

• THREE CUBAN PLAYERS SUSPENDED FOR LIFE. Three Cuban baseball players — including two highly regarded amateurs — were suspended for life by their country's sports authority Tuesday and a Cuban-American was arrested on charges of trying to help players defect.

Banned were shortstop German Mesa, pitcher Orlando "Duke" Hernandez and catcher Alberto Hernandez. They were accused of putting at least one agent in contact with players he wanted to lure from the island.

• HOSPITAL DISCHARGES EARL WOODS. Tiger Woods' father was discharged from a hospital Tuesday after spending four days undergoing tests and observation for chest pains.

Woods, 64, was admitted to St. Francis hospital early Friday after arriving in Tulsa to watch his son play in the Tour Championship at Southern Hills Country Club. Neither the family nor the hospital said what was wrong with Woods.

CITY STATE

• STATE PAYS TRIBUTE TO KASSEBAUM FOR HER SUPPORT OF ARTS. President Clinton, Gov. Bill Graves and Kansas' cultural community paid tribute to retiring Sen. Nancy Kassebaum during a Statehouse ceremony Tuesday for her support of the arts and humanities.

They hailed her efforts in getting reluctant congressional Republicans to extend funding for the National Endowment for the Arts for five years, and her support for the National Endowment for the Humanities and their state counterpart organizations. Graves, who presented Kassebaum with the Governor's Arts Award, said the senator has provided a voice of common sense and compromise and noted she had fended off efforts by House conservatives to make deep cuts in cultural programs.

• POWER RESTORED TO MAJORITY OF KANSAS CITY. Electricity had been restored today to nearly all the 175,000 people in the Kansas City area who lost power during a freak fall blizzard that pulled trees onto utility lines across the region. About 480 households remained without power Tuesday morning — six days after the storm. Crews have been working day and night to restore power.

The largest areas still without power Sunday were in Johnson County, in older Kansas City suburban neighborhoods such as Prairie Village and Leawood. Most of that service was restored by Tuesday.

▶ ORDER OF OMEGA

Greeks join to gather cans for hungry

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

Hunger Awareness Week might span only a few days, but the efforts of those involved will be long-lasting. Members of the Order of Omega plan to see the week succeed.

"Basically, we want to really, really promote the Flint Hills Breadbasket and the wonderful work they do," said Emily Simpson, Hunger Awareness Week special-events chairwoman for the Order of Omega.

All greeks are encouraged to involve themselves in at least one of the four events, she said. The Order of Omega, representing the entire greek population, said it really wants to work with the community.

> "I think this is a good opportunity to help, because we can. We have the ability to help."
> • GREG COUP
> CHAIRMAN OF MISS A MEAL

"I've been a member of Order of Omega for two years now. I ran for this office last spring, because I wanted to see us join with the community and campus Cats for Cans to promote the food drive for the Breadbasket," Simpson, a senior in music education, said.

"We really want to get off to a good holiday season."

The date of the drive was changed this year to avoid Homecoming, but it worked out well because members got started a little early to get the food pantries stocked, she said.

The Order of Omega, the greek honorary on campus, is a collection of different fraternities and sororities. Its members are selected on the basis of chapter, community and campus involvement.

The first event was Miss A Meal Tuesday. Chapter house members skip a meal, and the money that meal cost is directly donated to the Breadbasket.

It doesn't seem like much. It's not a big thing, but it is really a substantial contribution to their efforts, with 12 or 13 houses involved, Simpson said.

"This is very easy for a lot of college kids to do," said Simpson, who is a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma.

Greg Coup, chairman of Miss A Meal, said he thinks there is a problem with hunger in Manhattan.

It might seem like a big-city problem, but it is a reality here.

Facts on feedback

BIOFEEDBACK: feedback from the body that makes the subject aware of change in physiological and emotional arousal levels.

STRESS: mental, emotional and physiological responses an individual might have to outside events (stressors) or perceived events.

SELF-REGULATION: the ability to alter the arousal or anxiety level to higher and lower levels intentionally to achieve desired outcomes.

STRESS MANAGEMENT: strategies a person uses to reduce stress responses.

Training steps

1. MAKE APPOINTMENT with University Counseling Services at 532-6927.

2. FIRST SESSION: UCS assesses the situation, explains biofeedback and explains equipment use.

3. TRAINING PROTOCOL: The type of feedback and self-regulation skills are determined.

4. CONTINUATION: Weekly sessions might last six weeks to several months.

the biofeedback factor

K-State students learn relaxation skills for everyday use

K-State students are using biofeedback technology to cope with stress and anxiety.

"Biofeedback is feedback from your body," Art Rathbun, University Counseling Services counselor, said. "You use it as part of learning relax skills."

Biofeedback can be applied to everyday, real-life situations. UCS is using biofeedback information to treat students with ailments such as stress, headaches, test anxiety, concentration problems and insomnia as well as other medical troubles.

"Think back to when you first learned to ride a bike. You fall off, and feedback told you that you were doing it wrong," Rathbun said. "Feedback is processed automatically. You keep making adjustments in technique until you get it right."

Biofeedback can help teach self-regulation skills that can decrease the effect of stressors in your life. The average person encounters more than 250 stressors in one day, Rathbun said.

The biofeedback training center, in the basement of Lafene Health Center, helps more than 200 students every year, Rathbun said.

The training center has three goals. Direct client work is a big part of the counselors' everyday duties. The counselors give presentations to faculty during one-session workshops.

"The stress level of faculty and staff directly affects students," Rathbun said.

Other purposes of the biofeedback-training center are to teach students to become biofeedback trainers and to help with research projects. Eun Hee Kim, graduate student in horticultural therapy, is doing research at the biofeedback training center.

"My research is comparing human physiological responses to plants and the environment," Kim said. "I watch how students react to the plants, and I measure the responses."

UCS has been helping students with biofeedback training for about 35 years.

"K-State is probably the pioneer of using biofeedback for helping college students," Rathbun said.

Two years ago UCS upgraded its biofeedback equipment. With the help of student funding, the center was able to add features to maximize biofeedback training, Rathbun said.

Currently, the training center offers feedback through skin-temperature testing, muscle tension, heart rate and respiration.

The neurofeedback can then be used to help students learn to regulate their body response to life's stressors.

The sessions help students to keep anxiety at an optimum level. In the past, athletes have taken advantage of the biofeedback training center to help maintain concentration, Rathbun said.

Cost for use of the training center is $25 a semester, Rathbun said. Classes and workshops on stress management are offered on campus throughout the semester. Rathbun said he also recommends Stress Management, a January intersession class.

OPINION

EDITOR: SERA TANK 532-0730 (KAROLYI@KSU.EDU) | WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1996 | PAGE 4

IN OUR OPINION

Nightmarish streets are only fun for Halloween

Manhattan is a death trap at night.

Truly, it is. Pedestrian crosswalks that are scarcely lit and unmarked intersections that are an insurance company's worst nightmare have made the sidewalks and streets pure hell.

The terror some students feel walking home almost unseen by motorists and easy targets for criminals might be appropriate for our upcoming holiday, but it's no treat for those who have to live it.

WHY WE CARE

Poorly lit sidewalks and unmarked intersections provide little safety for students. Until these are fixed, let's exercise some common sense.

The city needs to install stop signs at the frequently used unmarked intersections. We all know — or at least we should — that the person approaching the intersection on the right has the right of way, but that knowledge isn't helping much.

Yes, it would cost a little money to install stop signs, but how much money is the city spending to dispatch officers to the scene of every accident that happens at these collision-heavy sites?

And pedestrian crosswalks are clearly marked during the day, but aren't easily seen during the evening hours. Hence, neither are those using the crosswalks.

We hope better lighting is on its way, but until then both the drivers and the walkers have to exercise a little common sense.

Sure, pedestrians always have the right of way.

And what a power rush we get when we make a pick-up truck stop because we stepped out in frontof it. But let's think about it.

It doesn't matter who has the right of way if you're dead.

And drivers, let's be careful when we are approaching a crosswalk at night. Slow down a little. Make sure no one is starting to cross.

And recently, it's been noticed that some of the lighting on campus is not up to par.

In fact, the lights around some buildings are not even turned on.

We need to make better use of the lights we have and make sure that they are maintained. A light post does little good without a light bulb.

If you're walking across campus and you notice some of the light bulbs are out or don't appear to have been turned on, call facilities at 532-6389.

Artistic Expression there's no place like home

MY

Russell FORTMEYER

This past summer, my high-school English teacher — now a friend — visited Kansas for the first time.

He stopped over one night in Lawrence (OK, so it's not the most thoroughly Kansan place to stop, but it'll have to do).

Being from California, he had heard practically every stereotype ever uttered concerning America's breadbasket, from the intense flat quality of the landscape to there being no electricity in some parts. That might hold true for some of my friends from, oh, say, Gem, but sounds comedic to us northern Flint Hills dwellers.

These falsehoods hold true throughout the country, because Kansas lacks a true definition of itself. Artistically, it lacks a less drug-induced counterpart to the "Wizard of Oz."

When it comes to our artists, writers and musicians, rarely do we attempt to reflect ourselves. It's at the loss of the state for its artists to not find inspiration among the hills and families of Kansas.

Not to say there aren't numerous artists and writers living within Kansas who have given us vernacular treasures and inspiration, but there aren't enough of them.

> "When it comes to our artists, writers and musicians, rarely do we attempt to reflect ourselves. It's at the loss of the state for its artists to not find inspiration among the hills and families of Kansas."

Last Friday, internationally renowned artist and K-State alumnus Alan Shields visited. A native Kansan, he has resided in New York since the late 1960s.

If you ask me, that's fine. Although he claimed, perhaps justifiably, his early years in Kansas are still reflected in his work, he isn't a Kansas artist, because he maintains no Kansas persona.

Why would anyone, not necessarily Shields, not living in Kansas claim to be a Kansan? It's humble. Would Bob Dole sound as American if he said, "I was born a poor boy living in a Watergate apartment overlooking the Potomac River." It doesn't sound right.

Growing up in Kansas and leaving for more cosmopolitan pastures removes one not only physically, but psychologically, from our state.

One might argue Kansas hasn't changed in 100 years, but darn it, rickets is down nearly 95 percent, and the temperance movement is slowly losing its steam. Those are changes!

If one leaves the state, one loses the opportunity to observe the more subtle changes, like the growing breadth of ethnicity — not only in our metropolitan centers but in our farm communities and countryside.

One would miss witnessing the rebirth of our small towns, whether through renewed industrial development or a refocus on a tourist economy.

Unfortunately, too many of our creative children feel this compelling need to follow an outward-bound path to its end product, either fame and celebrity or to be among an establishment, whether pro- or anti-establishment.

Or they leave, like the painter John Steuart Curry, because they are never appreciated.

I'd contend it wasn't so much no one appreciated Curry as it was no one had the time to appreciate Curry. It's hard to imagine Kansas' early citizens spending much time schmoozing over art when there were matters such as cattle, water, food and health to dote over — just the little things.

But, in Curry's day, Kansas lacked the artistic community necessary to propagate an artist to favorite-son status. That's no longer true.

The current hard truth is Kansas lacks a large supply of fresh, pioneering favorite sons or daughters with the brilliance and relevance worthy of the status.

The folly of a few student artists and writers on this campus is with their intense desire for a greater relevance within international culture when their true selves — the sum of their thoughts, emotions and familial relations — remains in Kansas.

As I have learned, through my struggles with writing, one must begin to write about what one knows before attempting to apply experiences to a greater world.

The message isn't to ignore the world and its splendor as inspirational touchstones, but to build your artistic self first as who you really are — a young Kansan studying in Manhattan.

By far, the strongest artistic endeavors I've witnessed on campus have come from a personal connection, usually with Kansas. Counter this to the artists who fancy themselves reinventing pop art. It never quite reaches a genuine brilliance.

For many, including, to some extent, myself, the draw to the old culture capitals is too powerful to ignore. So, how do you maintain an emotional base in Kansas while enjoying either the mainstream or avant garde schools of thought in a more international market?

As young people, perhaps we need the experiences other places can offer. However, instead of removing ourselves from our Kansas identity, we should coalesce our new and old identities to enrich both. And we should not give superficial explanations as to why we abandoned our former selves.

that silver lining is beginning to dull

MY VIEW

Page GETZ

They say every half-empty cup is half full. There is always a bright side. And every cloud has a silver lining. And although I might grind my teeth to my gums, I'm going to find it.

Well, that was the plan.

After floods of cards, manuals for suicide techniques and suggestions for maintaining sanity, I thought my columns were giving readers the wrong idea, that I was some kind of morbid pessimist.

Even my cab drivers give me advice.

I got a letter asking me simply if I was happy. And I laughed. I had no idea, but I was sure I wasn't supposed to be.

So I set out to write a happy column. And I repeated the ancient happy column mantra with great sincerity, "I'm going to write a happy column (grind), a happy column (grind) a happy column (GRIND) ... "

I twisted my face into a synthetic smile as the cabby suggested.

I meditated on my favorite things: the snooze button, Peter Pan's flying lessons, people who laugh so loud you can hear them down the hall, call waiting, vinyl clothing, defective fortune cookies with no fortune in them, people who actually smile in airports and non-childproof lighters.

I even consulted the book my mother thought would cure my teen-age restlessness, which has been a longer phase than predicted. Out of the "14,000 things to be happy about," I thought I could find just one that did the trick.

Among the things I agreed with — Slinkies, porch swings, seventh-inning stretches and food that mittened hands can grasp — I saw the evils of capitalism, packaged-starvation-labeled dieting and the rituals of coasting through the most cost-effective brands of our dreams they give degrees for.

So because happy things seem to have the opposite effect, I figured I could make a list of just a few random tragedies and horrors, and that it might stir my latent optimism.

For example, the bad news is it's cold season.

The good news is alcohol-free, potentially hallucinogenic, over-the-counter cough medicine.

The bad news is smoking causes cancer, birth defects and other such inconveniences.

The good news is with the rising cost of medical care, many of us won't be able to afford to be diagnosed.

> "The bad news is they say the world is going to end in the year 2000. The good news is they say the world is going to end in the year 2000."

The bad news is people are being exploited, abused and murdered throughout the world, casualties of the expansive tradition of American capitalism.

The good news is none of us have to know about it.

The bad news is I can't write about any of the candidates because of this new equal-coverage policy.

The good news is neither can Jeremy Stephens.

The bad news is in 1912, almost 2,000 people died on the Titanic because in all its elegance, there weren't enough life boats.

The good news is now we can buy collector's item genuine Titanic coal by the teaspoon.

The bad news is college can require sacrificing sleep, sometimes food and your capacity for optimism.

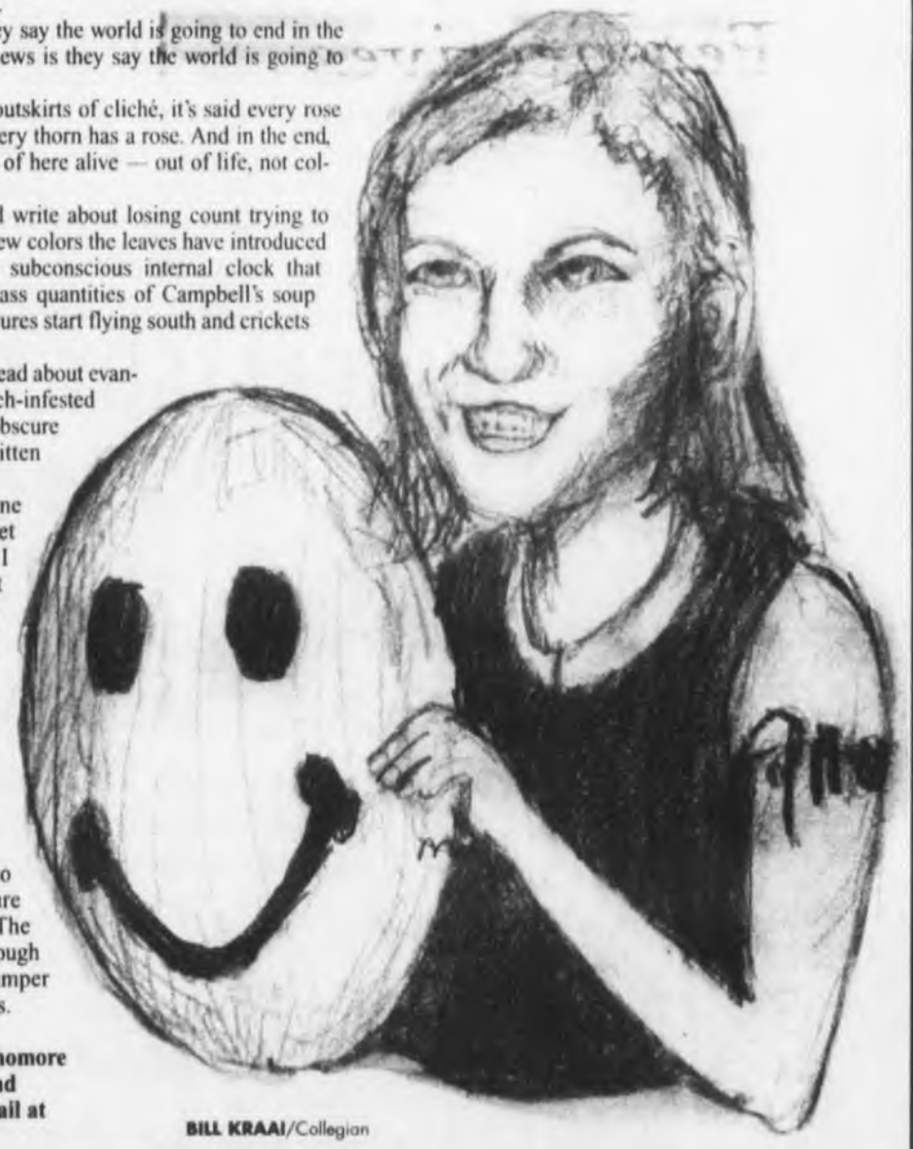
The good news is caffeine, ephedrine, speed, cocaine, crank and crack.

The bad news is there are neglected bills, laundry and spiders in the closet.

The good news is there are no monsters, the Grim Reaper or goblins in the closet.

The bad news is they say the world is going to end in the year 2000. The good news is they say the world is going to end in the year 2000.

To trespass on the outskirts of cliché, it's said every rose has a thorn. But not every thorn has a rose. And in the end, none of us make it out of here alive — out of life, not college.



The truth is I could write about losing count trying to determine how many new colors the leaves have introduced this fall or about the subconscious internal clock that makes me invest in mass quantities of Campbell's soup just as the winged creatures start flying south and crickets get suicidal.

But I would rather read about evangelist hookers in roach-infested motels reciting some obscure poem supposedly written by Mary Magdalene.

I heard someone whistling the Muppet theme yesterday, but I couldn't figure out where it was coming from. So I started singing along. Hours later, as I was singing the Muppet theme along with everyone I had encountered that night, I decided I probably was happy.

And I continued to not sleep as torture scenes from "The Godfather" danced through my head playing bumper cars with my brain cells.

There are so many other things to worry about besides clothes

Editor,

In a world with so many concerns and issues, it seems rather senseless that I write a letter about a column that criticizes the fashion choices of college students, but here goes.

When I get up in the morning, I have choices to make. Will I hit the snooze bar one more time? Will I go to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex?

Once awake, I make even more decisions. Will I watch "Scooby Doo" or the "Today Show"? Rats! "Scrappy Doo" is on. I guess I'll watch Bryant Gumbel instead. Finally, I come to the ever-so-important decision that must be made — What will I wear today?

Like many others, I stand in front of my closet, trying to weigh the factors of what is comfortable, what is appropriate for the weather, and most of all what is clean.

Some days, my choice may be a nifty, well-pressed, well-accessorized outfit. Other days, I might choose faded jeans, a flannel shirt and mismatched socks, because of course, they aren't really organized in my drawer. I guess that's the beauty of going to a public institution of higher education instead of a catholic grade school. That is, I make the choice of what I wear every day.

So with all that in mind, I am left wondering why Keely Shields has decided to condemn those individuals who find comfort in a baseball cap? If she chooses not to wear them that is one thing, but for her to make judgments on anyone who wears them is ridiculous. What makes college, and life, great is that we're all unique, and we don't have to look like J. Crew clones.

Because we all place a different value on personal appearance, we all look different, and that's OK. If it were simply an issue of personal hygiene maybe that would be one thing, but it seems Shields' article was more centered on the issue of clothing.

There is another issue at hand besides values and judgments, and that is money. Being well-dressed is more than a mind set, it is also a financial obligation.

With tuition, books, car payments, rent and groceries, there isn't always a lot of money left over for new clothes. So many students make do with what they have thinking it doesn't really matter.

Before criticizing the fashion sense of the entire student body, perhaps Shields should consider that not all people's top priorities include their appearance.

As for me, I'm feeling a bit uncomfortable in my skirt and blouse. I think I'll pull on a pair of wind pants and walk — not run — to the mall!

Kudos to the library painters

Editor,

Just a note of thanks to the ones who refinished the tables and chairs in Farrell Library, room 300. They have done a beautiful job. It really adds quality to the room.

Thanks also to the painters who are beautifying the library stack area with a new coat of paint.

We need to praise these crews for jobs well done.

The football team is wonderful; don't forget basketball season

Editor,

Hearty congratulations to Coach Bill Snyder and the Wildcat football team. Their striving for excellence appears to be bearing fruit, and their continued hard work should produce the results we desire.

And when it comes to football achievements of the Cats, let's also pass some praise to the students, fans and alumni, whose support has been tremendous. And finally, let's extend our thanks to President Jon Wefald, Athletic Director Max Urick, the assistant football coaches and all the other hundreds of people who have helped manage our football program to its current level of achievement.

But before we give ourselves too many accolades, we need to turn some of our attention, enthusiasm and support to basketball.

Let's show the world that we are not a one-sport school.

We have accepted one challenge and met it. Now it is time for us to accept a new one.

Collectively we have turned our football program around. We are filling KSU Stadium for every game. Now it is time to fill Bramlage Coliseum for every game, with students leading the way. The Cats should be exciting to watch, and Coach Tom Asbury will bring them to play. Order your tickets now.

See you at Bramlage. GO CATS!

Speaker says Korean War only forgotten by Americans

JASON WALLE
staff reporter

The Korean War is all but forgotten.

Understanding and remembering the Korean War was the topic of the seventh Dwight D. Eisenhower Lecture in War and Peace at Forum Hall Tuesday night.

Allan Millett of Ohio State University and the Mershon Center said the Korean War, also known as the forgotten war, is not forgotten in Korea.

"If it is forgotten, it's forgotten by the American culture," Millett said. "It's not forgotten there. They have monuments galore and a great museum."

Millett said he thinks the war isn't really forgotten in America.

"Americans measure wars on the domestic impact at home," Millett said.

Millett said because the Korean War fell between World War II and the Vietnam War, both of which had phenomenal domestic effects on the United States, the Korean War is neglected because of its actual amount of effect.

Millett graduated from Dupuaw University in 1959 with a bachelor's degree in history. After graduation, Millett spent three years of active duty in the United States Marine Corps.

He later returned to school at Ohio State University, where he received his doctorate in 1966, and remained on standby in the USMC reserves. He eventually retired as a colonel and a battalion commander in the 4th Marine division.

Millett's latest writing, "Understanding is Better than Remembering: The Korean War, 1945-1954," deals with the personal side of the war. His book is currently printing.

"I want this to be the first war book to capture the human experience — not so much the institutional side of it," Millett said.

Millett said many families were divided between North and South Korea, and many will never be reunited. His goal is to get Americans to understand the depth of sorrow and suffering that still exists in Korea.

"Many war books ignore the real essence of war," Millett said. "You can only be so negative and so dead."

Millett said he thinks many people don't realize 80 percent of the war-related deaths in Korea were non-combat fatalities such as starvation, exposure and disease.

"Seventy-six percent of the current Korean population was born in 1960 or later," Millett said. "They still identify the war as the single most important event in their history."

Millett said Americans don't understand the amount of deep-seated hatred and frustration that still exist in Korea today.

"It's estimated that between 2 and 3 million Koreans died on both sides," Millett said.

"The Korean war is still with us, and understanding it is very important to understanding what American policy is and should be in Korea today," Millett said.

Bike-lane plans pass committee hurdle

SCOTT CONNER
staff reporter

The plan to create and improve existing bike lanes in Manhattan and the K-State campus has been sent to various city boards for review and approval.

At Tuesday night's city commission work session, commissioners heard a report on the Bicycle Master Plan from the city manager's office and from project consultant Mark Moore.

The commission came to a consensus that the plan is a workable one and should be sent to the City Planning and Parks and Recreation advisory boards for review and approval. After the two boards revise and approve the plan, it will be sent to the city commission for final approval.

Ron Fehr, assistant city manager, said the plan began early this year as one of the inaugural projects of the City/University Special Funds Committee.

A preliminary study by the consulting firm was completed as a result of input of several public meetings on the subject.

The report, the Bicycle Master Plan, identified ways to improve existing roadways to accommodate bike traffic. The report also identified ways to connect areas of Manhattan and the K-State campus for safer bike traffic.

Manhattan as the highest percentage of non-motorized commuting than any other city in Kansas, according to the Bicycle Master Plan,

The plan also stated the state average percentage of non-motorized commuting is 4.1 percent and Manhattan's average is 14.4 percent.

"This plan has definite mutual benefits for K-State and the city of Manhattan," said Fehr.

Moore said the plan said with the identification of three focus areas, an inventory of existing bike pathways, an inventory of needs for future bike pathways and a recommendation about how to address the needs.

Moore said some goals of achieving this focus are to send a message to the community that bikes belong in people's everyday lives, shift the mode of use for daily trips around town from cars to bicycles, and improve access for bicyclists

Ro knows

Commitment is important in the greater scheme of thing — especially to oneself. Former Wildcat great and NBA superstar Rolando Blackman has returned to K-State to fulfill a commitment he made almost 20 years ago.

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

ROLANDO BLACKMAN has already succeeded in life as an NBA basketball player. Now Blackman, a Brooklyn native and father of four, has returned to finish his degree more than a decade later. Blackman played for K-State in 1977-81 and was the ninth pick in the 1981 draft

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

Stifling defense, pinpoint accuracy from the perimeter, and class on and off the court that transcends sport define much of the history of K-State basketball.

No name conjures up images of K-State basketball at its finest like that of Rolando Blackman.

Without a doubt, Blackman was one of the finest players ever to wear a Wildcat uniform. Now he's back at K-State as a student, fulfilling a commitment he made to himself almost 20 years ago.

Blackman came to K-State from Brooklyn, N.Y., joining the Wildcat roster in 1977. Tim Jankovich, Blackman's former teammate and roommate, said the Rolando Blackman who arrived at practice that first day was not the same player fans would see several weeks later.

"The thing I remember — just when I think back, there's so many things he did — but when he first came to K-State, he'd played center in high school," said Jankovich, now the men's basketball coach at the University of North Texas.

"When I first started playing with him, I wasn't very impressed with him. He was a good athlete, and he had good size, but he was about as much a guard as the man on the moon."

But Blackman would evolve into more than just another guard.

At that time, guard Mike Evans was the star at K-State. But Blackman quickly made his presence known, averaging 10.9 points per game until a one-point loss to eventual national champion Marquette in the second round of the NCAA Tournament ended the Cats' season.

As a sophomore in 1978-79, Blackman emerged as the go-to player, averaging a team-high 17.3 points per game and earning unanimous selection to the all-Big 8 team.

But Jack Hartman, Blackman's coach during his stay in Manhattan, remembers his star guard as more than just a scorer.

"I remember him being unselfish to a fault," Hartman said. "He was very conscious of other players and didn't want to appear to be thinking of himself. The only time I had to raise my voice at him was to get him to shoot more."

By the time his career at K-State was complete, Blackman would sit second on the Wildcats' all-time scoring chart (where he remains) and first in career assists (he now ranks third).

Blackman's junior year might have been his greatest at K-State. Blackman averaged 17.8 points en route to an all-America season and his selection as Big 8 Player of the Year.

The fun was ended only by another run-in with the eventual national champion. This time it was Louisville that spoiled the Wildcats' party, winning a 71-69 overtime decision in Lincoln, Neb.

Blackman was chosen by USA Basketball to represent America in the 1980 Olympic Games, following his junior season, and was slated to be a starter. But the United States' boycott of the Games kept him and his teammates home, leaving them to ponder the 1981 season.

Increased defensive attention and the arrival of Big 8 Newcomer of the Year Randy Reed conspired to lower Blackman's average to 15 points per game in his senior year. But it was in the NCAA Tournament that Blackman made perhaps the most famous shot in K-State history.

Jankovich remembers it well. Playing against the top seed in the West Regional (and No. 2 in the nation) Oregon State, the Cats trailed most of the game. But a late rally allowed K-State to tie with about two minutes left.

"They threw the ball away — I think it was a traveling call," Jankovich remembers. "And with no shot clock and no three-point line, we simply ran the clock waiting for a last shot or an open lay-up.

"The play was pretty simple — to get the ball to Rolando and get a shot for him."

And he got the shot. Immortalized on the cover of Sports Illustrated, Blackman's 17-foot basket propelled K-State into the Sweet 16. North Carolina would send the Cats home in the Elite Eight.

After two seasons as an all-American, Blackman was a prime candidate for the NBA. In the summer of 1981, he was drafted by the Dallas Mavericks with the ninth pick of the first round.

Blackman had made it to the big game, but he had not finished his degree.

"I had an opportunity to do that back then," he said. "I just didn't get it done."

But Hartman said he understands the decision Blackman made, the same decision most professional athletes who haven't finished their schooling make.

"You can understand when a kid has a chance to make a lot of money instead of finishing his degree at that time," Hartman said. "You can come back to school."

Blackman said he thought about finishing his degree while playing for Dallas. But it wasn't right — something was missing.

"I wanted to get my diploma," he said. "But I wanted it to say Kansas State at the top of it."

And so he waited.

Waited through 11 seasons in Dallas, where he was invited to play in four NBA All-Star games (1985-87, '90). Waited through two seasons with the New York Knicks, where he helped win an Eastern Conference championship in 1994.

Waited through two seasons in Europe, where he got an entirely different kind of education.

"It is an absolutely fantastic opportunity. I had

Schedules provide challenge for this year's Wildcat squads

With the season approaching quickly, it's easy to see it could be a tale of two seasons for the Cats.

● stories by John Berggren and Dan Lewerenz

The preseason and non-conference games present little challenge for the Wildcats. However, Big 12 play could tell a different story.

The Wildcats open the preseason Nov. 8 against the NBC Thunder Camps and follow Nov. 15 with an exhibition against the Adelaide 36ers from Australia. These games will give Coach Tom Asbury and his staff a chance to see how the Cats perform in game situations and perhaps solidify some starting positions.

"We kind of play through the preseason," Asbury said. "We substitute on a schedule. We practice hard right up to the games and through them. We don't treat them like normal games. We'd like to play well, and we need to see a lot of people. We will do that at the expense of winning."

Everyone will see playing time in the preseason with the exception of those who will redshirt.

Asbury said freshman Joe Leonard, a 7'0" center, will almost certainly redshirt. Freshman Josh Reid and community-college transfer Marcus McCullough are also candidates for redshirt status.

The regular season will begin Nov. 22 against UMKC. If the Wildcats are going to have a successful season, they should defeat the Roos easily.

The non-conference schedule for the Cats does not get much tougher than UMKC with the likes of North Carolina-Asheville, Morgan State and Bethune Cookman. Despite the lack of tough competition, Asbury said the Cats will get all they can out of the non-conference schedule.

"The schedule is one we'll play through," Asbury said. "I can't really say if it's a good one. We didn't have a lot of control over it. We had contracts with several teams."

The real test for the Wildcats will be the Big 12 Conference season. K-State opens league play Jan. 4 against Kansas at Bramlage Coliseum. The Jayhawks are preseason favorites to dominate the Big 12 as well as the national spotlight.

"You have more incentive with your first Big 12 game, which could be good," he said. "But as young as this team is and as old as their team is, we would probably be better off with that game a little further into the season."

Even with starkly contrasting levels of competition in conference and non-conference play, Asbury said he believes the Cats will be strong nonetheless.

"I expect we'll be a solid team," Asbury said. "We'll be solid, because we have a lot of players who have played a lot of basketball at the college level. We're young but not completely green."

DAN HOLMGREN/Collegian

There's no easing into the season for K-State this year. When Memphis visits Nov. 22, the Cats will not only play their season opener, they'll get their first shot at a nationally ranked team.

Memphis lost only one senior from last year's NCAA Tournament team, and it's a sure-bet junior LaTonya Johnson and sophomore Tamika Whitmore will pose match-up problems for the smaller Wildcats.

"They like to run," Coach Debbie Patterson said. "We're going to have to shut down their attack, take away the angles, or they'll blow right past us."

But the Cats' tenacious defense, one of the remnants of the Brian Agler era, will help K-State handle a bigger, faster team.

Rebounding will be the key when K-State travels to Florida, which is ranked as high as No. 8 in some polls. The Gator front court of DeLisha Milton and Murriel Page has the ability to dominate the boards.

"We have to keep them off the boards," Patterson said. "Florida should be a top 10 team right now, and they are one of the most talented teams in the country."

Not that the rest of the nonconference schedule will be easy. Marquette and Grambling State, both NCAA teams last season, lie in wait on the other side of the Wildcat Classic. And the creation of the Big 12 puts a target on everyone's back.

"When we go out to Idaho, that might be the biggest game of the year for them," Patterson said. "They get to play at home against a Big 12 team, and if they win, it makes their season. Ohio is a great team, and if a team from the MAC beats a Big 12 team, it's a feather in their cap."

Things don't get easier when conference play begins. Four teams, KU, Colorado, Texas and Texas Tech, are generally considered likely Sweet 16 candidates. Three more teams, Nebraska, Texas A&M and Oklahoma State, are coming off NCAA bids. Iowa State and Baylor are rebuilding.

"The experience we have creates an opportunity for us," Patterson said. "That's where we can make great strides in conference play. We have to beat the Baylors, we have to beat the Missouris and Oklahomas and Nebraskas if we want to be in a position to be competitive in this conference."

What if Snyder decided to go trick-or-treating?

If Bill Snyder were to dress up for Halloween, who would he be?

● There are still 8,000 tickets available for this year's Sunflower Showdown in Lawrence. Where's your school spirit? Where's your purple pride? KU's practically allowing Wildcat fans to stake their claim at KSU Stadium-East, and we have yet to sell the place out. I know the Jayhawks are requiring $35 — a monetary fee that is a little out of the average K-Stater's price range. But hey, isn't the satisfaction of knowing the Hawks are selling out Memorial Stadium to purple-clad fanatics worth it? I think so.

Snyder could dress up like Big 12 Commissioner Steve Hatchell and convince the Big 12's southern components that the Big 12 Championship game belongs in Kansas City.

MY

Shana NEWELL

● If you don't get tickets to the game, don't plan on watching it on the boob tube. Both Fox TV and ABC declined to pick up the game. Seems there aren't enough televisions in Kansas. What do they think Kansans are? A bunch of pot-smokin', bead-wearin', Birkenstock-clad folks who tune out instead of tuning in to football games?

Hell, no. Those are just Jayhawks. The rest of the state's population, those who were smart enough to pick K-State as their favored school, would rather see the Sunflower Showdown than a Texas A&M-Baylor lay-down. (I wonder which team will lie down for the other first?)

I guess that's the price we pay for having a society controlled by money-hungry TV executives who would rather fill their pockets with greenage than our homes with the sounds of Kansas quarterback Ben Rutz being sacked by Wildcat Nyle Wiren.

Snyder could dress up like Glen Mason and scare all the Wildcats into thinking athletic director Max Urick has hired Grinnin' Glen to replace Snyder.

● Congratulations are in order for center Jason Johnson. It's not often you hear positives about members of the football team that don't relate to their performances on the field. But Johnson has done an extraordinary job in the classroom, too, with a 3.8 grade point average. It just proves that athletes can be successful academically while doing what needs to be done on the field. Way to go, Jason.

Snyder could dress up like the Jayhawks' mascot and stalk all the state's top recruits into attending K-State (as if there were a need).

● Basketball season, ladies and gents, is almost here. Before our beloved football team returns to KSU Stadium, the men's and women's basketball teams will have played three games each. But be warned, Cat fans. There's a whole lot of raw talent on the men's team this year, and it might take a while to tenderize that talent.

It might not be pretty for a while, as fans who attended Saturday's intrasquad scrimmage might attest to. At times, it looked like the baskets were covered with plastic lids.

Shot after shot after shot was sent up, but few fell. But it's a scrimmage, folks. Coach Tom Asbury has things under control. And with a cream-puff preseason schedule, the Wildcats ought to face KU in their Big 12 opener Jan. 4 with an overconfident 11-0 record. We can only hope.

Snyder could dress up like the Collegian's sports editor. Now that would be a laugh. I'd like to see Snyder in a dress. Maybe we could trade jobs for a day. Whaddya say, Coach?

● But the men aren't the only ballers on campus, folks. I haven't seen the women play yet, but I've been told the talent is there, although the depth isn't.

What do you expect with only 10 players? These gals are going to need fan support more than ever. When they're tired, trying to hold on to a 12-point lead, they're going to need to feed off the energy of the crowd.

Let's make sure there's a crowd from which they can feed. Game numero uno for the women will be at 2 p.m. Nov. 17. Take a study break, get back in town early, crawl out of bed and douse that hangover. Do whatever you need to do to be there.

Snyder could dress up like Nyle Wiren and shave his head. That would be amusing.

● Before you start that bye-weekend partying this weekend, or instead of heading to the parental units' homesteads, there's something more important you need to do.

Don your purplest of purple sweatshirts, pull your student ID out of your workout bag, head to Ahearn Field House, where with that same ID you get admitted without charge, and cheer on the volleyball team when it takes on No. 19 Texas Tech Friday and Baylor Saturday.

Each match will begin at 7 p.m. and the Baylor match will be broadcast on the Prime Sports Network at 11 a.m. Sunday. So, giddyup. Show that Wildcat spirit.

Snyder could dress up as KU running back June Henley. He'd have to find a pair of handcuffs and some prison garb, but I think it would work.

Shana Newell is a senior in secondary education. She can be reached by e-mail at (twobag@ksu.edu).

Defense breaking down mental, not lack of energy

JOHN BERGGREN
sports writer

One thing is for sure. The breakdowns in K-State's defense during the second half of games this season are not due to lack of conditioning.

The team works on conditioning year-round with programs in the winter, spring and summer. Strength and conditioning coach Rod Cole said at this point in the season, if anything, the Wildcats are over-conditioned.

"Sometimes I think at this point in the season, teams can get leg-weary from all the games and practices. There have been a couple of tough fourth quarters, but I think if anything, it could be more due to mental lapses.

"Every sport here, we train year-round," Cole said. "1996 football started for us in January. We probably do more conditioning and agilities in the winter than most programs.

"We work so that when practice starts in the spring and summer, we don't have to work on conditioning. The groundwork is already laid, so that we can work on sport fundamentals and practice."

With an open date this Saturday, the team is taking time out to rest.

"We need to make sure that we're not hitting them too hard in the weight room," Cole said. "We need to make sure that we maintain our strength, and we want to be as strong or stronger at this point in the season as we were at the beginning of the season. We never allow ourselves to get out of shape."

Some defensive players also said the reason for letting teams back into ball games the last few weeks has not been due to not being in shape.

"I think it's been more of a case of having mental breakdowns," senior defensive back Mario Smith said. "We've been getting a lead and getting a little comfortable. We just need to stay focused all the time."

Defensive end Nyle Wiren and safety Clyde Johnson agreed.

"I just think it's been a lack of focus," Wiren said. "We see the same things all day, and then we start to guess on what is coming next."

"I think it's just a matter of being conservative," Johnson said. "We haven't been tired the last two games. The only time I've ever been tired was against Texas Tech when we played 103 snaps. It's just a case of us getting relaxed and playing conservative."

Blackman was prepared to play in France this season, but differences with the management encouraged him to reconsider his options.

In the middle of September, he returned to K-State.

The NBA is full of stories of multimillio- dollar contracts leading to impoverished ex-players. But that is not Blackman's story.

"It's really dependent on who you have around you," he said. "If you surround yourself with good people, good things will happen to you, and you will be OK. But if you try to keep up with the Joneses in that league, you're going to have problems."

Blackman has spent several summers in Dallas learning the ropes in the broadcast industry and said he looks someday to break into the coaching ranks at the college or professional level. But first he wanted to fulfill a commitment he made to himself.

"He doesn't need it at all," Jankovich said. "There is absolutely no need in his life at all for that degree. I haven't talked to him about it, but my guess is it's a personal thing."

Blackman agreed.

"The opportunity it will open up for me is the chance to work with marketing and corporate matters. And it especially will help if I end up going into college coaching," he said. "I think the thing right now is that it's a personal thing. I'm not trying to send a message to anyone. It's a message for myself."

Regardless of his intentions, Blackman's decision will be remembered by the same people who idolize him — from die-hard Wildcat fans to millions in and around Dallas who, Jankovich said, consider him a hero.

"There's no question it sends good signals to youngsters," Hartman said. "I'm very proud of the fact that here he is, with a family of four kids, and he's going to get his degree."

KSU PARKING SERVICES
108 Edwards Hall 532-PARK (7275)

The Fall Semester is in full swing now and along with assignments, exams and papers, some students, faculty and staff are involved with Parking Services activities. The Kansas State University Council on Parking Operations had its first meeting on September 19, 1996 and will meet monthly through May, 1997. The Council advises the Vice-President for Administration and Finance concerning (1) traffic patterns and circulation; (2) parking fees and parking accommodations; (3) revisions to the parking and traffic regulations; and (4) future parking plans. Membership consists of three faculty members recommended by Faculty Senate, three staff members recommended by Classified Senate, three students recommended by Student Senate and four ex-officio members. Three subcommittees - Parking Regulations; Bicycles; and Citation Appeals - have been named. These subcommittees will meet and submit proposals to the entire Council. The hard work of Council members, all volunteers, is greatly appreciated.

Why??? How??? What if??? And other questions:

Can the signs in the South Union lot be improved? Can the signs on Petticoat Lane be made more visible? Yes, to both questions. While doing routine maintenance this summer, our employees did notice that many signs were in need of repair or replacement. In addition, we would like the wording of the signs to be consistent across campus. We completed an inventory of signs and are designing new signs. When the designs are complete, new signs will be ordered and installed.

Why are residence hall students only allowed to purchase permits for the residence areas only? Because residence halls are located on campus, individuals living in the halls are able to walk to class. There are currently more than 2000 parking stalls designated for residence halls only; therefore, the owners of residence hall permits basically have reserved parking. Vehicles with other than residence hall permits are not allowed to park in residence hall lots when school is in session. Incidentally, all permits (including residence hall permits) are valid at the Recreation Complex. In addition, owners of residence hall permist may also park on campus. During those times, permits are not required (i.e. after 5:00 p.m. and on the weekends). It is important to note that reserved stalls, handicapped stalls, fire lanes and other specifically designated stalls are monitored and enforced at all times.

"Between The Lines" is a monthly feature presented by KSU Parking Services. We hope to provide information which will be helpful to the campus community. Your comments and questions are encouraged. Check our web site for frequent information updates and for a comment/complaint form. Our web address is:

Huckleberry opens concert for Jars of Clay at McCain

Missy Snodgrass
staff reporter

A regional band was chosen to open for Jars of Clay and Gufs at 7:30 tonight in McCain Auditorium.

The Lawrence-based group, Huckleberry, was contacted last Wednesday by Sally Anderson, co-coordinator of Heart For Youth, to see if it would be interested in playing with the other bands.

She originally heard of the band through a K-State sorority.

"Everyone is very excited. This is definitely the biggest deal of our career so far as a band," Nick Nave, acoustic guitarist and lead singer, said.

The group found out officially on Monday that it would open for the two groups. It was waiting on the bands to approve its music.

"They need to choose what best goes with the tour," Anderson said.

Nave described his band's music as folk rock with an edge. It has a self-titled compact disc and plans to release another in January.

Four of the five members of Huckleberry attend the University of Kansas, and the fifth has graduated. The group has two acoustic guitars, a bass and electric guitar, and drums. It sometimes has an accordion accompany the routine, but not usually during live performances.

Nave said the band's name has no mysterious origin.

"That was sort of a suggestion that we kicked around, and we all liked it," Nave said.

The band normally plays in the Lawrence area. It has been featured at the Bottleneck, Jazzhaus and the Granada in Lawrence.

Tickets will be available at the door for $18.

Bowl to test student knowledge

Dave Katzer
staff reporter

There won't be any cries of "Let's get ready to rumble!" but students who want to box with their brains will get the chance by competing in the Eighth Annual College Bowl Saturday in the K-State Student Union.

The College Bowl is a double elimination tournament consisting of four- or five-person teams in a question-and-answer contest. To be eligible, students must pre-register in the Union Program Council office by Friday at 5 p.m. Each team is required to pay a $25 registration fee.

Tiffany Pollard, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine and co-chair of the event, said the contest is low stress.

"It's a fun thing to get involved with. We ask a variety of questions about history, finance and general knowledge," Pollard said.

Eight teams competed last year, and the committee expects about the same number this year.

The contest registration is at 8 a.m. Saturday in the Cats' Pause Lounge on the second floor of the Union, and the contest begins at 9 a.m. in the Sunflower Room of the Union. For more information contact the UPC office at 532-6571.

Darkness falls on McCain

▪ Loose wires cause malfunction of lights and havoc in theater

Lillian Beebe
staff reporter

The lights went out in McCain Auditorium Saturday, but the shows went on.

"What went out was basically our lighting system," Terri Lee, assistant technical director for McCain, said. "It went out Saturday around 6:30 p.m."

One of the house-light dimmers had loose wiring, Lee said. A casing that had carbon deposits caught fire sending 120 volts back into itself causing a malfunction in the light board, which controls the lighting system.

The fire melted wiring in one dimmer and affected surrounding wiring.

"We are still trying to put together what the damage is," she said.

About a third of the lights are working again, including the house lights, which are important for safety, Lee said. Lee hopes to have a full half of McCain's lighting working by Friday.

"Midori's performance will be lit," Lee said. "She'll look good."

Theatrical Services Inc., the vendor that installed the lighting system, is working on assessing the damage, Lee said.

No price tag has been attached to the repair job yet.

"We are working with a vendor, and we need to have a thorough diagnosis and then be presented with options," Richard Martin, director of McCain, said.

The system went down in stages, Lee said, with the house lights going out Saturday. The outage delayed the choral and glee clubs performance for about an hour for safety reasons, she said.

"We didn't want to bring people in in the dark," Lee said.

The crew took stage lighting in the walls, called sideports and pointed them into the house, she said.

The situation and the system worsened Saturday.

The crew assumed they had stage lights, Lee said. During the light check for "Pirates! The Ballet" the crew discovered the stage lights were down.

Three factors were explored when deciding the fate of the performance with the Australian ballet company, Martin said. The dancers' safety, providing a reasonable and entertaining performance for patrons and artistic integrity were all considered.

"One does not want to show a company or work in such a way that it destroys its integrity," Martin said.

An independent lighting system was rented, Lee said.

"Every light we had had to be wired to fit the rented light board," Lee said.

This required about 100 feet of cord for every light, she said.

The designer for the company chose to have the performance lit primarily from the side with a couple front lights, Lee said.

"Typically, light for dance is from the side to highlight the sculpture of the body," Lee explained.

The performance was delayed about 15 minutes to complete lighting and an announcement was made explaining the technical difficulties to the audience members after they were seated.

"Since there were no house lights, our major concern was for the safety of the patrons," Shanieka Foster, McCain house manager, said.

Two par lights, similar to car headlights, lit the orchestra section along with the work lights, Foster said. It was still dim, she said.

The upper and lower balconies were lit by two par lights and two scope lights that were hung beneath the spotlight in the upper balcony, Foster said.

"Ushers didn't hand out programs, because we wanted them to concentrate on helping patrons find their seats and provide extra light with their flashlights," she said.

Matthews concert comes to Sandstone

MISSY SNODGRASS
staff reporter

The Dave Matthews Band crashed into Sandstone Amphitheatre Monday.

It is no stranger to the Kansas City area. The Virginia-based band has played several times in the area including Manhattan and Lawrence.

The Dave Matthews Band is on tour promoting its latest release, "Crash."

The band was originally scheduled to play in Kansas City on Sept. 14.

The concert was rescheduled for Monday after the bassist's infant daughter died.

This didn't affect the quality of the performance.

The cool Monday night concert did not keep the reserved seating from selling out.

The lawn filled with even more fans. They had to fight their way to their seats.

The weather added an extra gruffness to Matthews' voice that he jokingly referred to as a frog in his throat.

Matthews attacked his guitar in his usual percussion style.

More than adequately backed by the rest of his jazz-influenced band, the group did not leave any feet standing still. Everyone was following the rhythm and beat set on stage.

And after an electrifying eruption on the violin, Boyd Tinsley stunned the crowd by leading the vocals of a song not currently on any compact disc.

With a 20-minute saxophone solo and an equally impressive slide performance by the bassist, the band left no ground unbroken.

Most of the songs came from the band's new album, "Crash."

It included several songs from its previous release, "Under the Table and Dreaming."

The group ended with "Ants Marching." The encore was Bob Dylan's "All Along the Watch Tower." The band played with Dylan in Germany while on tour.

The concert was brief, with a one-song encore ending at 10:30 p.m.

If you missed the concert, the Dave Matthews Band can also be found on the World Wide Web at (http://www.dmband.com/).

Radio show features local bands, music scene

BRANDI HERTIG
staff writer

Steve Anthony, KMKF-FM 101.5 air personality and creator of "Slice of the Homegrown," wants to feature local bands on his program.

The evolution of a band: in its Neanderthal state, the primitive band will play among oily rags in some guy's garage, crooning the tunes of Stone Temple Pilots and Pearl Jam.

Much later, the band will evolve into its Homo sapien form, performing in real venues, playing real songs of its own.

That's when Anthony wants to feature local bands on his program.

Anthony said the inspiration for "Slice of the Homegrown" came when he read an article in the Collegian. Anthony said the writer complained there was a lack of local talent to be had.

"There's a dire need for local air play," Anthony said. "There's a lack of respect for local talent in the area."

And thus, on Valentine's Day 1996, "Slice of the Homegrown" was born as an outlet for promoting local bands.

The show airs Monday through Friday from about 6:35 to 6:50 p.m. and presents two songs from the featured band of the evening.

On a typical program, Anthony will tell about the band and let listeners know where they can buy the band's material. Then he'll play the band's music.

On not-so-typical nights, the band will perform live on the show or Anthony will conduct interviews with the members.

Anthony said one of the best things a band can do is promote itself through live on-air play.

"There's no better way to promote the show than to do it yourself," he said.

Anthony said "Slice of the Homegrown" has a high listenership and a more diverse audience than K-Rock's normal listenership.

Many local artists listen to the show. It has a good following, he said.

Anthony pulled out a large, family-sized three-ring binder full of paper to illustrate how many bands have been featured on the show since February.

He said it is at least 120 bands. There are also about 30 bands still waiting to get on the show.

The bands are regional, coming from Manhattan, Lawrence, Kansas City and Topeka, with Manhattan-based bands making up the bulk of the performers.

To get on "Slice of the Homegrown," bands turn in recordings of their music to S.M. Hanson Music or K-Rock studios. Though it's easy to submit a recording, Anthony looks for several characteristics when considering a band for the show.

"I'm not just going to put anybody on," he said.

Anthony said he looks for bands who have a certain amount of talent, desire and the heart for playing. He said he wants bands that write their own songs, not bands who just do covers.

"Show me you're real," he said.

"Slice of the Homegrown" has featured several bands whose members are also K-State students, including Moksee, Coolerspoon and Scully.

"I think we have a better music scene than Lawrence," Anthony said. "We have a growing, diverse music scene."

Anthony said his main goals are to promote local bands and see them succeed. In order for that to happen, he said people need to go out and hear bands.

"Get off your ass and go support local music," he said.

Survivor with American ties pulled from Egyptian apartment blast

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAIRO, Egypt — For 36 hours, Samantha Miksche was entombed in the darkness of a collapsed 12-story apartment building. The Los Angeles teenager heard the cries of other survivors, the barking of search dogs and the rumble of equipment boring through the ruins.

On Tuesday, exhausted rescue workers pulled her and a friend from the rubble — bruised and bleeding, but alive.

"I'm very tired," said Miksche, a 17-year-old Australian citizen who lives in Los Angeles.

Her mother was among dozens of people still missing as the desperate search for survivors entered its third day.

Workers, some of whom had not slept for 48 hours, used cranes, shovels, picks and their bare hands to search for survivors amid the wreckage, turning up a bloodied pillow, a blue purse, a picture frame, even a school notebook.

"The child who was doing his homework, what did he do to deserve to die?" shouted a woman who collapsed in the street.

By nightfall Tuesday, the death toll had risen to at least 25, but dozens more were still missing and feared dead, police said.

At least 23 survivors have been rescued since the building's collapse Sunday night, but until the two women were found Tuesday, 21 hours had elapsed without anyone's being found alive, police said.

As many as 150 people, most of them Egyptian, were believed to have been in the building's apartments and offices.

Workers pulled Miksche and her 19-year-old Egyptian friend, Noha Fawzi, from a hallway that had not collapsed in a second-floor apartment Miksche was considering renting.

Doctors said they had cuts and bruises and were dehydrated but were otherwise in good shape.

At daybreak, government soldiers cordoned off the area.

Rescue workers and police complained that thousands of people said about the five-story-high pile of debris, hampering their work.

Nine people were arrested Monday for scavenging.

Some rescue workers wore light-blue kerchiefs to block the stench.

"Because we are alive, we have plenty of time to sleep later," said Samir Ahmed, a 21-year-old army conscript.

The cause of the collapse was being investigated.

Police have arrested the building's owner, a contractor and an engineering consultant.

Investigators suspect renovation work being done in an apartment might have weakened the building's structure.

PLANS

throughout the community.

Moore said the plan will make use of existing roadways wherever possible. Some of the plans include narrowing existing traffic lanes and adding a bicycle-only lane on the right side of the street.

Another important focus of the study was the connectivity to the University-adjacent streets, including Manhattan and Anderson avenues.

The plan proposes to reduce the number of traffic lanes on Manhattan Avenue to one lane each way with room for a center turning lane and a bicycle lane on both sides of the street.

Moore said this would help decrease the congestion of the street by the addition of the turn lane and make it safer for bicyclists riding on Manhattan Avenue.

The City/University Projects Fund has already used some of the suggestions in its budget for this and next year. Some of the suggestions implemented included the plan for improvements for bicycle parking on campus.

HUNGER

"I think this is a good opportunity to help, because we can. We have the ability to help," Coup said.

Wednesday, most fraternities and sororities have their chapter meetings, and all members are asked to bring a can of food to drop in a box during roll call. This is another way to collect food, and it adds up to a lot of pounds quickly, Simpson said.

Thursday is Fright Night with the Cats, which is in cooperation with the athletic department. The Wildcat basketball team is having one of its first scrimmages. Pickup trucks will be parked outside Bramlage Coliseum from 6:30 to 8 p.m. to collect cans of food people are encouraged to bring for donation to the Breadbasket.

"Through all the Hunger Awareness Week activities, the greeks have the opportunity to get involved with the community," Simpson said.

For $15, people from different chapters can attend a hunger dinner at 5:30 p.m. Sunday night in the K-State Student Union. Again, all proceeds go to the Breadbasket.

"At the dinner, a person has a chance of getting one of three dinners: One is a steak dinner, one is chicken, and one is macaroni and cheese, the idea being a visual comparison of the different sides of life, the different eating patterns," Simpson said.

Ruth Ann Wefald, the hostess of the party, said it is an important activity that is done every year around the holidays. In the United States, a nation of plenty, there are people who do not have enough food, she said.

"It concerns me that people do not want to acknowledge hunger in Manhattan, but I don't think we should try to hide the problem," Wefald said.

Wefald said people can help each other until there are sufficient employment and opportunities for every person. She said she is happy to have time to help with community activities such as the hunger dinner.

"Someday I might need help," she said. "Right now, I'm trying to be a helping hand for another person."

summary distributed by her campaign. The summary also said Docking believes tax cuts should provide growth-oriented incentives and tax credits that encourage investment in education, job training and family-owned businesses. She has signed a pledge not to raise taxes.

Balancing the budget is something both candidates said needs to happen.

Brownback was part of the Congress, which passed the first balanced budget in a generation. President Bill Clinton later vetoed it. The current budget Brownback supports balances the budget in six years.

Docking said a moderate, bipartisan consensus is needed to solve the budget problem. She supports the Centrist Budget, which balances the budget in seven years.

Abortion is another hot topic.

Brownback's issues summary said he opposes abortion, other than in cases threatening the life of the mother, and of rape or incest.

Docking's issues summary said she opposes government interference in the choice of a woman to have an abortion and does not agree with using tax dollars to fund abortions, except in cases of rape, incest or cases that threaten the life of the mother. She advocates counseling people toward adoption.

Both candidates said that welfare should be reformed.

Brownback said doing away with federal mandates and finding solutions to the welfare problem at the state level. Docking said she supports making job training and childcare part of any welfare reforms and making cash assistance dependent upon work.

Funding education is important for both candidates, each of whom have children.

Docking said she opposes cutting student grants and loans and said she would consider tax incentives to help families meet the increasing costs of college.

Brownback said he supports the Back to Basics Education Act.

"The legislation takes the money that is spent on the federal education bureaucracy and sends it to the states and requires that 98 percent of the funding flow directly to local schools," Brownback said.

A poll conducted by the Topeka Capitol-Journal in September found 48 percent of Kansans considered themselves to be Republicans, 26 percent called themselves Democrats, and 25 percent said they were Independents. An adjoining article also said that crossover votes were expected to play a big part in the election.

Voter turnout expected to be lower than in '92 election

"Parties don't do mobilizing anymore. The Republicans don't mobilize the lower orders."

• WALTER BURNHAM
VOTING EXPERT

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The election is almost upon the country, and about all that remains is to browbeat the American people for the next six days to shame them into voting.

This won't work. The experts say less than 55 percent of eligible Americans will participate, and they have some theories on what that says about the world's most celebrated — and maybe its most casual — democracy.

A century ago, 80 percent of eligible Americans routinely voted. But in the last 30 years, turnout has gone down. From 64 percent in 1960, when John F. Kennedy was elected, it slid to just barely above 50 percent in 1988 before squiggling up to 55.2 percent four years ago.

But the 1992 race had an incumbent president on the ropes, an attractive challenger and a feisty third-party insurgent. This time around, none of those elements apply, and that has a lot of people worried that the participants will barely outnumber nonvoters.

If people in only nine states got to elect the president next Tuesday, those in the other 41 would be outraged.

But that's what will happen, in effect. The number who will vote is roughly equal to all the voters in the nine largest states, California, New York, Texas, Florida, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Michigan and New Jersey.

"There seems little question that turnout will be down, perhaps sharply," said Curtis Gans, who has been thinking about voter turnout for 20 years. He directs the nonpartisan Committee for the Study of the American Electorate.

Things would be even worse if Congress hadn't enacted the motor-voter law, allowing people to register where they apply for driver's licenses and in other accessible places. That law registered between 6 million and 9 million new voters this year.

Still, Gans predicts that turnout on Tuesday will range between the 50.1 percent participation in 1988 — the record low in modern times — and the 55.2 percent rate in 1992.

Compare that to a century ago. In 1896, when Democrat William Jennings Bryan ran against Republican William McKinley, 79 percent turned out — including an astonishing 96 percent in Iowa and Illinois. In that year, only male citizens older than age 21 were eligible to vote.

In those days, the parties differed sharply. Now they often gloss over differences. Believing their well-being was at stake, whole classes of people associated with a party.

"Parties don't do mobilizing any more," says Walter Dean Burnham, voting expert at the University of Texas. "The Republicans don't mobilize the lower orders," he said.

And the party that traditionally played that role, the Democrats, became yuppiefied and went upscale, he said.

What worries Gans most is the tendency of young people to shun voting. Only 12 percent of those 18 to 20 voted in 1994, he says, and a majority of their parents don't vote either.

Voting matters, Gans says, because it is about the least one can do to participate in democracy. People who don't vote, he says, generally don't volunteer, don't write letters to the editor, don't organize — and that's not good for a society that depends on citizen action.

■ Clinton, Dole, Perot, Browne: where they stand on campaign issues.

DEBBIE HOLLIS
staff writer

Some undergraduate students will have their first opportunity to vote in a presidential election Tuesday. The following is an in-depth look into presidential issues identified by students earlier this fall in a survey.

COLLEGE FUNDING

Of the four presidential candidates, all but one of them believe the government should help pay for college.

Harry Browne, the Libertarian candidate, said the federal government has no place in the education system, according to his World Wide Web site at (http://www.HarryBrowne96.org/).

Browne proposes repealing the income tax. One benefit of doing so would be that parents could better afford to educate their children.

Republican candidate Bob Dole supports allotting scholarships to low-income students, increasing student loan money and Pell grants and encouraging families to save through various tax programs, said Rob Jesmer, Dole campaign office employee.

Dole and vice-presidential running mate Jack Kemp outline their plan to help students pay for college on their Web site at (http://www.dole96.org./).

Their plan encourages students to save for college expenses. One incentive to do so would allow penalty-free withdraws from IRA accounts to pay for tuition or related higher education for self, spouse or child.

To further encourage low- and middle-income parents to save, the Dole-Kemp administration would propose Educational Investment Accounts, in which parents can deposit up to $500 per child each year.

The money in these accounts is tax-free. After funds have been in the account for five years, they can be withdrawn for educational expenses at any post-secondary institution.

Tax deductions on interest paid on qualified student loans is another way the Dole-Kemp administration hopes to offer government assistance in paying for college.

President Clinton and Vice President Al Gore, who are Democrats, also outlined their plan to help pay for college on their Web site at (http://www.cg96.org/).

Clinton and Gore propose the Hope Scholarship plan, a plan geared toward helping finance full-time tuition in the first two years of a university or community college.

All students under the plan would receive a $1,500 refundable tax credit in the first year. This would be renewable in the second year if students earned a B average or better and stayed off drugs during their first year.

The president also proposes a tax deduction of up to $10,000 per year for the cost of college tuition and training, an increase in the minimum Pell Grant from $2,470 to $2,700 and expansion of the College Work Study

City searches for solutions to traffic-flow problems

ERICA DUNCAN
staff reporter

It may take millions of dollars for traffic on Anderson Avenue to flow more smoothly.

City officials tested various locations along Anderson Avenue to determine if a proposal to widen and add left-turn lanes is needed.

The traffic counters that spanned as far west as Sunset Avenue, measured the number of vehicles going each direction and will help determine if reconstruction is needed, said Chuck Williams, assistant director of public works/transportation.

The hoses gathered information for nine days. They are not usually left out for so long, but the city was interested in weekend traffic on a gameday, Williams said.

The transportation department knows left-turn lanes are needed at Denison Avenue and at 17th Street, but are not sure about Sunset Avenue.

"We make very extensive use of traffic counters," Williams said.

The counters can be used to determined if traffic signals are warranted, to detect speeds and to set timing on traffic signals.

Manhattan has 12 traffic counters that are used most of the year in various parts of the city.

Pressure of tires going over the hose signals a computer which is signaled again by the second set of tires. The computer registers each set of tires as a car and is able to count cars not just the number of passes.

The public works/transportation department is waiting on word from the state for grant money, he said.

The results have not been tallied yet, but the information should be in later this week.

Police prepared for Halloween pranks, activities

JEREMY KELLEY
staff writer

Halloween can sometimes be a dangerous time — a time certain people take it upon themselves to do unforbidden acts of arson, death, sacrifice and pagan worship.

"Occasionally we have problems (with Halloween activities), but nothing ever really big," Capt. Robert Mellgren, K-State police, said.

> "It's usually pretty quiet around here, but we will have officers out just to make sure that it remains that way."
>
> • CAPT. ALLEN RAYNOR
> RILEY COUNTY POLICE DEPARTMENT

Mellgren said the campus police aren't going to patrol the streets any more than they do on a normal evening, but rather keep a watchful eye on happenings.

"We will just raise our heightness of alert for Halloween type of activities, but nothing more than that," Mellgren said.

Capt. Allen Raynor, Riley County Police Department, said the rural areas surrounding • PUTNAM HALL will be host to a Halloween dance from 8 to midnight tonight for anyone living in residence halls and outside guests. Sara Reser, senior in marketing and social chair of Putnam Hall Governing Board, said it should be a good opportunity for those who live in residence halls.

"You can get to know people you wouldn't normally get to see in your residence hall," she said.

Admission is free, and costumes are optional. There will be prizes for the best costume and door prizes donated from Aggieville vendors.

• "THE ROCKY HORROR PICTURE SHOW" will be presented by the Feature Films and Kaleidoscope Films committees. Last year 600 people attended the event, said John Sandlin, program adviser for Union Program Council. He said he hopes for more moviegoers this year.

"I hope it will be higher this year, because it's on Halloween," he said.

The movie will be shown at midnight tonight and Friday night in the Union Ballroom. Prop bags will be sold for 50 cents each. Admission is $1.75.

FOR THE KIDS OUT THERE:

For most kids, costumes and candy are the best part of Halloween. However, they can also be the most dangerous part of the night.

"Costumes can be a real problem," said Sgt. Stanley Conkwright, Riley County crime-prevention officer, "especially masks. If kids do wear them, parents need to make sure they (masks) don't impair their breathing or vision."

Other Halloween precautions include only trick-or-treating in familiar places, going during daylight hours and inspecting candy before kids eat it.

Many area businesses are offering kids a safe, supervised alternative to neighborhood trick-or-treating.

"There is absolutely nothing scary," she said. "If there's a skeleton, it's smiling."

Halloween night trick-or-treating is being offered by the Manhattan Town Center from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m.

Participating stores will hand out candy, CPI Photo will offer free photos, and kids can get their faces painted with the donation of a canned food item benefiting the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

In Aggieville from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m., children can trick-or-treat at businesses that have signs up on their doors.

All residence halls will offer trick-or-treating on Halloween night as well as participating Greek houses.

• A '70s DANCE from 8 p.m. to midnight tonight in Union Station. There will be a costume contest, karaoke and Halloween candy. Admission is free. The dance is sponsored by UPC and the Multicultural Committee.

• A HAUNTED HOUSE organized by the Association of Residence Halls will be in the Quinlan Natural Area, near the Strong Complex, from 9 p.m. to midnight tonight. Admission is $1 or one can of food for people living in residence halls and $2 or two cans of food for those who don't live in a hall. Proceeds from the forest will go to support Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc.

Lillian Lancaster, junior in English and national communications coordinator for ARH, said the forest should take 10-15 minutes to go through.

There will be two trails, each with a different story line, and one maze.

Lancaster said the forest should be fun and safe for people of all ages.

24 HOURS IN REVIEW

NATION WORLD

• TIANANMEN LEADER CONVICTED. In a secretive trial lasting less than four hours, China today convicted a top leader of the 1989 Tiananmen pro-democracy protests of trying to overthrow the communist government. Wang Dan, 27, was found guilty of conspiring to subvert the Chinese government and sentenced to 11 years in prison. Wang, who spent 3 1/2 years in prison for his 1989 activities, had violated his parole, plotted with hostile overseas organizations and endangered state security. He apparently committed those crimes by writing essays critical of the government, aiding other dissidents in financial difficulties and accepting aid from overseas.

• APARTHEID KILLER GETS LIFE IMPRISONMENT. A former South African police colonel — who once admitted he doesn't know how many anti-apartheid activists he killed — was sentenced Wednesday to two life terms in prison. He became the highest-ranking officer convicted of apartheid-era crimes. Eugene de Kock, 47, claimed during his trial that he carried out attacks on the orders of superiors. De Kock headed a unit notorious for killing and torturing anti-apartheid activists and was convicted of six murders and 83 lesser charges. Judge Willem van der Merwe passed two life sentences on de Kock Wednesday — one for murder and one for conspiracy to murder. He also sentenced him to 212 years jail.

• MALARIA KILLS MORE THAN 800 PEOPLE IN INDIA. Malarial mosquitoes breeding in huge swamps created by unusually heavy monsoon rains in northern India have caused a malaria outbreak that has killed at least 800 people. Officials say hundreds of others may have died without receiving medical care. Newspapers put the death toll as high as 2,300 since early September, but state health officials said that figure was exaggerated. Nevertheless, authorities estimate 70,000 people in the region just southwest of New Delhi are suffering from the mosquito-borne disease.

Ice cold as Ice

Food-preparation class learns showmanship through ice sculpture from country-club chef

JESS LOUK
staff reporter

Students enrolled in Commercial Foods Preparation and Service received a little chill Wednesday afternoon.

They were given a chance to carve blocks of ice into the letters K, S and U. Students also got a chance to watch a local chef carve an eagle and a vase.

"In their jobs they are going to be exposed to many art carvings. This class gives them the chance — even if they are not the main person in charge of it — to learn more about ice, how to handle it and what goes into it so they can manage the kitchen situation better," said Paul Bagdan, graduate teaching assistant in hospitality management.

MATT HUPP, sophomore, carves an S out of a block of ice while Lisa Chapman, junior, watches. Hupp and Chapman are studying hotel and restaurant management.

CLIF PALMBERG
Collegian

Each block of ice used weighed 300 pounds, stood about 3 feet tall and cost $40. The total bill was $400. The students raised the money by participating in a sensory analysis test. They sampled different types of lemonade and were paid $10.

One of the highlights of the afternoon was watching John Scritchfield, a certified chef de cuisine from the Manhattan Country Club, carve.

"Ice carving gives you a chance to express your showmanship," Scritchfield said.

As a chef, Scritchfield said he produces 10-15 sculptures a year. For every home football game, Scritchfield carves the Powercat for the country club.

Many students commented on the cold conditions associated with ice carving.

"Wear warm shoes and gloves and be prepared to bundle up," said Maija Diethelm, freshman in pre-health professions program.

Funds requested to pay for street improvements

SPEED READ

- The city of Manhattan and K-State are requesting funds from the City/University Projects Fund to pay for improvements to College Avenue.

SCOTT CONNER
staff reporter

The City of Manhattan and K-State are requesting the use of more than $100,000 from the City/University Projects Fund's 1998 budget to help pay for paving and widening a section of College Avenue that runs north of Kimball Avenue.

The paving and widening was finished this summer as part of the project that put stoplights at the corner of Kimball and College avenues.

The city commission will have final approval of including the project's funding when it approves the City/University Project Fund Committee's 1998 budget by the end of this year.

The city was assessed this cost after a benefit district was created by landowners in the area to help fund the project.

According to the benefit district conditions, the city pays half the project with the other half paid by district landowners.

"This is a reasonable compromise to the situation that the city and the University has been put in by the creation of the district," said Bill Muir, director of community relations for K-State.

> "It seemed to be the most painless way to get the process accomplished."
> • BILL MUIR
> DIRECTOR OF COMMUNITY RELATIONS

In 1994, some landowners who own property adjacent to the street brought a request before the city commission to create a benefit district to help pay for the paving of the section of road.

K-State administration originally objected to this proposal, because K-State owns all the property on the east side of the benefit district.

The University owns cropland that is used for research along the stretch of road. Muir said he thought at the time that paving the road along the cropland would not be beneficial.

He said K-State administration then reviewed other options in handling the landowners' request to create the district.

Other options to oppose the creation of the district, such as pursuing litigation or legislation, would not have been reasonable, Muir said.

Muir said the only feasible way to fund the project was to use City/-University Project Fund.

"It seemed to be the most painless way to get the process accomplished," Muir said.

The University decided to use the funds because it was the only source of money that would not directly affect the University's overhead budget, he said.

Ruby Ridge FBI official pleads guilty

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A senior FBI official pleaded guilty to obstruction of justice Wednesday for destroying a report that criticized the FBI's role in a deadly 1992 shootout at the Idaho cabin of white separatist Randall Weaver.

E. Michael Kahoe, who entered his plea before U.S. District Judge Ricardo Urbina, agreed to cooperate with prosecutors investigating whether other FBI officials were involved in the report's suppression.

Prosecutors said Kahoe destroyed the documents to keep them from attorneys representing Weaver, whose wife and son were killed during a nine-day standoff with government agents at Weaver's rural Idaho cabin in 1992.

Weaver and a friend, Kevin Harris, were acquitted of charges that they killed a federal marshal during a shootout that led to the FBI siege.

> "It was recognized at the time that the FBI had problems in the Weaver case.
> • ERIC SITARCHUCK
> ASSISTANT U.S. ATTORNEY

As head of the FBI's violent crimes and major offenders section, Kahoe was responsible for preparing a critique of the FBI's performance at Ruby Ridge. Such reports are typically compiled after every violent encounter involving federal agents.

According to a factual summary of the case, Kahoe first refused to turn over certain documents to the U.S. attorney's office in Idaho, prompting the Justice Department to intervene.

The U.S. attorney in Idaho needed all FBI records relating to Ruby Ridge to help prepare its case. It also was required to provide those documents to the defense.

Kahoe then refused to turn over the after-action critique to the Justice Department, the report stated. After that, he told a subordinate, Gale Evans, that he had destroyed his copies of the report and instructed Evans to do the same — and to dispose of a computer disc on which the report was stored.

The report criticized the FBI's conduct of the case. FBI sharpshooters killed Weaver's wife, Vicki Weaver.

"It was recognized at the time that the FBI had problems in the Weaver case," Assistant U.S. Attorney Eric Sitarchuk said. "The report was destroyed so that the defense would not learn of those problems."

Kahoe, a 25-year FBI veteran, faces up to 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine in connection with his felony plea.

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

Relive childhood memories; be a charitable trick-or-treater

Halloween trick-or-treating was an integral part of most of our childhoods.

The suffocating masks of those Wonder Woman or Batman costumes, eating candy until you got sick, feeding candy to your dog until he got sick and listening to your friends tell you ghastly ghost stories so you couldn't sleep for weeks are all parts of many of our Halloween memories.

WHY WE CARE

Trick-or-treating isn't just for kids. You can dress up and go from door to door with your friends, too. But this time, it'll be for more than candy.

Ah, childhood.

Tonight little ones will be flocking the streets to enjoy many of the same rituals we did in our youths.

But just because you're all grown up, this is no reason for you not to be able to dress up and knock on strangers' doors, too.

Sure, the rules might have to be modified a little.

This time when you knock on your neighbor's door, why not do something philanthropic?

Instead of asking for candy, ask for canned goods and hygiene products such as deodorant, soap and shampoo.

When you've gathered up all your grown-up goodies, take them to your favorite charity.

Dillons is collecting nonperishable food items for several charities in a drop box at the front of the store. Or you could contact the Flint Hills Breadbasket at 537-0730.

If you take a canned good to Manhattan Town Center tonight, you will get a free photograph and your face painted.

Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc. can be contacted at 537-3113. The shelter often takes donations of clothes, hygiene products and other items displaced people might need.

You can also donate to the Salvation Army. You can get in touch with them at 539-9399.

These are just some suggestions. There are literally hundreds of charitable causes in need of food and other items.

At this time of year, it starts to get cold, and there are people in need of food and other help. The last thing on their mind is Halloween candy.

You can help. It'll be fun.

You get to get all dressed up in your most creative garb and go trick-or-treating with your friends.

The only difference is that this time, not only will you be having loads of fun and reliving childhood memories, but you will be helping those who really need it.

on the edge of sanity

Journey, Winnie-the-Pooh and campus squirrels are signs you might be having a mental breakdown

MY

Erin
MANSUR-SMITH

I have had it.

About 2-1/2 weeks ago, confronted by a pulsating mound of paperwork on my desk and pools of undone homework on my floor that grabbed me as I walked by, I decided to have a nervous breakdown.

Usually, I do not schedule my mental collapses, but I figured because I had a good, uninterrupted five minutes, I would spend it picking invisible daisies out of my lime-green office carpet instead of going to the bathroom or having a meal.

There are several different levels to a nervous breakdown in my opinion. I am not talking a crisis here, not a catastrophe.

I am not talking about clinical depression, suicidal or homicidal tendencies, uncontrollable weeping or any of the other criteria you might see listed in a Charter's Clinic commercial.

I am talking about that little walk around the reality block we have all taken at one point or another. Mine wasn't a large quake actually, registering barely 2.3 on the old Psyche scale.

Yet it was therapeutic and strangely comforting to forget about being all there for a little while.

I wasn't gone long, and when I stopped screaming in high C's like a whale in heat, I realized I felt better and a little more in control of myself.

It is a pretty common thing that occurs among students. Maybe because it is that time of the year or because of a change in weather. Maybe the nuclear reactor on campus is beginning to affect our brains, causing us to mutate into madness at different rates. Nah.

I just know that there are people pacing the aisles of Food 4 Less with giant wooden spoons at 3 in the morning, screaming for a can of lard.

That is not just a great way to spend a Saturday night. It could be a cry for help.

So I have devised a few guidelines to help you diagnose whether or not you are wading in the shallow end of the pool of sanity. Mind you, I am not a doctor.

If more than three items below apply to you, this column does not count as a prescription for any really good drugs at the local pharmacies.

Have you sent either football coach Bill Snyder or President Jon Wefald a love letter?

Have you started writing your checks in Roman numerals?

Have you ever counted the steps between classes?

Have you listened to more than two Journey songs in a row lately? (If you have, seek medical attention. Immediately.)

Have you, in the last 24 hours, eaten K-State Student Union food and felt satisfied?

Have you started writing your final papers just so you could sniff the white out?

Have you ever listened to KSDB-FM 91.9 and lost your train of thought?

Have you entertained the thought of running naked through Anderson Hall and found yourself fiddling with your buttons as you walk through it?

Have you begun to find the squirrels on campus strangely attractive?

Have you gone to Wal-Mart to window shop?

Are you entertaining thoughts of seducing your graduate teaching assistant for a higher D? (If so, get a hold of me. I can't help you with your grade, but I'll give you extra credit.)

Have you ever started crying because you couldn't complete a Collegian crossword?

Did you throw a birthday party for Winnie-the-Pooh?

Have you ever run one car ahead of the ticket guy in a parking lot, putting change in expired meters and laughing maniacally?

According to my definition, everyone at one point or another, from my editor, Sera, to the president has had a nervous breakdown. (I think Sera has had one at least once a day. That just might be coughing up hairballs. Sometimes it is a little hard to tell.)

If you are, however, having severe problems sleeping, eating, concentrating, if you are entertaining thoughts of suicide, of hurting yourself or someone else, please contact University Counseling Center at Lafene Health Center.

Generally speaking, I'd say there is nothing wrong with most of us getting 12 hours of uninterrupted sleep and a good roll in the hay won't cure.

If you are a little bonkers (for lack of a better term) at present, there is nothing to be ashamed of and there is, in my opinion, no reason to check yourself into Topeka State Mental Hospital for the rest of the semester.

While it won't get you out of classes and according to the law, won't get you out of assault charges, it can be fun. Sit back. Relax, and enjoy the ride.

Happy Halloween

Trick-or-treating with Jeffrey Dahmer, Charles Manson and Miss Piggy

MY

Nikola Maria
ZYTKOW

This Halloween I'm going bag snatchin'.

Yeah, you heard me.

I'm gonna sneak up behind some unsuspecting tyke toting a bag of goodies. And just as the little lad is about to bite into his York Peppermint Patty, I'm gonna snatch that pumpkin-shaped bag from his feeble, little grip and run. Run like hell!

Calm down, you children's rights advocates.

I'm just kidding.

Hey, I have a little brother. If someone snatched his sack of snacks, I'd chase down the culprit and beat him on the head with a jumbo candy cane. That's the kind of sweet sister I am.

But back to the issue of crime.

Yes, stealing candy from the cavity-ridden mouths of babes is terrible, terrible. I remember back in high-school art class, I sat behind a large boy, who bragged about all of the Sweet Tarts, Twizzlers and Skittles he would snag from the hands of Spiderman, Cinderella and Mickey Mouse.

"They're goin' down," he'd say, howling with laughter.

Obviously too big to pass for a trick or treater, bully-boy took to the streets, tormenting the neighborhood tots. I watched him sink his teeth into his post-Halloween kill the next day in class. Smudges of Hershey's chocolate on his plump cheeks and pieces of Milk Duds stuck in his teeth remained the sole evidence of his grisly crime.

These days the overgrown primate might find it harder to seize the saccharine-saturated goods. Today's costumes aren't the innocent get-ups of the past. The days of Miss Piggy and Ernie and Bert are fading. More and more kids are choosing costumes representing the darker side of humanity.

This Halloween, grannies everywhere will open their doors to the likes of Jeffrey Dahmer, Son of Sam and SURPRISE — O.J. Simpson.

"Boo!"

Yes, real-life monsters are appearing next to the fictional Freddy Krugers, Manglers and Pinheads in Halloween mask stores.

And while it was probably no big deal for the teen-age terrorist to snatch a bag of Goobers from Strawberry Shortcake or even G.I. Joe, he'd think twice before trying to swindle a Snickers bar from Charles Manson or tugging a piece of licorice from Ted Bundy.

Halloween has become a parade of death-row inmates, serial killers and terrorists.

"I'm going as the Unabomber," a friend of mine said.

The theme of the party — real-life wackos. So manifesto in hand, he'll make his grand entrance in the hooded sweatshirt, dark glasses and an unshaven beard to match.

Even the haunted houses are cashing in on the concept.

I recently read an article about a "House of Terrors" in Anaheim, Calif., eerily resembling a famous murder scene.

Before the family of the late Nicole Brown complained to owners, the house featured a blond actress sprawled on a sidewalk with a sliced throat. The presence of a black man with a knife and video footage of the crime scene made the whole setup seem like a little more than mere coincidence.

Maybe its just me. Maybe this is not a new phenomenon.

Maybe I'm just longing for the days of handing out Rice Krispies Treats to girls dressed up as Barbie dolls and boys as Transformers.

There'd be the occasional Darth Vader or the Incredible Hulk, but that's as violent as it got.

My last Halloween costume was far from shocking. My friends and I strapped on bushy wigs and slipped into polyester bell bottoms and platform shoes.

"Smoke weed, not crack," we'd say, in our coolest hippy voices.

Ahh, those were the days.

But the times they are a changin'.

And being the cool, progressive chick that I am, maybe I should just chuck it up, pick up a trench coat, a hook knife and go as Jack the Ripper.

I think not.

This Halloween I'm going to step out on my own with a bold statement.

I'm going to be (yes, you guessed it) Anna Nicole Smith.

That's right. I'm going to buy a blond wig, dot on a black mole and stuff my bra with two rolls of Charmin.

She might be a ditzy, over-exposed, Marilyn Monroe wanna-be gold digger.

She might have made the National Enquirer's list of top-10 fashion fatalities.

Hey, she might even have driven that poor old man to his grave.

But she's no KILLER, I tell ya.

And she certainly doesn't look like the kind of gal who would give up her Tootsie Rolls too easily.

So step off all you bag snatchers.

God didn't make this country; hard-working citizens made it

Editor,

I'd like to take a moment to respond to Jeremy Stephens's column "In God We Trust?" Stephens expressed his disappointment in the separation between the federal government and his religion.

Also, he truthfully said the Constitution does not contain the term separation between church and state. Perhaps Stephens wasn't paying attention in his high-school government class when his teacher taught our Constitution and that its laws are living, changing documents.

For example, initially, our Constitution and its laws did not prohibit slavery or give women the right to vote, but this was corrected. Our laws have always moved toward protecting minority rights whether they be for race, creed, color, gender or religious preference. Stephens, would you have it any other way?

This month we celebrate the 200th anniversary of the Treaty of Tripoli, which states unequivocally that this nation was not founded on religious principles. The statement In God We Trust, that appears on our currency was placed there in the early 1950s as a response to communism in Russia.

At the same time the Pledge of Allegiance was modified to include the term under God, also for the same reason. Do you think the McCarthy era represents the proper way for this country to respond to the threat of communism, Stephens?

Our nation does not officially espouse any religion. This protects your right to worship as you see fit, and my right to not be religious. To maintain this protection, you are not allowed to preach to me in the federal offices or as a representative of the federal government.

But this prohibition, Stephens, is a long way from prohibiting you from practicing religion.

Finally, this nation did not become a world superpower because of fate or faith. We became a superpower because of hard work, our freedom to think and freedom to hold property and wealth.

Look closely at our history, and you won't find anywhere that God helped in a battle, research or product development. Nowhere when the chips were down, or the outlook bleak, did God manifest himself to help out.

It was the hard work and sacrifice of brave people. To attribute their effort and sacrifice to a deity would be an insult.

Reader learned valuable lessons while doing community service

Editor,

My friends thought I had a death wish. My dad thought I had arrived at a whole new level in my already perfected skill of spending money.

My brother teased that I needed to find myself, while my mom just released that long, tired, here-he-goes-off-the-deep-end-again sigh.

Much to my chagrin, my brother's catty little remark was probably the most accurate description of the experience.

I was a participant in the Community Service Program International Team that went to Paraguay for two months this summer.

I went with two people who I met in spring 1996 with the objectives of teaching English, basic computer skills and environmental awareness.

Our host site was a tiny pueblo called San Juan Bautista. I took the similarity between the town's name and my last name as a good omen and didn't expect any problems.

I was wrong. There were problems. The first one being that I took no winter clothes the exact year that Paraguay experienced the worst cold weather in recent history. I survived, though, and I also learned a lesson about the importance of expecting the unexpected.

We had lots of surprises in Paraguay last summer — many pleasant, some not so pleasant.

The funny thing now is that I look back and realize that I never really anticipated such a fulfilling experience. I thought I'd improve my Spanish, gain international experience and learn something about community service.

What I learned went so much further than that or any other thing I might have imagined. In Paraguay, I learned how to solve problems. Also, I learned to give of myself freely, something that's hard for me to do.

More importantly, I learned that what I have to offer is worth other people's time to receive. I tapped into resources I never knew I had, and as a result there's nobody who can knock a hole in the faith I have in myself.

If I left behind just a fraction of the strength and knowledge that I gained while in that country, I feel confident that my time spent was worthwhile.

Polls accessible to disabled

Askia Adams voted for the first time in the August primaries.

Adams, freshman in elementary special education, is in a wheelchair, and he cannot mark his ballot himself.

"I have to have someone go in to the booth with me and mark the ballot," he said.

He said his parents helped him in August. For the general election Tuesday, Adams is voting with an absentee ballot.

Ilene Colbert, Riley County clerk and election officer, said she thinks a lot of disabled people probably vote with absentee ballots.

She said most of the 44 polling places in Riley County are handicapped accessible.

According to Title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act, any activity operated by a state or local government must be readily accessible to and usable by people with disabilities, unless it would fundamentally alter the activity.

"Another thing we do for people is if by chance someone cannot get into a polling place, ballots can be brought to them, like to their car or to the door," she said.

Disabled people have several other options of how to vote, but Colbert said Riley County has never had any braille ballots or special ballots.

Allen Martin, human relations officer and ADA coordinator for Manhattan, said disabled people must tell officials what they need.

People can vote with advance ballots, Colbert said.

"To obtain an advance ballot, the application must be signed by the person requesting the ballot," Colbert said.

Someone other than the voter can bring in the signed application and pick up the ballot.

She said there are no longer applications for people to vote on another person's behalf. Now the voter must sign all applications.

Voters can be assisted in the voting booth, but the person who helps the voter must sign a form. She also said anyone can vote in the county clerk's office until noon Monday.

"After Friday night at 5, the only ballots that can be taken out of the office are for sick or disabled people," she said.

"We want everybody to vote, and we'll do everything we can to see that they do get to vote," Colbert said.

Ex-CIA analyst accuses Pentagon of hiding data on Gulf War illness

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Records of U.S. military units deployed in the Persian Gulf War contain abundant evidence of exposure to Iraqi chemical weapons, a former CIA analyst said Wednesday. He accused the Pentagon and CIA of engaging in a pattern of deception and denial.

"There's no way you can even begin to get a complete picture of what happened over there unless and until they declassify every single unit log," said Patrick Eddington, who resigned from the CIA earlier this year.

During the Gulf War, Eddington analyzed satellite photos of Iraqi troop movements. Later, he and his wife, Robin Eddington, also a CIA analyst, began collecting information on their own initiative about the possible use of chemical weapons during that brief conflict. Robin Eddington also resigned from the CIA earlier this year.

"The idea that the Defense Department has engaged in any sort of conspiracy to cover up any information regarding Gulf War illness is simply not true," Pentagon spokesman Bryan Whitman said. "We have nothing to hide. As we learn new information, we provide it as rapidly as possible."

"All of the information Mr. Eddington brought forward was looked at by the CIA and provided to the presidential advisory commission," said Mark Mansfield, a spokesman for the CIA.

Mansfield said Eddington's views on the issue were given a full review and "agency analysts did not agree with his conclusions."

In an interview with the Associated Press, Eddington said logs of the 101st Airborne Division from January 1991 showed that during a period of two or three hours one unit repeatedly detected chemical agents.

He also said top Pentagon officials, including Defense Secretary William Perry and Gen. John Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, falsely denied the existence of evidence of U.S. forces' exposure to chemical agents during the conflict with Iraq.

Eddington said that in May 1994, Perry and Shalikashvili issued a memorandum that said "there was no information, classified or otherwise, that indicated that any kind of chemical agent exposures had occurred or that any munitions were in the theater. That was a false statement."

Fright Night offers more than scrimmage

JON BALMER
staff writer

With numerous activities and giveaways planned, the K-State basketball team inaugurates a new event tonight when the Bramlage Coliseum doors open and Fright Night begins.

The event is a change from past years' Midnight Madness, which wouldn't get under way until the first legal practice of the season could begin at 12:01 a.m.

K-State Sports Information Director Kent Brown said the reason for having Fright Night earlier was timing and attendance.

"If we had done Midnight Madness this year, it would have been held on a Monday night, which would discourage many from coming," Brown said. "By scheduling Fright Night earlier, we hope to bring in more people and make it more family-oriented."

While this new event might be a change from past years' approaches, Coach Tom Asbury said Fright Night will offer plenty to please.

"We're doing a lot more for the fans this season," Asbury said. "However, we won't pull out the Harlem Globetrotters routine."

The goodies planned to be distributed include bags of candy and free T-shirts to the first 1,000 fans. A plethora of booths ranging from bobbing for apples to photos with Willie will be set up and ready for all who enter.

Fright Night begins at 6:30 p.m., when the doors open. Then, at about 7:30 p.m., it gets under way bigtime. After a brief introduction of the coaches, both the men's and women's teams act out skits, and a roundball match-up between guest celebrities gets rolling.

The finale of the Fright will feature scrimmages between both teams and will conclude with an autograph session immediately following the contest.

Although this year's Bramlage battle does not pack the late-night mystique of past events, Asbury said he believes it will still be entertaining.

"I think the Fright Night concept is really workable," Asbury said. "It will be fun for fans of all ages."

Recruiters showcase K-State to nation's best

DAN LEWERENZ
staff writer

With the fall signing period less than three weeks away, K-State's women's basketball staff kicked the recruiting efforts into high gear last weekend, playing host to four of the nation's top athletes, including Kansan and all-American Jackie Stiles.

Stiles made an unofficial visit to K-State but she plans to make her official visit this weekend.

Ranked the No. 6 player in the country by Blue Star Index, a women's basketball scouting service, Stiles played on the U.S. Junior National Team in August, helping the Americans qualify for the Junior World Championships in Brazil next summer.

"She made the team as a great three-point shooter and a great work ethic," said Rene Portland, head coach at Penn State and coach of the Junior National Team. "She can beat anybody one-on-one."

At 5'9", Stiles, a Claflin native, is shorter than many Division I off-guards. But her speed, strength and athleticism allow her to compete with bigger players, and her ball-handling skills allow her to move to the point.

"Jackie can play either the point-guard spot or the two-spot, and we used her at both this summer," Portland said.

Stiles is considering Connecticut, Colorado, Oklahoma and Southwest Missouri State.

Although Stiles might be the best player K-State has ever recruited, all three of the other visitors to Manhattan are ranked in the Blue Star Index Top 300, with two post players ranked among the 71 best players in the nation.

Becky Fisher, a 6'3" forward from West Des Moines (Dowling High School), Iowa, is ranked No. 69 overall by Blue Star, No. 19 among post players.

"She's played center for us since she was a freshman," said Bob Hanson, girl's basketball coach at Dowling High School. "She can face in the high post, and she's fairly quick for her size. She's not a heavy-set kid — she's more of a lean, finesse player."

Fisher, who averaged about 15 points and 10 rebounds as a junior, is interested in studying journalism and comes from an athletic family. Her older brother Paul plays for Harvard, and older sister Rhonda is on the basketball team at Iowa State.

In addition to K-State, Fisher is considering Harvard, Tulane and Northwestern.

The other top-ranked post on K-State's list is Nikki Swagger, a 6'3" forward/center from Colorado Springs (Doherty High School). Swagger, one of many highly-touted post players from Colorado this season, is ranked No. 71 overall by Blue Star, No. 20 among posts.

"She posts up well, and sees the open floor well," Doherty assistant coach Dawn Valentine said. "She often spots other post players on the blocks and dumps the ball down to them when she draws the double-team."

Swagger averaged nearly 14 points per game in limited action last season. But Valentine said one of Swagger's strengths is her defensive play, something that will help her fit in well at K-State.

"She's a good, aggressive defensive player, but she stayed out of foul trouble last year," Valentine said.

Swagger is considering Colorado, Texas A&M, Auburn and Arizona State in addition to the Wildcats.

K-State's final visitor last weekend was Beersheba Springs, Tenn., native Kim Woodlee.

A 5'9" point guard/shooting guard, Woodlee is ranked among the top swing players in the Blue Star Top 300.

An exceptional shooter, passer and ball-handler, Woodlee will bring a 4.0 GPA and a desire to study pre-med to either K-State or Clemson, the only two schools she is considering.

NCAA rules prohibit K-State coach Debbie Patterson or her staff from commenting on potential recruits until the school has received a letter of intent.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

Patterson is not the only K-State basketball coach entertaining top-ranked recruits. Wichita East High School product Korleone Young, hailed by some as the top high school junior in the nation, attended the Wildcats' open scrimmage Saturday morning.

Young, a 6'8 forward, is ranked the No. 1 high school junior in Dick Vitale's College Basketball. The Sporting News rates Young No. 3 in the nation, with Kansas City, Mo., product Jaron Rush No. 1.

Media day kicks off inaugural Big 12 women's basketball

MY

Dan LEWERENZ

Yesterday was the most exciting day of my life — the first Big 12 women's basketball media day.

OK, not really. I know some of you think we Collegian people are depraved, but I'm not so far gone that some public-relations event is going to make me rethink my understanding of the universe — even if it is a women's basketball PR event.

But it was a pretty big day.

For those of us who exist in the world of sports (someone asked me the other day if I had registered to vote, and I asked if the AP poll needed more members), the Big 12 has been a non-stop thrill-ride.

There was the mystery at the outset: Who would be invited to join? Would K-State or Iowa State or Baylor or Texas Tech be left out of the mix as some anticipated? Would Arkansas or Brigham Young be invited to join?

There was the infighting: Who would be the first commissioner? Where would the football and basketball championships be played? Where would the conference offices be housed?

There has been intrigue: Why does Colorado always vote with the Southern Division schools? Why does everybody always vote against Nebraska in everything? Who will be the first school put on probation? The smart money is on Texas Tech, but when dirty dealings are in the air Oklahoma will never be far behind.

There has been surprise: Colorado has already entertained a serious offer to withdraw, and many felt Texas would bolt with the Buffaloes. The South has fallen flat in football — more than likely all six Southern teams will finish with five or more losses.

But there have also been triumphs beyond even the high expectations of the conference. Nebraska hopes to challenge for its third consecutive national championship in football, and Colorado and K-State are in position to earn Bowl Alliance bids.

Three Big 12 teams (Nebraska, Texas and Texas A&M) are in the Top 10 in volleyball — more than any other conference — with Texas Tech and K-State in the Top 25.

Kansas sits atop most men's basketball polls, and four women's teams are considered contenders for the Sweet 16 come March.

All of which brings me back to women's basketball, where I intend to spend most of my Big 12 time.

Although the preseason all-America teams are still dominated by the Southeastern Conference (and Stanford, which ought to have honorary SEC membership), the Big 12 has more than a couple players capable of holding their own with anybody in the nation.

Kansas guard Tamecka Dixon can drive on just about anyone in the country, and Texas' Danielle Viglione is as pure a shooter as you'll find in college basketball. Texas Tech center Alicia Thompson and Colorado forward Erin Scholz have the muscle and the moves to take (or fake) anyone off the blocks.

And K-State is not out of this picture.

Although a conference title this year would take a minor miracle, the return of three players who garnered honorable-mention all-conference accolades, seniors Andria Jones and Missy Decker and junior Brit Jacobson, ensure the Wildcats will be a threat to anyone and everyone they play.

The bottom line is everybody in the Big 12 can beat just about everybody else. And that hasn't always been the case with these teams.

Colorado, which rose as high as No. 2 in the polls in both 1994 and 1995, swept undefeated through the Big 8 season and tournament twice, the last time in 1995.

And most of the teams in the former Southwest Conference have single-digit wins against Texas in the history of their programs — heck, there are teams down there who have never beat the Longhorns. Not once. Never. Never ever.

Things have changed. Baylor, which had the position of SWC carpet for several years, has a coach with a national championship under her belt. Iowa State, the Big 8's punching bag for too many years, signed one of the nation's best recruiting classes.

If the beginning of Big 12 women's basketball is like the first day of spring, media day is like the groundhog missing his shadow. It's a sign of good things to come.

Cats' defense ranked No. 4 nationally; stats from Sooner game say otherwise

SHANE MCCORMICK
staff writer

After its first seven games, the K-State defense was ranked No. 4 nationally in pass efficiency, with opponents averaging 80.3 yards per game.

But numbers can be deceiving.

The Cats moved to 7-1 in the season with a 42-35 win against the Oklahoma Sooners Saturday.

But numbers can be deceiving.

The Sooners threw for 239 yards against the Cats secondary in that contest.

K-State's defensive backfield allowed just 37 yards in the air after one half, taking a 28-7 lead into the second half.

But Sooner quarterback Eric Moore burned the Cat secondary for 202 yards in the second half, almost resurrecting the Sooners to victory, or at least a tie.

In the second half, Moore connected with receivers for touchdown bombs of 33,40 and 26 yards.

"We just broke down in some areas in the second half," co-defensive coordinator Mike Stoops said. "It just seems like we haven't been able to finish teams in the second half."

Allowing teams to get back into games has been one of the most important concerns for this year's Wildcats.

In the combined first halves of each game this season, the Wildcats' defense has allowed only 38 points, but in the second halves, the Cats have allowed 90.

A Cat secondary, which has been dominating at times this season, missed assignments and was burned on routes against the Sooners Saturday.

Is there a leak in the secondary?

"Yes, because opponents have been completing passes on us," Coach Bill Snyder said.

But Snyder said all the fault cannot fall on the players.

"I think we are being too predictable at times and our coaches need to keep a better eye on it," Snyder said. "It is something we've let happen for the last two or three weeks. We need to have a little more variety out there."

But to keep from being too predictable, more of the zone defense and less man-on-man coverage could come out of the secondary, if only for relief for Wildcat cornerbacks.

"We need to put more of the zone into our system," Stoops said. "It will give our corners a break now or then."

Snyder said the bye week is a good one for his players to get mentally refreshed.

Players also know how important this week off is.

"This is a very useful time for us. It allows us to practice on our techniques before KU," free safety Mario Smith said. "The secondary had a bit of a mental breakdown last time. You'll never see that again."

website review

Every week, Darin Siefkes, senior in history, and radio and television, will review various sites on the World Wide Web. Do you know an interesting site, have a question or want to comment?
E-mail Siefkes at (wings@ksu.ksu.edu).

With the aid of faster computers, sound cards and speakers, the World Wide Web is starting to become a multimedia medium.

My thanks goes out to Chris "the fishman" Brown for his recommendations.

TV Bytes (http://ai.eecs.umich.edu/people/kennyp/tv2/tvtemp.html)

This has been known on the Web as the best TV theme song archive on the Web.

Unfortunately, due to the people whose goal in life is to make us pay each time we so much as hum a song, it has been shut down.

I include this page as a warning to everyone who claims they are for free speech.

U.S. copyright laws are outdated.

Every sound you download off the Web that isn't from the owner of that sound is technically against the law.

Of course this is the same law the people usually edit out when they copy movies, or make tape recordings of compact discs.

With that in mind, let's visit some that haven't been shut down yet.

Tunes from our Childhood (http://www.columbia.edu/%7Egan3/80s.html)

If you are looking for TV themes that aren't quite as complete as Kenny's old site, this is the place to go.

There are three graphics and at least 100 songs.

"Gilligan's Island" (but only one version of it), "Mr. Rogers Neighborhood," and "WKRP," to name just a few, grace this site to make it well worth the amount of time it takes to view.

Scott's Sound Page (http://www.tink-net.com/sounds.htm)

Our final stop this week takes us to one of the better sound mixes on the Web.

It has a nice collection of the TV themes including a couple of my favorites: "Battlestar Galactica" and "The Hitchhikers Guide to the Galaxy."

Scott has also included several cartoon themes and sound effects.

There are a few nice quotes from Warner Brothers.

The more unusual section is the comedy.

There are quotes from the Three Stooges, Abbott and Costello, Monty Python and Eddie Murphy, just to name a few.

There is also a section with MIDI versions of popular songs. MIDI files usually sound like a cross between elevator music and electronic keyboards. I'm not a fan, but if you're into that type of thing, this is a place to stop.

The spoof section is also popular.

It includes political commercials and the alternative lyrics to the "Barney" theme song.

If you are just looking for the unusual sound for your machine, this is the place to go.

Lighting techniques essential to recreating the '60s in 'Hair'

Brandi Hertig
staff writer

The production of the rock opera "Hair" will incorporate techniques designed to bring the audience into the 1960s, while keeping the story relevant for students in the 1990s.

Luke Kahlich, professor of dance and theater, is directing the show.

"It's much more like a '90s rock concert," Kahlich said.

For this production the lighting designer and set designer are meeting together with the director. Usually, the lighting and set designers meet separately with the director, Kahlich said.

Huge trusses have also been rented and Kahlich plans to use six spotlights so the entire backstage can be seen.

A specialist will also be brought in to help run the lights, because the controls are computerized.

"'Hair' is a different type of show," John Uthoff, associate professor and lighting director, said.

Uthoff said because the show is basically a series of songs tied together, it's closer to being a concert than a play. That means the interchange of lights will be like they are in a concert.

I-beams have been rented for the show, which will give remote control to the lights. The beams will enable the light designers to change the focus, patterns and colors of the lights rapidly.

Uthoff said equipment like hazers will also be used. Hazers dispense water or oil into the air to make the light beams visible.

"The light beams become an art form," he said.

Kahlich also said the musical should appeal to students, because the issues presented in the show — such as racism, war and sexuality — are still relevant.

> "Everyone seems to think that there will be this large, writhing, naked mass on stage."
>
> • LUKE KAHLICH
> DIRECTOR OF "HAIR"

"Those issues are still with us in a big way. This is not a cute historical piece," he said.

Another aspect of the show that will make it different from other shows is that there will be a nude scene, which will last for about 1-1/2 minutes.

The scene will feature one naked man, who will be partaking of an Aquarian water ritual.

"Everyone seems to think that there will be this large, writhing, naked mass on stage. Some people will come to see it and be disappointed," Kahlich said.

Kahlich plans to have warnings on the programs and on signs in the lobby during the show's run to let the public know of the nude scene.

"Anyone who knows anything about the '60s won't be surprised," he said.

Mark White, junior in vocal performance, is the actor who will be featured in the nude scene.

White said he doesn't feel uncomfortable about it. The whole point is people being comfortable with their bodies, he said.

White said he had the choice of being naked or not and that his keeping his role in the production didn't depend on his decision.

Though White hasn't been nervous about the scene yet, he anticipates being so when he actually has to get naked.

"There's going to be a lot of people seeing me naked," he said.

White said his parents have been very supportive of him, and although his friends tease him about it, he has not gotten any negative feedback.

"Hair" will premiere Nov. 14.

▶ MULTICULTURAL ISSUES

Societal diversity focus of new book

Jason Walls
staff reporter

Preparing students for a diverse society is the goal of two K-State professors.

James Boyer, professor of curriculum and American ethnic studies, and H. Prentice Baptiste, professor and associate director of the Center for Science Education, spent two years writing their new book, "Transforming the Curriculum for Multicultural Understandings."

"Our intention of writing the book is that we want to reach school administrators at a practical level," Boyer said.

Both authors are founding members of the National Association of Multicultural Education, and Boyer is active with the National Congress of Black Faculty.

"We think this book has some historical value," Boyer said.

"It's the first time two African American professors collaborated to write a book at K-State."

Not only does the book stress that academic curriculums should be upgraded to adapt to an ever-changing world, but that teachers should be urged to incorporate multiculturalism into already existing programs.

"It simply means that everyone is going to need to know more about everyone else than ever before," Boyer said.

Boyer said he believed it's time to raise the conscience level of multiculturalism in all Americans.

"Overall, America is changing, and students from any area — rural or urban — must be prepared in their education to cope with such changes," Boyer said.

Appreciation for cultural diversity, understanding of unusual cultural and ethnic heritages, and how to reduce racism in school and society are all points of emphasis in the book.

"It would be rare to find a school, a teacher or a school district that wouldn't want to educate its students for a society that must cope and even embrace change," Baptiste said.

The book has been nationally published by Caddo Gap Press. Copies of the book are available at Varney's Book Store and the K-State Union Bookstore. The cover price is $19.95.

UPC to sponsor 'Rocky Horror'

Ryan O'Halloran
staff reporter

Virgins and non-virgins can celebrate Halloween with toast, rice and newspaper shreds tonight and Friday night in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

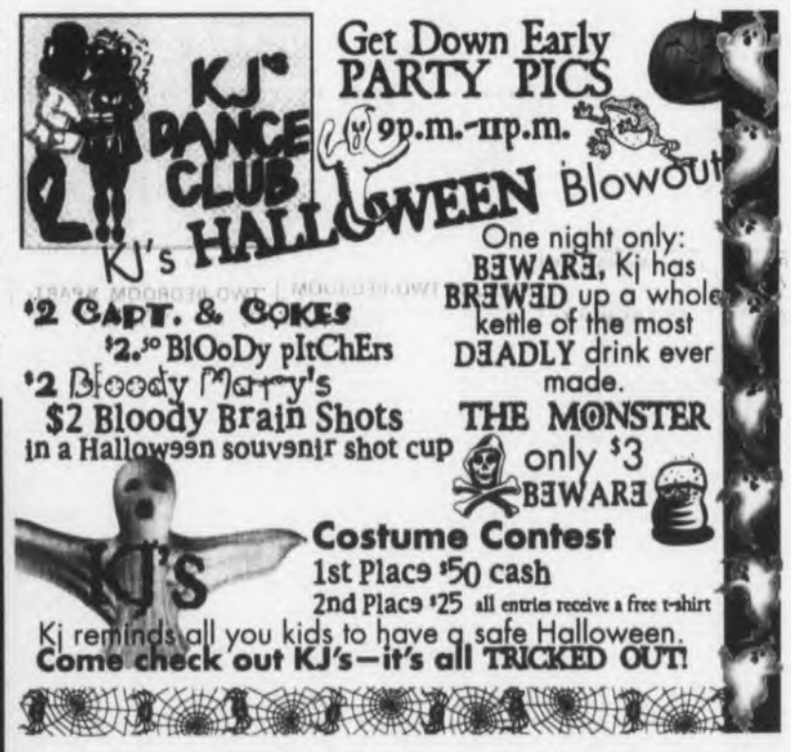
Once again, Kevyn Jacobs will emcee "The Rocky Horror Picture Show," starting at midnight tonight and Friday, sponsored by the Union Program Council feature films and kaleidoscope committees. Admission is $1.75.

"It's really fun," Stephanie Sapienza, UPC kaleidoscope committee chairwoman, said. "We have a costume contest if people get dressed up, and the people get really rowdy."

Sapienza estimated last year's crowd topped out at about 600, and she expects the same this year.

When the audience is entering the ballroom, they can buy prop bags for 50 cents. Audience participation is encouraged.

The bags include toast, rice and pieces of newspaper. They are used in portions of the show that require audience participation.



"It's used for when Kevyn yells, 'Newspaper!'. Everybody is supposed to throw the pieces of newspaper up on stage," Sapienza said.

At the beginning of the show, Jacobs will ask all virgins to come up on stage. A virgin in "Rocky Horror" talk is a little bit different than in regular language.

"He'll ask who's a virgin, which means who's watching the show for the first time," Sapienza clarified. "Then if you are a virgin, you have to go up on stage and do something embarrassing."

Then the first-timers are relegated to sit in the virgin-chair for the duration of the show. The show runs 100 minutes and stars Tim Curry, Susan Sarandon, Barry Bustwick and Meatloaf.

Sapienza said UPC has sponsored the show forever. Jacobs has emceed for many of those years.

Subleasing requires planning

SCOTT PHILLIPS
staff reporter

Get everything in writing.

Subleasing apartments can be less stressful with a few tips, some flexibility and patience.

It's that time of year when select students begin to spend money on advertising their apartments as available for sublease. More often than not, it's those students who are not coming back to K-State or who are graduating in December.

But subleasing doesn't have to be that stressful.

"I hate subleasing my apartment," Angie Lippoldt, senior in marketing, said. "I have bad luck with finding a place to live with people and then having to leave, because rent is too much and there isn't enough people to pay for it."

But not every student has had a bad experience subleasing.

"I've been pretty lucky so far," Jodi Miller, senior in accounting, said. "I know I won't graduate in December, but living with people I know makes it easier if I have to leave or sublease my part.

"My friend isn't so lucky. She lives in a one-bedroom with pretty expensive rent, and she graduates in December. Hopefully someone will call. I can't imagine paying almost $400 a month to not even live there."

When looking to sublease an apartment, it is important to go through a few steps to help make the transition easier, less expensive in the long run, and, of course, legal.

"People who are going to sublease their apartment should always make sure that they take an inventory report — what needs repaired, what is paid for, and what isn't paid for and who the person is subleasing the apartment," said Karen Ray, office manager for Cambridge Square Apartment Homes.

"Likewise, the subleaser should do the same — find out how much the deposit is, take a look at the apartment for damages or anything they may get charged for and most importantly, get everything in writing."

Ray said the law requires apartment landlords to do a check-in and take an inventory of the apartment before anyone moves in. Ray recommends that subleasers and subleasees do the same.

The whole process of subleasing an apartment is also made easier by using the Consumer and Tenant Affairs Office located in the Office of Student Activities and Services.

The process of subleasing always involves documenting everything and for some places, waiting for credit checks to go through.

"We have to pay a $75 fee to sublease, and we have to wait for the person to make it through a credit check," Kristy Erickson, senior in elementary education, said. "But as long as we do it through the office and get the contract typed and changed, the landlords are pretty cool about it.

"As long as they get their money, they're happy."

Erickson said she recommends people who are going to move into a sublease situation should meet as many of their potential roommates as possible.

She said it eases tension and provides a start on whether one can sublease or not. But in some cases, it doesn't matter.

"Not me, man, if the person wanting to take over my lease wants it, and they can afford to pay, it's theirs," Miller said. "Shoot, they are saving me money, so why not. I view it as one student helping out another. Just sign the contract."

If you are subleasing your apartment, make sure to contact your landlord and get the necessary information. This eliminates long-run headaches for subleasers and subleasees. Also, use the best resource you have to spread the news — your mouth. Oh, and by the way, get everything in writing.

Avoiding sublease problems

Completing a check-in report can prevent leasing problems. Here are tips for subleasers and subleasees plus a list of what to look for in a check-in report.

Check-in report
- what needs repaired
- what is paid for
- what is not paid for
- who is subleasing

Subleasers
- contact landlord and get necessary information
- allow time for the completion of a credit check
- get the word out

Subleasees
- learn the deposit amount
- look for damages
- meet potential roommates

Remember
- get everything in writing
- use the Consumer and Tenant Affairs Office located in the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Student Union program to involve more than 1 million students in the next five years.

Another proposal of the Clinton-Gore administration is a merit-based scholarship program that would award $1,000 grants to the top 5 percent of high-school graduates.

Perot, candidate, places emphasis on education to decrease drug usage and crime rates among young people.

"Education is a cure for drugs and crime and all that stuff," Darrel King, Kansas Reform Party chairman, said during a Collegian interview.

The government should definitely help pay for college, but there must be a mandatory and consistent way to collect the money the government loans once students are out in the workforce and have a job, he said.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Recent uprisings in the Middle East and the ongoing struggles in Bosnia put foreign affairs in the forefront of many students' minds.

In their Web site, Dole and Kemp said their goals were to maintain access to key regions on a economic, political and military basis, promote democratization, curb the rapid increase in mass-destruction weapons and punish those who plan or conduct terrorist acts against American citizens.

Dole outlined his stance on foreign policy in Russia, Central Europe and Bosnia during his speech to the Philadelphia World Affairs Council June 25.

"My foreign policy will strive to consolidate our Cold War victory in Europe," Dole said on his Web site.

Dole said policies concerning Russia should be based on the country it is today, not the hopes of what Russia will be in the future. He pledged not to negotiate arms-control agreements that favor Russian ambitions. Dole also promised to link the arms-control compliance to U.S. assistance.

He also called for an enlargement of North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Extending membership to Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic and developing Europe-wide missile defenses were two tactics Dole outlined for NATO enlargement.

Dole addressed concerns with Bosnia.

"Unless we vigorously move to train and equip the Bosnians, the U.S. and NATO will face a 'stay-or-fail' dilemma in Bosnia," Dole said.

Clinton

Dole

Perot

Clinton and Gore would also like to see new members join NATO, according to their Web site.

Additionally, their foreign - policy platform stresses the need for a comprehensive ban on nuclear weapons and ratifying the Chemical Weapons Convention, which would outlaw poison gas.

In the past four years, the Clinton-Gore administration has reduced nuclear threat by working with Ukraine, Belarus and Kazakhstan to give up nuclear weapons and negotiating an agreement with North Korea to end its nuclear program.

In response to Bosnia, the Clinton-Gore administration has been highly criticized for its indecisive policy and lack of direction, according to the Dole-Kemp Web site. However, the current administration did work to conclude a comprehensive peace agreement, the Dayton Accords, according to the Clinton-Gore Web site.

In response to fighting terrorism, Clinton signed anti-terrorism legislation in April 1996. This legislation gave law enforcement tough new tools to stop terrorists before they strike and to bring them to justice if they attack.

Most recently, the Clinton administration responded to renewed Iraqi threats in the Persian Gulf by sending in planes, ships and troops.

King, Kansas chairman for the Reform party, gave a statement on Perot's views on foreign policy.

"The United States should get involved in anything that threatens our national security, and that is it," he said.

Harry Browne supports an isolationist policy. According to his Web site, Browne will bring American troops home at once.

In a script of a September 1994 America Online Libertarian Party forum, Browne said, "I will bring all the troops home and get us out of all these areas — Somalia, Haiti, the U.N., NATO, etc."

HEALTH CARE

While students face the possibility of mandatory health insurance, the issues of government subsidies and regulations are becoming more important for students.

Presidential candidates place health-care issues on the forefront of important issues addressed.

Clinton and Dole agreed the government should continue to subsidize health care through Medicare and Medicaid, according to their Web sites.

"We must do more to make quality health care available to every American," Clinton said in his Web site.

Clinton signed the Health Insurance Reform Act (Kassebaum-Kennedy Bill). This bill limits exclusions for pre-existing conditions and allows individuals to take their health insurance with them when they change or lose their jobs.

According to their Web site, Clinton and Gore would like to continue with similar efforts to help workers who temporarily lose their jobs keep health insurance. These workers would be eligible for subsidies to help pay or private insurance coverage for up to six months.

Dole and Kemp said they would support giving self-employed individuals the same tax deductions that large corporations have to buy health insurance, according to their Web site.

"The answer to reforming health care is not to create a single, national system that takes medical decisions away from doctors and patients," said Perot in his policy statement on health care found on his Web site.

Perot's policy statement also said states should have the flexibility to test their own health-care reform programs, which allows them to meet the particular needs of the regions and markets.

"Government is the cause of high health-care costs," King said.

Clinics have staff that do nothing but fill out paper work for various government regulations, he said.

the Manhattan area would constantly be patrolled during the night hours.

"We will have visible officers out in rural areas and communities throughout the night," Raynor said.

He said there will also be officers in town cruising the streets.

"There will be a full shift of officers and patrol cars out in town," he said.

Raynor said the RCPD seldom has freakish Halloween activities occur in the Manhattan area.

"We'll get your pumpkin bashings and your soaped cars, but nothing real serious," he said.

Raynor said the city is pretty low-key and usually does not have reports of uncommon criminal acts on Halloween.

"It's usually pretty quiet around here, but we will have officers out just to make sure that it remains that way," he said.

ACTIVITIES

Wefald opts to remain at K-State

▪ Wefald rejects University of Minnesota's offer during country club dinner.

KELLY FURNAS
staff writer

Six months after being offered an interview for the presidency of the University of Minnesota, K-State President Jon Wefald announced Wednesday night that he is staying in Manhattan.

"I like K-State," Wefald said. "We have an excellent team here."

Wefald had been chancellor of seven state universities in the Minnesota State University system before his arrival at K-State in 1986. He had also been president of Southwest State University in Marshall, Minn., and Minnesota Commissioner of Agriculture from 1971 to 1977.

Wefald

But Wefald said he wasn't completely opposed to the idea of returning to Minnesota.

"I've had about six months to think about it, and I decided in the last couple of days" he said. "But I'm not afraid of change or taking a risk."

However, Wefald said the position might not have been such a risky pursuit.

"I've had lots of calls from the university and other businesses up there," he said. "I'm confident that I could have been president of the University of Minnesota if I had applied."

Wefald made his announcement at the conclusion of a dinner Wednesday night at the Manhattan Country Club. He was being honored by Manhattan business and professional leaders for 10 years of service to K-State.

KANSAS CONNECTION

"As far as the impact Dole has had on K-State, he deserves credit for providing internships for around 20 students every year he's been in Congress."
• David Procter, head of the department of speech, theater and dance

JILL JARSULIC/Collegian

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE Bob Dole shakes the hands of supporters after speaking at the Dwight D. Eisenhower Library in Abilene. Dole spoke at the library in August. Most of Dole's speech focused on the life and presidency of fellow Eisenhower. Along with his wife, Elizabeth, and his daughter, Robin, Dole was joined by Eisenhower's grandson, David, and David's wife, Julie Nixon Eisenhower.

Dole, Kassebaum Senate departures could affect Sunflower State politics

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff reporter

If Bob Dole wins the presidential race, it certainly wouldn't hurt Kansas, said David Procter, head of the Department of Speech, Theater and Dance.

There are some who argue Kansas has kept its hold on Fort Riley because of Dole; however, it has lost some portions of it, he said.

"As far as the impact Dole has had on K-State, he deserves credit for providing internships for around 20 students every year he's been in Congress," Procter said.

He said it would be interesting to see how Kansas does the next two or three years, because it is losing Dole and Kassebaum. Both senators had long-term tenure, earned respect and had a great deal of authority in Congress.

"No matter who is elected to replace them, they will be freshman senators," Procter said.

While Dole was in Congress, he put money into an appropriation bill, resulting in funding for Bob Dole Hall, a $6-million telecommunications center at K-State, said Susan Peterson, assistant to the president for governmental relations.

"He put the money in the appropriation bill and got it in there," she said.

> "The fact that Dole is from Kansas opens a lot of doors, but it causes problems during the campaign."
> • SUSAN PETERSON
> ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT FOR GOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS

Throckmorton Hall benefited from Dole's efforts, with a $28-million state-of-the-art plant-science research center. K-State-Salina got a $7-million airplane grant.

"If Bob Dole is elected president, it could change some attitudes in Congress," Peterson said.

Recently, K-State's proposal to the Department of Energy for further research and development of electric vehicles was turned down.

"You can't convince me it's not political," Peterson said. "We are clearly the most qualified, but I think we were denied because we are from Kansas."

The Department of Agriculture asked for proposals for a center located somewhere in the Midwest. K-State was told the Department of Agriculture could not make a decision until after the election, she said.

"The fact that Dole is from Kansas opens a lot of doors, but it causes problems during the campaign," she said. "If he's elected, it will probably open more doors."

It's a two edged, James Sherow, a history professor at K-State, said. While Dole has had an ability to help several programs and projects at

Better farming practices reached 1 year after the Water Quality Initiative

BREE BISNETTE
staff reporter

Against the backdrop of Mission Lake in Horton Thursday morning, Gov. Bill Graves reflected on work done during the first year of his Water Quality Initiative.

Mission Lake is one of the water bodies in the Lower-Republican River Basin being rectified by Graves' plan.

"Our first priority in this state should be people, and our second has to be water," Graves said. "Without quality water, we can't survive as an agricultural state."

Throughout the first year of implementation, research by K-State's College of Agriculture has been an essential part of Graves' plan to reduce water pollution within the state, he said.

> "Our first priority in this state should be people, and our second has to be water."
> • BILL GRAVES
> GOVERNOR

The College of Agriculture has been researching atrazine, a commonly used pesticide that is one of the primary pollutants found in Kansas waters. Because atrazine is very soluble in water, it is frequently washed from farm fields into the state water supply.

By studying the behavior of the chemical, the K-State College of Agriculture has formulated 10 primary management strategies for agricultural producers on how to reduce run-off of atrazine from their fields.

"K-State is critical to this project," Graves said. "They are the unquestioned experts in agricultural research. K-State has the credibility with the agricultural community to build this partnership between state agencies and farmers."

The college has also educated farmers who volunteered to participate in the project on how to utilize the methods they have discovered.

"K-State's gone almost door-to-door talking to people about how they can improve their farm practices," Graves said.

One technique the college has recommended to farmers is spraying the atrazine pesticide in early April as opposed to applications in May and June.

"If two-thirds of the atrazine is applied early, there is less run-off into waters, because the rains are gentle at that time, compared to the June and July thunderstorms," said David Regehr, a K-State extension weed specialist and professor of agronomy.

One of 14 Kansas farmers who has volunteered to participate in the project, Douglas Rodvelt, said the early application technique has been most beneficial to him.

Rodvelt has also applied other recommended methods for reducing atrazine run-off on his 2,400-acre farm.

He has updated his tillage equipment so he can incorporate the atrazine into the top two inches of the soil.

This guarantees less product will be at the soil surface where it is most susceptible to being washed away, contaminating water sources, according to K-State's Cooperative Extension Service brochure, "Reducing Atrazine Run-off from Crop Fields."

Pesticide-spraying equipment has also been modified on Rodvelt's farm, so he does not need to use as much of the chemical.

"Now, if I look out of my window and don't see anything out there that I need to spray, I can flip a button and turn it off," Rodvelt said.

Rodvelt said the new additions have

Input on mandatory insurance mostly negative

AMY LAGRONE
staff reporter

The possibility of a mandatory student health insurance has become a hot topic.

The insurance would be required by all students who do not already have health coverage of some kind. The insurance would add $400 to the yearly fees and would end after graduation.

Currently, students who choose to have insurance through Lafene Health Center pay $863 per year. All international students are required to purchase insurance.

For the past two days, Student Health Advisory Committee (SHAC) has been in the K-State Student Union answering questions and getting student feedback.

"So far, most of the input I've heard is on the negative," Amy Donahy, junior in English and chairperson of the committee, said. "Most students feel that it is not the University's place to require students to have insurance. They feel they have the right to choose."

G-M Underwriters Agency, the insurance company that is being considered for this plan, said about 25 percent of students would be affected by the mandatory insurance plan. The other 75 percent already have some kind of coverage.

There are several arguments for and against this mandatory fee.

It would benefit some students, but it could also cause financial problems for others.

On the positive side, it would be cheaper for students who want insurance. It would also raise the allowable amount for student loans, and it has low deductible rate.

Troy Brin, senior in electrical engineering and member of SHAC, said he is in favor of the mandatory policy.

Progressive Coalition receives Senate funding

NICOLE KIRBY
city/government editor

Student Senate examined the fundraising habits of a new campus group closely before it gave the group funding Thursday night.

> "Around the country, there have been progressive and conservative coalitions formed on campuses, this encourages activism."
> • LACH FRANQUEMONT
> ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

Senators expressed concerns that the Progressive Coalition did not meet funding regulations necessary for Senate to allocate money to it.

The Coalition is a group of representatives from other groups such as Young Democrats and Students for Peace and Justice, as well as individual members.

"Around the country, there have been progressive and conservative coalitions formed on campuses," Lach Franquemont, arts and sciences senator and coalition member, said. "This encourages activism."

Because campus groups can be members of the coalition, Senators said they did not want it to be just another way of getting more money from Senate.

"I don't want any cross-transfers," Aaron Truax, agriculture senator, said.

Other senators said the fee for use of a fax machine the coalition offered members did not constitute fundraising, and as the group had not had a fundraiser, it did not meet funding regulations.

Senate Vice Chair Jill Hayhurst, who was filling in for Senate Chair Aubrey Abbott, ruled that the coalition met funding regulations. Gabe Eckert, agriculture senator, appealed her decision.

"That's not a valid attempt at fundraising," Eckert said.

The Senate upheld Hayhurst's decision.

Some senators said she felt the group was being treated unfairly.

"I think this is really unfortunate that we're trying to trip this group up with fax machines and nip them in the bud before they even have a chance to get started," Amy Donahy, chief of staff of the executive branch, said.

The senators questioned the allocation later said they were not against the group, and they just needed more information.

"It would be nice, in a perfect world, to see a little more research," Sean Tomb, arts and sciences senator, said.

The allocation passed.

The Senate also approved a new arts and sciences senator, Shayne Castelano, and allocated money to the Student Action Team, the National Organization for Women, the College Republicans, the Newman Club, the KSU Aikido Club and the Students for the Right to Life.

In addition, they passed a resolution in support of the CAMPUS Task Force advocated by Kansas Attorney General Carla Stovall for campus safety.

• KEVORKIAN CHARGED WITH ASSISTING SUICIDES. Dr. Jack Kevorkian was charged Thursday with assisting three suicides since June — a departing prosecutor's last-ditch effort to put the retired pathologist in prison. Kevorkian planned to surrender for a court appearance late Thursday afternoon in Michigan. Three previous attempts to prosecute Kevorkian have failed.

• WEST POINT CADET CHARGED WITH RAPING ANOTHER CADET. A West Point cadet has been charged with raping a female cadet, the first such accusation since the Military Academy began enrolling women 20 years ago. James P. Engelbrecht, of Conroe, Texas, was charged Wednesday with raping the woman at a house in Stockholm, N.J., on Memorial Day weekend.

• BRAZILIAN PLANE CRASHES IN SAO PAULO. The passenger jet was in the air for less than five minutes Thursday before it clipped an apartment building and skidded through the Vila Santa Catarina neighborhood, spilling fuel and igniting cars and homes. All 90 passengers and six crew members aboard TAM Regional Airlines Flight 402 were killed. Three Americans were among the dead.

• FIGHTING SPREADS IN ZAIRE. Warfare and looting choked off relief supplies for 700,000 refugees Thursday, sending tens of thousands streaming south in a desperate search for food and safety. Ethnic Tutsi rebels closed in on the Zairian-held city of Goma, and aid agencies said looting by Zairian troops had forced them to halt food distribution in the area, which now includes the world's largest refugee camp. The agencies said they would evacuate foreign workers.

• IRAQI KURDISH GROUPS SIGN PEACE AGREEMENT. Rival Kurdish factions signed a comprehensive peace accord Thursday, vowing to maintain a cease-fire while creating stability in northern Iraq. The Iran-backed Patriotic Union of Kurdistan and the Iraqi-backed Kurdistan Democratic Party signed a far-reaching deal to rebuild a regional government while making it clear that the Kurdish-dominated region would not seek to break away from Iraq.

• NATO-LED FORCE SCALED DOWN. With less than two months remaining in its mission, the multinational peace force in Bosnia has shrunk to around 43,000 soldiers. The scale-down is part of a withdrawal policy intended to leave around 20,000 troops of the once 58,000-strong force in the country by the end of the year.

• MILITIAS CLASH IN SOMALIA. Renewed factional fighting killed at least 13 people in a sign of worsening violence in the divided capital and surrounding region. Forces loyal to faction leader Hussein Aidid said nine people were killed while battling for control of southern Mogadishu. Another clash on Wednesday outside the capital killed 20 people and wounded 30.

• HUMANE SOCIETY. The city and the Riley County Humane Society is hosting a straw giveaway this Saturday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. The giveaway is to help keep pets warm this winter with straw for insulation and bedding. Pet owners are encouraged to bring bags or other containers for the straw. The giveaway will be at Reliable Transfer Storage, 5th and Yuma Streets.

• RODEO AUCTION. More than 130 items ranging from oil change gift certificates to a set of belt buckles designed to commemorate the 50th annual K-State college rodeo will be auctioned at 5:30 tonight at Kickers Saloon & Grill. The annual event is sponsored by the Rodeo Club and the money raised will help support the club's endeavors throughout the year. Steve Frazier, rodeo coach, said they are shooting for $4,000 this year.

SPORTS

• CARDINALS EXERCISE OPTION. Dennis Eckersley's $1,625,000 option for next season was exercised Thursday by the St. Louis Cardinals. Eckersley, 42, was 0-6 with 30 saves in 34 chances in his first season with the Cardinals. He added five more saves in the postseason. Eckersley has seven 30-save seasons and has 353 career saves, third-most ever.

• FOUR UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS PLAYERS INELIGIBLE. The University of Texas on Thursday declared four star football players ineligible after learning that an agent paid for their lunch during a weekend meeting. Texas officials initially concluded that receiver Mike Adams, cornerback Bryant Westbrook and safeties Tre Thomas and Chris Carter did nothing wrong when they met with agent Mike George at a lunch arranged by former Longhorns linebacker Winfred Tubbs, now with the New Orleans Saints.

• RODRIGUEZ TOP HITTER IN THE MAJORS. Alex Rodriguez, who began the season batting ninth for Seattle and became the top hitter in the majors at age 21, was voted the Associated Press major-league player of the year Thursday. Rodriguez hit .358 with 36 home runs and 123 RBIs in his first full year in the big leagues. He set modern-day marks for shortstops in hits, extra-base hits and runs scored.

been expensive, but he is as concerned about water quality as anyone else who has to drink it. However, he said atrazine cannot be eliminated completely, because it is the only economically efficient pesticide that can kill a wide range of weeds, Rodvelt said.

"We've tried not using it at all on certain crops, and it doesn't work," Rodvelt said. "We do need to use it. We just need to prove we can do it safely."

The goal of the water quality initiative is to keep levels of atrazine below three parts per billion in drinking water in order to meet the maximum-contamination level for the chemical established by the Environmental Protection Agency.

The EPA has established this as the highest level that can be consumed during a 70-year lifetime with no adverse health effects.

Several rivers and lakes in central and eastern Kansas have average atrazine concentrations higher than this level for the entire year.

The Lower-Republican River Basin is one of 12 basins in Kansas and has been the pilot area for the governor's water-quality improvement program.

The basin covers 10,500 square miles and includes the Delaware, Big Blue and Kansas rivers' mainstream corridors, which contribute the highest level of contaminants in the state.

K-State is one of 22 industries, associations and property owners involved in a cooperative effort with state agencies on the governor's Water Quality Initiative working to solve this problem.

"In this voluntary partnership, we're creating a mindset through the education of how people can farm while still being environmentally friendly," Graves said. "That's the balance we're looking for."

Program alleviates holiday stress

BREE BISNETTE
contributing writer

The Flint Hills Breadbasket makes seasonal wishes come true for families in the Manhattan-Ogden area by alleviating monetary stress through several programs.

One is the Adopt a Family program, which ensures area children will have gifts waiting for them Christmas morning.

Shirley Bramhall, the director of the Breadbasket, said she began the program in 1990, because she saw some financially challenged families struggling to find sources to provide gifts for their children.

"When you sign up with separate programs for every child, there is no consistency," Bramhall said. "One child may get five gifts and the other may only get one. The Adopt a Family program provides equal spending on all of the children in the family."

Adopt a Family has grown significantly since it began six years ago.

In 1990, 75 families applied and 24 were sponsored. Last year, 429 families applied and all were adopted.

Area organizations, clubs, church groups, individuals, business groups, families and K-State affiliates can participate as donors to the program.

K-State organizations ranging from the seventh floor of Moore Hall to All Faiths Chapel to the Department of Architectural Engineering have become involved in the past, Bramhall said.

"Participation from the University is very high," Bramhall said. "We cannot do what we do without them."

Donors have various options on how they want to purchase and deliver gifts to the adopted families.

Each child has a wish list that they or their parents complete for the donors.

The donor can simply take the list to go shopping, provide gift certificates for volunteers who shop for the donors, or sponsors can take the parents with them on the shopping exhibition.

The presents can be taken to the Breadbasket and delivered by Santa Claus or the donors can deliver the presents themselves.

"It is hard to tell who has more fun, the donors or the recipients," Bramhall said.

Making sure the families and sponsors have a positive experience is a careful process, Bramhall said. The Breadbasket takes precautions such as making sure children of the receiving family and those of the giving family do not attend the same school.

"We want to make sure no one is embarrassed," Bramhall said. "We want it to be a good experience, and it almost always is. I have seen many friendships develop from this program."

Bramhall said many donors who do it once participate again.

"Everyone is looking for a warm feeling in the holiday season," Bramhall said.

"This is better than writing a check to some place, because donors can see the family attached to the gifts given. They know the name of the family and can have as much hands-on experience with them as they choose."

Education can be gained from both sides, Bramhall said. Donors learn about some of the difficult trials people with little income go through, and the receivers feel a sense of support from the community.

"It's an eye-opening experience for clients to realize someone is there for them and will help them if they help themselves," Bramhall said.

The second service available to families who display need is the mayor's holiday baskets.

Families can sign up to receive a nutritional food basket with dishes for a Christmas meal.

Manhattan groups sponsor drives to provide food for this program.

IN OUR OPINION

It's your vote; make sure it's an informed one

An uninformed vote is as bad as no vote at all.

A vote is not only a mark of civic responsibility but a statement of political belief.

WHY WE CARE

Is everybody ready to vote? Make sure you know the issues and what the candidates have to say about them. It's your responsibility.

The general election is Tuesday. Everyone knows that, and most everyone has probably decided whom they want in the White House.

But there are other things on the ballot, and for Manhattan voters, these races could be just as important.

This weekend, those who want to make informed choices in the voting booth should take the time to sit down and decide on any undecided votes.

If you haven't been keeping up on all the local races, sit down with a copy of the Collegian's Voters' Guide and examine candidates' stances on issues that are important to you.

Kansas will reshape its entire U.S. Senate representation Tuesday.

Bob Dole and Nancy Kassebaum have been such powerhouses in Congress that their replacements should not be chosen lightly. The Kansas Legislature makes a lot of decisions that affect Kansas pocketbooks, and those races are important, too.

If you're a student who votes in your home district by absentee ballot, go home for the weekend and get caught up on the area races where you live.

Be wary of political advertisements.

Look at the issues, and if you want to examine the records of candidates, look at a newspaper.

Don't listen to actors and sound bites.

Those who don't vote have no right to complain when they don't agree with the government's actions. Those who vote on a whim don't have a right to complain about poor representation, either.

You don't have to vote on party lines.

You don't have to vote for who your friends or parents vote for, and you don't even have to tell people who you vote for. Just make sure you know why you're voting for every candidate and ballot issue whose box you check.

Your vote is your own. Make it mean something.

All woman

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

It takes a real man to dress up like a woman

MY

Rhett
HARTMAN

"Welcome to our hell." This is my first descriptive memory of my Halloween costume this year.

If you are an avid-enough reader of this Opinion page, you might remember a column I wrote concerning what I thought about women and make-up.

Well, I've since then taken my foot out of my mouth and placed it into a pair of size B beige pantyhose. Yes, for this Halloween I dressed up as a member of the female gender.

Mainly, I thought this costume would be a good one because of my long hair. In planning the whole costume, I've grown to see my hair as just another piece in the difficult puzzle of what is supposed to make women beautiful.

I wrote my original make-up column with the expertise of a male point of view. A male who only knows the problems of make-up through talking with women.

Not any more.

I have everything but biology on my side. My female friends, who have a good sense of humor, lent me their curlers, eye shadow, blush and time to transform me into a recognizable woman.

Second only to learning to walk have I ever felt this uncomfortable.

Yes, I actually went to Wal-Mart and bought a pair of stockings. And yes, I shaved my legs in the name of beauty (but if you ask me I will tell you that I am a competitive swimmer).

I must say my legs have been the problem for many of my experiences as a woman.

First off, I had to shave them. This proved difficult. If it weren't for a friend's electric shears, I'm not sure I would have been able to do it within an hour.

As an act of hygiene, the actual shaving is a monstrous task. And the showers in the residence halls didn't exactly conform to leg-shaving standards. At least they were small enough that I could wedge a leg up to chest level and comfortably shave it.

The razor I used was the same one I use on my face. It worked well, but I have never had to shave something so big or so confusing as my legs. Knees suck!

By now, the trouble had just started. After doing the shaving thing, I was shocked at the difference. I mean, my legs looked a half inch smaller. And they felt much colder. When I walked around, they actually felt lighter! When all was said and shaved, I left the shower with only five cuts. The pain of these cuts was surprisingly strong. Even stranger was that after I cut them up, I didn't see any blood until after I left the shower. It looked like I had been stabbed in my knee.

All of this grief, and for nothing more than smooth but bloody legs. Yet things were still not right. My legs are just too big and veiny for a smooth and sleek look.

I became critical of how I looked. I actually thought about wanting smaller legs and thinner eyebrows so they would fit the good-looking schema. Where was my search for looking feminine taking me? Perhaps the description was right, I was entering hell.

In order to really pull this costume off, breasts were mandatory. I became a 38B, with socks as stuffing. Yet after everything was the right color and in the right place, there were still problems abounding.

The pantyhose sucked. I was in them for about three or four hours and couldn't believe how imperfect they were. My legs that were exposed to the air constantly became cold, and my hips and thighs were sweating up a storm.

The absolute worst came when I had to socialize with other guys. I was simply not treated with respect. I was not treated like a person.

Guys actually asked if they could touch my socks! Sometimes they didn't even ask!

Considering it was just a Halloween costume, it did not bug me much. But if there were a woman dressed up as a man, would her male costume be treated with that attitude?

At times I felt like all my efforts to look good just made people laugh. Yet whenever I was praised, I turned into Pavlov's dog and responded positively.

This mentality was extremely frustrating. I stopped worrying about it after a while.

I realized that men don't have nearly the flexibility of how they look. It was fun to have so many options to work with, but it was easy to get carried away.

All together, I found the experiences enlightening. I cannot say I know what it is like to be a woman, but I know what one goes through in an effort to be feminine.

The effort is a never-ending one. In its essence, it reaches for perfection but never achieves it. Unless you are one of those genetic mutants who is quintessentially feminine, it's difficult to feel like you have achieved the standards of beauty in our world.

If men were to get anything out of this column, know for women, beauty can be pain. They are pressured to look feminine as men are pressured to look masculine.

As I wait for my leg hairs to grow back, I will be reminded of my trip through hell on Halloween. I must say it has been a colorful and memorable one.

Small business is a wonderful thing.

From coffee shops to miniature-golf courses, there is something about the economic underdog that makes me proud to be an American.

And while the majority of jobs in this country are created by small business, they aren't given a whole lot of recognition.

It could be because your local cafe does not offer any of its sandwiches in deluxe style or that its advertising budget consists of a few newspaper ads and its own customers.

Most people don't realize that word of mouth is the most powerful advertisement a business has, whether it operates in 40 countries or has 40 customers.

But what makes the difference between a small business and a large corporation?

It's attention to detail and putting first things first.

For example, last week I entered a multi-national hamburger chain with the intent to get something to eat quick based on the claim that fast food was available, and to top it off, it was available in deluxe style.

I stand corrected.

Even though there was a plethora of employees working at the time, only one was taking orders from a line that filled the entire lobby.

The person who appeared to be the manager was sacking burgers and failing to comprehend the fact that the restaurant was full of people who were wishing they were somewhere else. I was one of them.

I don't plan on going back anytime soon.

This is why small business thrives, and that's why I like it.

Whether an individual is endowed with entrepreneurial spirit or they simply have good perception, those who can discover a need and fill it are successful.

It's hard work and a lot of fun.

For example, there is a place to eat in my hometown called Cook's American Grill.

Every town in America probably has one like it, but few people know about it.

It is run by some of the nicest women you will ever meet, the food is always good, and although it costs a little more than the multi-national chain down the street, the price of eating there is far outweighed by the value gained from it.

There is hardly ever a line, the people who eat there are friendly, and the atmosphere is relaxed.

No cardboard cutouts hang from the ceiling, the chairs are real, and I wouldn't eat lunch somewhere else if you paid me.

Now the obvious question must be asked — what makes a small business different?

It is much more than the fact that small businesses are easier to run and can do more, because I'm sure all of us have been to a small business that had horrible service or terrible products.

To be honest, I think it has more to do with the fact that when people have an idea and create a business to market their idea, it is an extension of themselves.

It is much more than a place you go to make a little spending money or a way to try to make yourself appear to be an entrepreneur, because it looks good on your résumé.

To people who start small businesses, they are almost like a child.

They want the best for their businesses, to have their businesses thought well of by everyone, and to see their businesses succeed.

For this reason, an entrepreneur is much better equipped for providing a service.

Namely, because they have a much higher level of commitment to their careers than people who view what they do as simply a job.

The ideal job is one where you enjoy what you're doing to the extent that you look forward to going back to work and enjoy your time there just as much as you do with your friends when you are away from work.

If you're not happy where you are or where you are going in your career, small business may be the answer you are looking for.

The end of the rainbow isn't always in a corporate office.

Insurance questions cleared up

Editor,

This letter is an attempt to clarify some misconceptions with regard to the University-sponsored student health insurance plan which were apparent in the Collegian editorial Oct. 29.

The student health insurance plan, either proposed or current, is not through Lafene Health Center.

The plan is offered annually and is chosen by the Student Health Advisory Committee, a committee of student government, working with the Students' Attorney and recommended to Student Senate for further recommendation to University administration.

The plan is not through Lafene, and Lafene is definitely not in the insurance business.

Our only connection is as a sometimes intermediary for the carrier. We make a concerted effort to remain at arm's length to the process and selection, assisting,when requested, with consultation to the committee and facilitating communications between the carrier and the committee.

Most student health centers on college campuses, as Lafene has done the past several years, act as gatekeepers for their particular university's plan. This is the now customary function of the primary care provider, used in the general community, which attempt to keep health-care charges low and thus lower premiums for coverage.

Neither Lafene nor SHAC are attempting to further socialize medical care. The committee members are only doing an excellent job in reviewing several alternatives to provide an insurance offering that is comprehensive and affordable.

This is a very difficult task and the members should be applauded for the volunteer efforts on behalf of the K-State students.

Reader commends Senate

Editor,

I would like to provide my view on the Student Senate meeting last Thursday. Because Senate was voting on allocations that night, three people spoke during open session to gain more financial support for their teams.

Even though I am not on a judging team, I would like to thank Scott Schaake and Larry Erpelding for their support of the Ag Competition teams. Schaake explained how students must eat at McDonald's most of the time, and how even McDonald's can dig into a person's finances pretty easily.

These judging teams have won several national championships and are constantly working hard to earn more!

It would seem to me that these students deserve better.

Unfortunately, there are only limited funds in the allocations budget, and we can't get everything we need. I thank the Student Senate for the funding that they do give, and I hope in the future the total allocation funds can be increased.

Jars of Clay concert wasn't publicized well in the Collegian

Editor,

On Oct. 30 there was a Jars of Clay concert in McCain Auditorium that also featured the Gufs and Huckleberry, which happens to be a regional band from Lawrence.

I know the Collegian has many things to cover on campus, but I was not quite sure why this concert did not get much recognition.

Before the concert, there was only one article about the upcoming concert that talked about Huckleberry opening that evening.

There was no mention Oct. 31 that the Jars of Clay concert had even happened.

From past experience, it would be my guess if it had been a country concert, it would have made the front page of the Collegian for the day. Many people at K-State complain that we cannot seem to get any rock groups to come to K-State. Well, one thing we need to do is advertise the fact more when we do have a rock concert coming.

When there is a country concert, my friends are talking about it months in advance and usually there are a couple of articles in the paper and the radio stations mention it every 10 minutes.

The next day after the concert, one can pick up the Collegian and see a nice picture and article about the concert.

If K-State wants to convey an image other than pure country, let us give concerts, other than country, the recognition they deserve.

Violinist prodigy to perform classical music at McCain

DAVE KATZER
staff reporter

She first came to the attention of the world as a child prodigy. A world-class violinist, Midori has been performing concerts for the past 15 years — and she's only 25.

Midori will perform at 8 p.m. Friday in McCain Auditorium.

Midori first began playing when she was 4 years old. Her mother taught violin lessons and was her inspiration. The young Japanese girl began performing concerts when she was 10.

Midori made her debut in New York with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra when she was 11 years old.

Richard Martin, director of McCain, said an important reason Midori was brought to McCain was because she, unlike many other child prodigies, continues to shine in her field of talent.

"She has not lost that sparkle, that magic she had as a youngster," he said.

Midori will play a variety of classical pieces from the 19th and 20th centuries.

Midori's program will feature music by Cesar Franck, and violin composers George Enescu and Fritz Kreisler. In a tribute to Schubert, Midori will play "Sonata in A Major."

She has appeared on "The Tonight Show," recorded albums and performed at the 1992 Winter Olympic Games. She is also the founder of the Midori Foundation, an organization established in 1992 to bring the performing arts into the everyday life of children.

Tickets for the performance are $30, $26 and $22 for the general public. Senior citizens tickets are $28, $24 and $20. Child and student tickets are $15, $13 and $11. For tickets and information call McCain Box Office at 532-6428.

Local rock band to perform in Slovak Republic

MATT BASLER
staff reporter

An American rock 'n' roll group, which is originally from the Manhattan area, will travel to the Slovak Republic to perform at a benefit concert.

The group Blind Fly signed a contract to play at the benefit concert after it was personally invited by Slovak President Michal Kovac.

The concert, scheduled for May 1997, will benefit the Foundation of Emilia Kovacova, the First Lady of the Slovak Republic.

The foundation seeks to provide assistance to Slovak citizens in the form of wheelchairs, special equipment, medical treatment and psychiatric care for the mentally impaired.

The foundation also provides health care for Slovak students who have scholarships in America.

"The Blind Fly tour is not only to help a great charity in that country but also to sound a message of hope and friendship from many of us here in America," said lead vocalist Lance Woodruff, according to a PRM Records news release.

Slovakia recently split from the former Czechoslovakia and is looking for ways to experience democracy.

"They're really struggling with democracy. This can only be a good thing," Reese Barrett, booking agent for PRM Records, said.

Blind Fly is the only band scheduled to play at the benefit concert.

Barrett said fans are being charged the equivalent of $2 American currency and as much as 10,000 music-lovers could show up for the concert.

Blind Fly has two compact discs on the market on the PRM Records label.

Its two CDs, "Drop" and "Liquid," have been described as a distinctive type of alternative music called liquid music, because it flows well. It's sometimes turbulent and sometimes serene.

The Blind Fly tour is being sponsored in part by PRM Records in Pasadena, Calif.

ABL signs former Cat

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

Former K-State star Shanele Stires, a 1995 graduate who ranks fifth on the Wildcat all-time scoring list with 1,344 points and sixth on the all-time rebounding list with 701 rebounds, has signed a contract with the Columbus Quest of the American Basketball League.

The Quest, coached by former K-State coach Brian Agler, lost forward La'Shawn Brown for two to four weeks after an appendectomy and offered Stires a 30-day contract in the interim.

"Shanele fits exactly with what we need right now to fill the void of La'Shawn Brown," Agler said. "We needed someone who could step in right away. Shanele is obviously familiar with our system and can help us right away.

"On top of that, anyone that has ever been around Shanele knows about the quality of person she is. I'm happy for her that she has this opportunity."

Stires was runner-up in Big 8 Player of the Year voting as a senior, the same year she was named an honorable-mention Kodak All-American. She played last season with Pagkrati A.O. in Athens, Greece, and is currently playing with Athletes in Action, a semi-pro team.

Jacobson cleared to join team

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

K-State's women's basketball team has added another name to its roster, 5'11" freshman guard Sunny Jacobson from Chugiak, Alaska.

Jacobson, whose older sister, Brit Jacobson, is junior on the team, signed with K-State last year and met NCAA requirements for minimum grade-point average and standardized test scores.

But because the NCAA Clearinghouse did not accept some of the courses Sunny Jacobson took in high school, her eligibility was taken away for this season.

After an appeal, her eligibility was restored Wednesday.

"We got the word yesterday that Sunny had been cleared by the NCAA subcommittee," Coach Deb Patterson said.

Sunny Jacobson averaged 15.3 points, 11.1 rebounds and 6.8 assists per game as a senior before a broken bone in her foot made her miss the second half of the season.

Because of the Clearinghouse's original decision to withhold her eligibility, the freshman has been unable to practice with the team.

"I expect she's going to fill in at one of the guard positions, either the two or the three out on the wing," she said.

Fright Night with the Cats gave the basketball teams a chance to provide K-State fans with a frightening experience

JON BALMER
sports writer

On a night with numerous activities to celebrate Halloween, the K-State basketball programs threw their own bash by offering everybody, young and old, an invitation to Fright Night With the Cats.

The inaugural event offered free giveaways and contests as well as men's and women's team skits and scrimmages.

"Fright Night was a lot better than I thought it would be," Ryan Fowler, freshman in pre-med, said. "The whole event was very entertaining."

The earlier scheduling of this year's preview opened up the opportunity to attract families as well as students. While this might be a break from past years' Midnight Madness', one player said he felt it was a success.

"It was really fun to put on a show and look up and see little kids getting into it," junior Aaron Swartzendruber said. "Tonight was for all the fans."

The evening was filled with more than just basketball, though. The Classy Cats and Cheerleaders performed, but neither could match the skits put on by each team. The women did a nice imitation of KU cheerleaders, but it was the men's movie-review sketch that brought the student section to its feet.

"Just seeing Gerald Eaker dressed like a seven-foot woman was enough reason to give a standing ovation," Chris Grant, freshman in architectural engineering, said.

After several scrimmages by each team, and a final co-ed contest, the players concluded the evening with an autograph session. First year women's coach Deb Patterson said she liked the approach Fright Night took.

"It was a great atmosphere to give the fans a first look at all the players and new faces," Patterson said. "It really shows the diversity of the K-State program."

Having arrived at K-State after coaching at Vanderbilt, Patterson said she believed Fright Night gave a good opportunity to showcase the women's program.

"It really provided the chance to show the student body a preview of what's to come for us," Patterson said. "Once we get them to a game, they'll be hooked."

With the first-ever Fright Night now in the books, debate is open as to how it stacks up with past Midnight Madnesses. One student said he felt it was a change for the better.

"The whole event was pretty cool and entertaining," Grant said. "Plus, with the earlier time, there was still time to do stuff afterwards."

Detroit Lions win best-costume prize; New York Jets still surprise no one

We are halfway through the NFL season. Where does the time go when you are having fun?

After eight weeks of gridiron action, it is time to hand out the awards to players who have achieved excellence and those who haven't.

The envelopes, please.

Best Halloween costume: The Detroit Lions. Every year, the Lions seem to hide behind the mask of a good team. They can hide no more. Halloween is over.

Shane MCCORMICK

In the last three weeks, the Lions have been clobbered by the Raiders and the Giants. The Giants! With the surrounding talent of Barry Sanders, Herman Moore and Scott Mitchell, this team should be able to score more than seven points against the Giants. The sooner someone takes that coaching mask off Wayne Fontes and fires him, the better this team will be.

Best copy of a championship team: The Washington Redskins. Yes, the Skins have jumped off to a 7-1 start this season and are at the top of the NFC East. But take a look at who they have played.

In eight games, they have played six teams that are not very good — the Bears, Rams, Jets, Patriots and the Giants twice. The Redskins will have true tests in four of the next five weeks when they face the Bills, Eagles, 49ers and Cowboys. Only the 49ers game is at RFK Stadium. We'll see if they are truly one of the best teams come Thanksgiving Day.

Best offensive player: Having said that, the best player so far in the NFL is Redskin running back Terry Allen. Through eight games, Allen leads the NFC in rushing. He has rushed for 803 yards, averaging 4.3 yards a carry. His 13 touchdowns lead the NFL. Allen is the heart and soul of the Redskins. Without him, they are an average team at best.

Best defensive player: Leon Lett, Dallas Cowboys. You won't see Lett's name on the top of any sack list in the NFL. But anyone around the NFL will tell you that he is one of the most dominant players at his position.

Lett always appears to be in the backfield causing havoc. But what is even more impressive is his tenacity in running down plays and making the tackles. It isn't Deion Sanders or Charles Haley, but Lett who holds the Cowboy defense together.

Surprise team: The Atlanta Falcons. This is a team that is 0-8! It was a playoff team in 1995. What went wrong? Bobby Hebert may not disagree with the coach, but he is not a quarterback who will lead a team to success. The Falcons will go nowhere until they get rid of that silly run-and-shoot offense. You see, there is a reason no other team runs this offense.

Coach of the half-year: Cincinnati's Bruce Coslet. He hasn't lost a game yet as head coach.

Worst decision of the year: This one goes to Cowboys coach Barry Switzer. Last week against Jimmy Johnson's Dolphins, the Cowboys were inside the Dolphins' 10 with two minutes to play. The 'Boys were up 29-10. Switzer told Aikman to take a knee for the remaining downs.

Wrong! He should have had the team drive and run up the score against Jimmy, who said the Dolphins would win. You better believe Jimmy would have run up the score. Switzer should have gone for the kill.

Most surprising individual performance: Vinny Testaverde, quarterback for Baltimore. Who leads the AFC in passing? Elway, Marino, Bono? (Just had to give you a good chuckle) Nope, it is good old Vinny. Vinny's numbers have been soaring with the Ravens. Through eight games, Vinny has thrown for 18 touchdowns. Something strange is going on here.

Worst end zone dance: Keyshawn Johnson. After his first NFL touchdown, Johnson pulled off his helmet and threw it across the field while screaming like a wild man. Keyshawn, I know when the Jets do actually score, it can be a big deal in New York. But it really isn't that big of a deal.

Most disappointing team: The New York Jets. Some things just never change.

Cross country travels north for Big 12 meet

JEREMY KELLEY
sports writer

The K-State men's and women's cross country teams travel to Ames, Iowa, this weekend for one race in the Big 12 Cross Country Championship meet.

The men's team looks to match up against the favorite — Oklahoma State.

"It should be an easy win for (Oklahoma State)," Coach Terry Drake said. "I just hope we can go out there and run well and finish better than what we are seeded."

Drake said he thought there would be less pressure on the runners, because the Wildcats were seeded lower at No. 7.

"They know they can go and run and do their best, and there is a lot less pressure," Drake said. "Our men's team is real healthy. (Ryan) Clive-Smith has been running great and we look for him to do well."

On the women's side, the Cats are up against tough competition in the No. 1 Colorado Buffaloes.

"We have increased our tempo on our runs and are trying to keep our intensity," Drake said.

Drake said he looks for Cristy Swartz and Samantha McNamara to finish high in the meet.

Kathryn Wolfram, who has been recovering from a hip injury, will run in Saturday's race as well.

"She's a little behind, but she gives us everything she's got," Drake said.

He said the loss of some of his better runners, including Anita Hallauer, hurts the team, but they are making improvements.

"Losing our No. 5 runner hurts the squad, but Kathryn will give us 110 percent," Drake said.

Wildcats return for home stint

JOHN BERGGREN
sports writer

If there were a homecoming for volleyball, this weekend would definitely be it.

After spending most of its season on the road, K-State will return to the friendly confines of Ahearn Field House Friday to play Texas Tech at 7 p.m. and at 7 p.m. Baylor Saturday. The matches will mark only the eighth time the Wildcats have played at home this year. In those matches, K-State is undefeated.

Tech, ranked No. 19 with a 7-3 conference record, stands in fourth place in the Big 12. One of its conference wins came in an upset against defending national champions Nebraska, 3-2.

"That's a huge win," Coach Jim Moore said.

"They're going to be really good, and we're going to have to play real well to beat Tech. We almost beat them the first time we played them, and we're going to have to play better to beat them here."

The last match-up with the Red Raiders saw the Cats lose 2-3.

Baylor has a 3-7 conference record and last week lost two 0-3 decisions to Nebraska and Colorado.

"They're a solid team that is building, so we can't forget about them," Moore said. "The most important thing is that we take care of ourselves. We need to fight a lot harder than we've been fighting."

K-State is looking to pick itself up this weekend after being swept last weekend by then-No. 9 Texas and No. 10 Texas A&M.

The losses, however, did not affect the Cats in the polls. K-State is still at No. 23.

"That doesn't mean that they weren't bad losses. We played poorly, and we've got to fix it this weekend," Moore said.

Alumni return to rope and ride

TARA WRAY
sports writer

Garth Brooks sang about it, and Saturday afternoon, members of the Rodeo Club will live it.

About 100 cowboys and cowgirls will saddle up in Weber Arena Saturday to wrestle steers and rope calves in the K-State Alumni Rodeo.

The competition is open to current members of the Rodeo Club, alumni of the club and their families. Members of the Fort Scott rodeo team and its alumni will also participate.

The K-State Alumni Rodeo will kick off at 1 p.m. Saturday in Weber Arena. Admission is free.

"It's a good practice rodeo," Steve Frazier, Rodeo Club coach, said. "It's a good time for alumni to get together and have a good time."

More than a good time will be had by participants if they rope or ride their way to prize money.

The best team ropers will take home a $1,000 paycheck, while barrel racers and bull riders can walk away with $600 for a winning performance.

Saturday's nine events include bareback riding, calf and steer roping, and all are National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association events.

The Rodeo Club participates in about 10 rodeos per year, with Saturday's event being a prelude to bigger rodeos yet to come.

Frazier said in November the club will play host to two rodeos at Weber, the Challenge of Champions and Bull Mania. In February it will commemorate 50 years of competition with a 50th-anniversary rodeo.

Tubby's to have free chili cook-off

AMY LAGRONE
staff reporter

There will be free food Saturday at Tubby's Bar & Grill, which will be the host of Chili Fest '96. The cook-off will be from noon to 9 p.m. at the bar. Free chili will be available for the public all day, along with many drink specials.

This is the first year Tubby's has sponsored the event, but it hopes to make it an annual activity. There used to be an Aggieville chili feed, but it stopped several years ago.

The chili is provided by any people who wish to bring a pot of their favorite recipe. The chili will be judged, and prizes will be awarded to the best chili.

The first-prize winner will receive tickets to the K-State vs. University of Kansas football game. The prize also includes hotel accommodations and fuel for the trip. Other prizes will include trophies, plaques and T-shirts.

Mike Troute, owner of Tubby's and Rowdy Trouty's, is looking forward to Saturday. He has been working on it for three weeks and has put a lot of effort into making this an exciting day.

He said there has been a big response. He has heard from students, fraternity and sorority house mothers, and the general public.

"It should be a real good time," Troute said. "And there will be tons of free chili."

Anyone who wants to enter should call Troute at 537-4866 or 537-0287 as soon as possible to sign up. Participants need to have their chili at Tubby's by 11:30 a.m. Saturday. It needs to be in a pot with a ladle. Judging should be completed by 1 p.m.

KENT GLASSCOCK
STATE REPRESENTATIVE
Leadership that Works

Kent worked hard with Republicans & Democrats to:	As a result, those of us in the 62nd District received:
✓ Cut taxes and manage the budget.	$1.3 billion in tax cuts and a state budget that actually went down!
✓ Provide needed support for K-State and Public Education.	Salary increases plus a share of tuition increases at K-State along with $60 million for Farrell Library and classroom construction. $113 per pupil increase for public schools.
✓ Build a stronger economy and promote job growth.	$500 million back in the Kansas economy through a moratorium on unemployment taxes and enhanced tax credits for job creation.
✓ Reform state government.	Repeal of hundreds of unneeded rules and regulations, welfare reform to keep assistance payments from being spent on drugs, a tough new Juvenile Justice Authority, and a 5 percent reduction in the state work-force while protecting K-State and education employees.

Kent Glasscock provides leadership we can count on in Topeka. He deserves our vote on November 5 and we deserve his strong leadership for our district and our state.

Artist, students construct sculpture on campus

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Although temperatures were dropping Thursday morning, an arch was rising above the ground near West Stadium as part of sculptor Robert Harrison's sculpture workshop.

Harrison's project, funded by the student fine arts fee, is a semi-permanent outdoor sculpture project being constructed this week.

The encroaching winter weather complicates working conditions, but little affects the good humor of the mini-volunteer construction crew of students assembled to help Harrison finish his sculpture.

On Thursday morning, workers were mixing an adobe concrete to be used to form the archway — a signature of Harrison's artistic style.

Nickie Mitchell, graduate student in ceramics, brought her morning Ceramics I class out to assist Harrison.

"They are working with constructing things on a much smaller scale in class," Mitchell said. "It's important for them to get experience with someone working on a larger scale."

As Mitchell's students wheelbarrowed adobe to the site, early morning commuters and walking students stared at the interesting construction process.

"I want to create something that people can look at and, hopefully, enhance the grounds of the University," Harrison said.

Harrison's design for this sculpture consists of a stepped one-fourth circle that rises to the arch which, in turn, spans across to a prefabricated steel column. A limestone pointed ellipse, constructed with stones from the now-demolished Art Building, fronts the ground surface of the sculpture and borders a planned pathway that circles through the arch.

"I always look for some response to the local area with the use of materials or to respond to the site," Harrison said. "In this case, the arch is a direct response to the windows on West Stadium.

"The use of stone on campus and the campus architecture inspired the piece. The steel column I've used many times. It's a hallmark of my work," he said.

Harrison picked up most of his construction skills working in the industry to pay his way through college.

Harrison said he has received many public and private commissions, but he still enjoys giving workshops at universities.

"It's great to work in a university situation," Harrison said.

Throughout the week, students have volunteered independently and art classes have spent class time working on the sculpture.

Michael Hale, graduate student in sculpture, was bringing his Sculpture I students to the site in the afternoon.

"It's a good chance to work on a large scale, which most of us can't do because it's prohibitively expensive," Hale said.

Not everyone at the site felt like the workshop was a good experience.

Pete Lang, sophomore in architecture and architectural engineering, said he thinks the sculpture is lame.

"I haven't gotten that much out of it," Lang said.

He said because he was in Mitchell's morning ceramics class, he had to volunteer for the workshop.

Harrison plans to have the sculpture finished by Saturday, weather permitting. The workshop continues from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. today and Saturday. Anyone is welcome to help or watch.

Religious rites vary ceremonial types

Debbie Hollis
staff reporter

Wedding ceremonies can be as different as the couples they join. Different religions often have different traditions.

Marriage is considered a life-cycle event in the Jewish religion.

"Life-cycle events like birth, coming of age and marriage are celebrated with great joy and are very important," Deborah Fedder, B'nai B'rith Hillel activities director, said. Hillel is a Jewish campus organization.

Before a Jewish wedding, the groom signs a Ketubah, a binding document that outlines his moral and financial obligations to his wife. The ceremony itself takes place under a cloth held up with four poles called a chuppah.

The procession down the aisle often includes both sets of parents.

"It can be done different ways," Fedder said.

The parents and other members of the wedding party remain with the couple throughout the ceremony, she said.

This is one aspect of a Jewish wedding students find interesting.

"When my parents got married, they had both sets of parents standing behind them throughout the ceremony," Debbie Perlman, senior in business management, said. "I like that better when both sets of the parents are involved."

In the Mormon church the wedding is held in a Mormon temple, said Thomas Nelson, director of Manhattan Latter-day Saints Institute of Religion.

The Mormons believe marriage is eternal and marital relationships will extend into heaven if the marriage is sealed in the temple.

Marriages outside of the temple are an option if couples do not want to wait to be legally married until they receive recommend.

"Civil marriages are recognized before God, but there's that phrase, 'as long as you both shall live,'" he said.

Some couples who choose to wed outside of the temple will later have a temple wedding, he said.

Once both the bride and groom receive recommend, they are sealed in the temple. The ceremony is quiet with only a few family members and friends in attendance who also have recommend to enter the temple, Nelson said.

Akhter Khan, a member of the board of directors of the Manhattan Islamic Center, explained Islamic traditions.

Marriage is considered legal when the father of the bride asks the groom if he will accept the bride in marriage and then asks the bride if she will accept the groom. Once both parties accept, they sign a marriage contract in front of two witnesses.

Islamic weddings vary depending on the culture of the country, he said.

In Bangladesh, Khan's native country, the groom's father goes to the bride's family to offer the proposal of marriage. If the proposal is accepted, there is an engagement party some time before the wedding, Khan said.

There are four days of celebration for a wedding. On the first night, the bride's family hosts a small party for friends and relatives. On the next night, the groom's family hosts a similar party.

The third day is the day of the marriage ceremony. A large dinner and party is organized by the bride's family.

"If they can afford it, there will be 500-700 guests or more," Khan said.

The wedding and party last three or four hours.

"It provides the necessary insurance for those who think they're invincible, but, after a tragedy, realize that their entire financial security can be destroyed for the rest of their lives," he said.

On the negative side, students either prove they have insurance or they buy it, so it's expensive for those who don't want it.

John Truman, junior in political science, said he is against any kind of required insurance. He is married and trying to raise a son and cannot afford any extra costs.

"I believe it's wrong, because it forces an individual to not only purchase something they may not be able to afford," he said, "but also to purchase something that is thrusted upon them with no actual choice."

> "I believe it wrong because it forces an individual to not only purchase something they may not be able to afford, but also to purchase something that is thrusted upon them with no actual choice."
> • JOHN TRUMAN
> JUNIOR IN POLITICAL SCIENCE

Truman also said the fee would cause problems for only one class of people, the class that cannot afford insurance to begin with. Others said they disagree, saying insurance is a necessity.

"I don't think people can afford to live without insurance," Amy Martin, junior in pre-medicine and SHAC member, said.

Students would save a lot of money if they were confronted with an emergency situation, she said.

There are people who spend thousands of dollars on medical bills and are not covered by insurance at all.

This plan would save them a lot of money, she said.

However, the decision is not final and SHAC wants more student input.

SHAC is still checking into other companies and other possibilities.

The final decision will not made by Student Senate or SHAC. They can only make a recommendation.

The final decision will be made by the administration.

K-State, Sherow said he thinks Dole had a detrimental effect because of his opposition to the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Dole

"Dole has hurt my ability and the ability of some of my colleagues to receive funding for research when he takes to task NEH," Sherow said.

Sherow said he receives from the NEH grant awards of $180,000-190,000 to put on institutes, but that funding could be cut due to opposition from people like Dole.

> "Dole has hurt my ability and the ability of some of my colleagues to receive funding for research when he takes to task NEH.
> • JAMES SHEROW
> PROFESSOR OF HISTORY

One of Dole's heroes is Dwight Eisenhower, another Kansan, who served as president of the United States from 1953 to 1961.

Eisenhower was 70 at the conclusion of his presidency.

Dole, at 73, would be the oldest president inaugurated. Some might worry about his health.

However, "Ike," while serving as president, suffered a heart attack in 1955, from which he recovered. He also recovered quickly from a stroke he suffered in 1957.

During Eisenhower's tenure as president, his principal goal was to balance the budget — an issue that probably sounds familiar to voters now

Eisenhower expanded social security, another familiar issue.

Eisenhower's greatest accomplishment, according to the Encyclopedia of the American Presidency, was the Eisenhower Interstate Highway System.

The encyclopedia refers to it as the greatest public-works project ever.

REC REPORT

November 1996

This is a Paid Advertisement

Tune in to our full page ad on the 1st day of each month for program information and monthly calendar of Recreational Services events!

Intramural MANIA

November Dates to Remember

Date	Event	Time	Location
3	Inner Tube Water Polo Begins	7:45 p.m.	Natatorium
3 & 10	Bowling Tournament		Union Bowling Center
8	Entry Deadline for Sports Trivia	5 p.m.	Rec Services Office
14	Sports Trivia Contest	7 p.m.	Recreation Complex

Sports Trivia Contest

The fourth annual Intramural Sports Trivia Contest will be held Thursday, Nov. 14, at the Recreation Complex. Participants will take a 60-question test in the preliminary round. Four categories of sports will be covered on the test: Football, Basketball, Baseball and Miscellaneous. The top eight participants will advance to the final head-to-head tournament. If you are a trivia expert or a sports buff, this contest is for you!

Employment Opportunities

Office Assistant

Application deadline is Wednesday, Nov. 6, by 5 p.m. Submit a letter of application, resume and spring class schedule to the Business Office at Ahern Recreation Complex.

Nutrition Notes

While many people are concerned about weight loss, there are a few who actually desire weight gain. In order to add muscle weight, a person needs to combine a weight training program using the overload principle, along with increased calorie consumption. In theory 2,500 kcal equals one pound of muscle. Remember, everyone is unique and will adapt differently to a weight training routine. Experiment with what works best for you.

POOL ACTION

Monday, Nov. 4, from 8-9 p.m. is Stroke Mechanics Workshop for the month of November. If you would like help with fine-tuning your swimming strokes, show up at the Natatorium and certified water safety instructors will be there to answer questions and give suggestions.

Sunday and Wednesday evenings throughout November, the 6-lane pool will be used for IM Inner Tube Water Polo. The 8-lane pool and diving well will be open for recreational swimming.

Note: The pools will be closed Saturday, Nov. 23 from 1-5 p.m. for the home football game and there will be no evening swim Wednesday, Nov. 27, through Saturday, Nov. 30, for Thanksgiving break and superchlorination. Regular pool hours resume Sunday, Dec. 1.

Call Rec Check at 532-6000 for days and times of recreational swim. A schedule of times for the month is available at the Natatorium and the Recreation Complex.

Working It Out

The weather outside is getting chilly, so move your workouts indoors and join us in the multipurpose room for a variety of exercise sessions.

Another Funk Aerobics class has been added to the exercise schedule on Friday evening from 6:40 p.m.-7:40 p.m.

Call Rec Check at 532-6000 for days and times exercise sessions are offered, or pick up a schedule by the front desk.

Note: There will be no 5:30 p.m. or evening exercise sessions on Wednesday, November 27, through Saturday, November 30, for the Thanksgiving break. Regularly scheduled exercise sessions resume Sunday, December 1.

Fitness Facts

Alternating high intensity and low intensity aerobic cycles two to three times a week added with a moderate aerobics program can encourage the body to burn fat more efficiently than straight aerobics alone.

MY FAVORITE WORKOUT

Dedicated is the best word to describe this group of Lafene health care professionals who lap swim at the Natatorium on weekday mornings before work. As individuals, they've been swimming regularly from 3-16 yrs., each averaging 3-5 days a week. And they have over a period of time formed a unique team-oriented relationship, encouraging each other in maintaining their established exercise regimens. Spokesperson Dr. Larry Moeller said lap swimming is just part of meeting the basic tenets of self-care: exercise, nutrition and stress management. This group is proud to practice what they preach!

Who's Who at the Rec

Brian Underwood has been assistant manager of the Outdoor Rental Center for the past 2 years, providing outdoor equipment rental services and maintaining play fields and field equipment. Brian will graduate in December with a park resource management degree and plans to pursue a career with the National Park Service. Originally from the small town of Burr Oak, KS, Brian enjoys all the activity the campus offers and that there is always something new going on — especially at work!

Matt Reishus has been a building supervisor at the Rec Complex since he first arrived at KSU 4-1/2 years ago. A native of Plainville, KS, Matt is graduating in May 1997 with a degree in secondary education. After completing student teaching this spring, Matt plans to teach social studies and math in the Kansas City area. Matt said the best part about working at the Rec is all the people he has met & worked with and the opportunity as a student to participate in intramural sports.

Ride Boldly...Ride on the New Upright Bikes

The cardiovascular area of the Recreation Complex has just received three new Universal Aerobicycle IV exercise bikes. These new machines are equipped with four exercise courses: Steady Climb, Rolling Hills, Constant RPM Training and Pulse Training. A fitness test, which ranks you according to national norms, is also featured. In addition, displays show exercise time, work load, pedal speed, progress, calories burned, distance traveled in either miles or kilometers, and pulse rate. The pulse rate monitor is built into the handle bars and will guide you with approximate heart rate through your cycling program. Come on out and give them a ride!!

Outdoor Rental Center

The Outdoor Rental Center will be CLOSED during the winter months. November 4 is the last day of operation this season. However, special arrangements may be made by calling the Recreational Services office at 532-6980. Twenty-four hour notice required.

You Asked It!

On a StairMaster, how many steps equal a floor?

Step height on a StairMaster is varied based on the individual's step height. The StairMaster calculates the floors based on total work and is equivalent to the work done to climb 16 eight-inch steps or about ten feet.

Congratulations to Pam Staatz for winning the Spring Semester facility use card donated by Recreational Services at the KSU Employee Benefits Fair!

3 students arrested for fighting

SPEED

▶ Defensive tackle Lance Grace and two other K-State students were arrested Saturday after Grace allegedly groped one of the student's girlfriend.

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

Three K-State students, including Wildcat defensive tackle Lance Grace, were arrested by the Riley County Police Department Saturday morning for their involvement in a fight.

Grace, 19, was arrested for misdemeanor battery, disorderly conduct and obstruction of justice. Avery Demby, 26, junior in kinesiology, was arrested for battery, disorderly conduct and resisting arrest. Demby's sister, Jaimee Demby, 21, was also arrested for disorderly conduct.

The fight appears to have been a two-parter. The first part began outside the front of KJ's Bar & Dance Club. The second occurred behind Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon.

The incident began when Jonita Woodson, Avery Demby's girlfriend and a tutor for the football team, was being groped by Grace at KJ's.

Grace

"Lance was inappropriately touching my girlfriend, grabbing her forcefully in a sexual way," Avery Demby said. "He was also touching my sister."

The Dembys and Woodson said Grace, a 6'1" 275-pounder, had been behaving in a drunk, belligerent and rough manner for most of the evening.

"He was egging the situation on and on until it escalated," Jaimee Demby said.

When Grace began touching Woodson and Jaimee Demby, Avery Demby said he intervened and told Grace to back off.

"He asked me if I've been around long," Avery Demby said. "I told him I've been gone for a year, and have just come back recently. He then went on to say, 'I'm the man. I run all this shit. This shit is mine. I play football for K-State, and this house is mine.'"

At that point, Grace allegedly began throwing drinks around and pushing chairs around. The bouncers at KJ's began to separate the two by pushing Avery Demby out the front door and sending Grace to the back.

"I can't say what happened before the fight," Jeff Fellows, owner of KJ's, said. "I know Lance was in the bar, and the little black guy threw a drink on Lance."

Woodson said no one threw any drinks at Grace at any time.

Although the bouncers attempted to separate Avery Demby and Grace, Fellows said Grace pushed through the bouncers and attacked Avery Demby outside the bar.

"My door guys, he's so big, they could not really do anything," Fellows said.

Senior defensive end Nyle Wiren then showed up at the scene.

Wiren said he was contacted by bouncers at the bar who said he needed to come down and get Grace. When he arrived, Wiren said, he grabbed Grace and took him out the back of KJ's.

"When I got there, I was standing with the police, and right in front of the police, this guy came out of nowhere and hit Lance," Wiren said. "I came at the end of the fight. I was strictly a mediator."

But there are conflicting reports as to when Wiren intervened.

Avery Demby said Wiren got involved during the front fight, grabbing him and holding him when Grace punched him.

Jaimee Demby and Woodson said Wiren was at KJ's before the incident happened.

"Nyle was out all night," Jaimee Demby said. "We saw him on the dance floor taking his shirt off and basically stripping."

"He came over and talked to Lance at our table," Woodson said.

But neither of the Dembys nor Woodson could confirm if Wiren was present at the beginning of the incident.

The fight concluded when Avery Demby came to the back of Last Chance and punched Grace. The officers then arrested Avery Demby and Jaimee Demby. Jaimee Demby said she was just screaming at the officers to let them know Grace was the person who should be arrested.

Jaimee Demby was hit by a car in front of KJ's when, after trying to get Grace off her brother, she was pushed into the street by Grace. A hit-and-run report was filed.

Sports Information Director Kent Brown said statements concerning personnel would come from football coach Bill Snyder.

"As of Sunday night," Brown said, "Coach Snyder is unavailable for comment."

Athletic Director Max Urick said he could not confirm or deny whether Grace had been removed from the football team.

"I think it's a good chance for students to give back to the community. Sometimes we get so involved in our studies and our classes that we don't think about the people that live here."

Community-service project benefits senior citizens

KELLY KIEFER
staff reporter

The Boys & Girls Club of Manhattan joined the HOME Program this weekend for "What a Difference a Day Makes," a project serving senior citizens with yardwork and clean-up around their homes.

Members of six greek houses volunteered to fulfill requirements for Paint It Purple, a new, mandatory community-service project for Homecoming.

About 10 members of the Boys & Girls Club and 20 Beta Alpha Psi accounting honorary members also volunteered.

Groups met at the Home Owners Maintenance and Energy Program Inc. office to get residence assignments and divide into teams.

About 25 teams of six to 10 members worked each day from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Michelle Lynch, executive director of HOME Program, said the Boys & Girls Club called to volunteer while she was coordinating greek houses with HOME clients.

"We just decided to make it one big weekend," she said.

Most groups raked yards, but other tasks included cleaning gutters, cleaning windows and touching up paint.

One team helped jack up a falling porch at a residence.

"We raked leaves, cleaned out gutters and did other odd jobs that each house wanted us to do," said Tanner Mason, sophomore in business management and Sigma Nu member.

Lynch said the HOME Program is a non-profit maintenance program that does repairs for senior citizens, low-income and disabled home-owners.

"We work a lot with volunteers, donated materials and donated money," she said.

Lynch said even though many of the students were required to volunteer, she saw positive attitudes from everyone.

"I think it's a good chance for students to give back to the community. Sometimes we get so involved in our studies and our classes that we don't think about the people that live here," Sigrid Mamminga, senior in marketing and Delta Delta Delta member, said.

This weekend was the first time many students have worked with a project like this.

"I think it's good because, being a senior, this is the first time we've ever done anything like this and it provides more opportunities for participation," Kelli Andrews, senior in journalism and mass communications and a Tri-Delt member, said.

"I think people get more involved and it's more hands-on than maybe like a blood drive or something like that," she said.

Josh Shuart, senior in advertising and Delta Upsilon member, said he worked hard, hoping to benefit others.

"I felt like I did something worthwhile with my day," he said.

This is the first year "What a Difference a Day Makes" has been organized in Manhattan.

Jason Reid, sophomore in marketing and finance and Phi Delta Theta member, helped coordinate greek volunteers with the HOME Program. Reid said the project will become an annual event.

"From now on Manhattan will have it every year," he said.

Delta Delta Delta, Sigma Nu and Delta Upsilon worked with members of the Boys & Girls Club and Beta Alpha Psi accounting honorary Saturday. Phi Delta Theta, Alpha Delta Pi and Beta Theta Pi worked Sunday.

Katrina Stenfors, senior in accounting and Beta Alpha Psi member, said members of the accounting honorary are required to do three community service hours with the Boys & Girls Club. She chose to fulfill the requirement this weekend.

New program involves teamwork

MICHELLE BURKS
staff reporter

A new community service program designed for Homecoming began Saturday.

Paint It Purple is designed to help out around the Manhattan community. All 11 sororities at K-State, about 22 of the fraternities and the residence halls are involved.

The sororities bid their fraternities last spring for their teams while the residence halls teamed with other residence halls. Each team designs its own activity.

Some of the activities include soccer tournaments for Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan Inc., painting and repairing houses, a children's carnival, and clean up at Tuttle Creek State Park.

"The point of this project is to give a little bit back to the Manhattan community," said Kristen Mehan, Panhellenic Council executive secretary and junior in public health nutrition and pre-physical therapy.

Mehan is working with Tim Riemann, vice-president of external affairs of the Interfraternity Council and junior in agricultural economics and pre-law, to coordinate the Paint It Purple Program.

Houses that have 75 percent of their members participating in Paint It Purple will receive 80 points. Those points will be added into the total Homecoming score.

Without these points it will be difficult to win the overall competition. Eighty points is all that can be received for Paint It Purple.

Paint It Purple will give an opportunity for the residence halls and the greek houses to work together and do something prosperous for Manhattan, Mehan said.

"Hopefully this will improve relations between greek houses and residents," Mehan said.

This is the first year of the Paint It Purple Program, which ends Nov. 17.

Poll suggests Brownback, Roberts to win

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The final Kansas poll of the 1996 campaign suggested Republicans should retain the state's two U.S. Senate seats, but could lose two of the four U.S. House seats the GOP now holds.

Poll results released Saturday night had Republican Sam Brownback comfortably ahead of Democrat Jill Docking in the race for the final two years on Bob Dole's old Senate seat — a sharp contrast to the result in a Mason-Dixon poll also released on Saturday.

The Kansas poll had Republican Pat Roberts headed for a likely landslide victory over Democrat Sally Thompson for the Senate seat being vacated by the retirement of Nancy Kassebaum.

Brownback led Docking 53 percent to 40 percent in the Kansas poll, with Reform Party candidate Don Klaassen getting 2 percent and the other 4 percent undecided. Mason-Dixon reported a statistical dead heat, showing Brownback with 46 percent and Docking with 45 percent.

The Kansas poll also gave Roberts 60 percent to 29 percent for Thompson, with 2 percent for Reform Party candidate Mark Marney, 1 percent for Libertarian Steven Rosile and 8 percent undecided.

In congressional races, the Kansas poll showed Republican Jerry Moran probably en route to a lopsided win over Democrat John Divine in the 1st District, and incumbent Republican Todd Tiahrt a likely winner over Democratic challenger Randy Rathbun in the 4th District.

It showed statistical dead heats in the 2nd-District race between Democrat John Frieden and Republican Jim Ryun and the 3rd District race between Republican Vince Snowbarger and Democrat Judy Hancock.

Results in the Kansas poll had Moran over Divine, 61-18, with 2 percent for Libertarian Bill Earnest, and Tiahrt over Rathbun, 56-37 with 3 percent for Libertarian Seth Warren.

In the 2nd District, the final Kansas poll gave Frieden 47 percent and one-time track star Ryun 42 percent, with 1 percent for Libertarian Art Clack. The poll found 44 percent support for Snowbarger and 41 percent support for Hancock, with 1 percent each for Libertarian Charles Clack and the Reform Party's Randy Gardner in the 3rd District.

The Kansas poll was conducted by Central Research & Consulting Inc. of Topeka for the Topeka Capital-Journal, which published the senatorial and congressional results in its Sunday newspaper. It planned to publish results in the presidential race on Monday.

Central Research said it surveyed 1,000 likely voters Monday through Thursday — 250 in each of the state's four congressional districts. It said the

NATION WORLD

• BOMBS EXPLODE AT TWO RESTAURANTS. Two pipe bombs exploded in a pair of downtown restaurants Sunday, sending diners running into the streets in Astoria, Ore. After the explosions, a man shot and killed himself inside one of the restaurants. The name of the man who shot himself was being withheld pending notification of his family. The first bomb exploded at the Dutch Cup restaurant about 10:55 a.m., and the second went off about four minutes later at the Pig & Pancake restaurant a quarter mile away.

• FIGHTING IN RWANDA CONTINUES. Tutsi rebels apparently seized control of the Zairian border town of Goma on Saturday, following two days of fighting that scattered more than 1 million terrified refugees throughout eastern Zaire with little food and no medical assistance. Fighting in Goma died down Saturday afternoon, apparently as Zairian troops retreated from the capital of north Kivu province. Sporadic shooting continued, and snipers near the lakeside border crossing prevented journalists who fled to Rwanda earlier Saturday with more than 100 foreign-aid workers from re-entering Goma. Without the aid workers, the refugees must fend for themselves.

• FIVE DEAD IN HAWAII PLANE CRASH. A county councilman and two local Democratic Party officials were among five people killed when their twin-engine plane crashed during a short trip between Hawaiian islands. There were no survivors in the Friday night crash into a ridge on the east coast of Molokai Island.

CITY STATE

• THREE DEAD, ONE WOUNDED IN TOPEKA DOMESTIC DISTURBANCE. A man who apparently shot his estranged wife and her parents before fatally shooting himself had wanted to reconcile with the woman. Gregory Dean Durant Jr., 21, assistant minister of New Jerusalem Baptist Church, had purchased an anniversary ring to give to his wife. But on Friday night, Gregory Durant's visit to his wife turned violent and he fatally shot Shelly Durant, 21, and her father, Gabriel Mosqueda, 41. Mary Mosqueda, 42, was wounded and was in stable condition Saturday. Gregory Durant then turned the gun on himself following the shootings at the Mosqueda home. The two Durant children, a 9-month-old girl and a 2-year-old boy, were upstairs in the home at the time of the shootings and were not hurt.

SPORTS

• ALLEN TIES CAREER NFL RECORD. Marcus Allen scored his 110th rushing touchdown Sunday to tie Walter Payton's career NFL record. Allen, who earlier had a touchdown reception wiped out by a penalty, scored on a 1-yard dive with 26 seconds left in the first half to give the Kansas City Chiefs a 7-0 lead over the Minnesota Vikings. It was a day of milestones for the 15-year veteran, who also moved up on the career rushing yardage list and had a chance to become the NFL's career-receptions leader among running backs.

• MORRISON KNOCKS OUT RHODE. HIV-infected boxer Tommy Morrison returned to the ring Sunday and knocked out Marcus Rhode in one minute, 38 seconds. By previous agreement, the match would have been stopped at the first blood. But there was none. In fact, Morrison took Rhode so quickly there was barely any sweat.

• BOSTON COLLEGE BEING INVESTIGATED. Boston College officials met behind closed doors most of the day Sunday as rumors swirled around campus about possible illegal gambling activity involving members of the school's football team. On Saturday night, Boston College athletic director Chet Gladchuk announced that the school had started an investigation and asked for the Middlesex District Attorney's assistance.

Homosexuals can find acceptance at a church in Manhattan.

Same-sex couples and singles who are looking for a place to turn to can find openness at the Metropolitan Community Churches of the Open Arms. The MCC in Manhattan uses Danforth Chapel for regular church services every Sunday at 1:30 p.m.

Rev. Denise Leopold has been the pastor of the congregation for two years.

Leopold studied at the St. Paul School of Theology in Kansas City, Mo., and received a master's degree in social work at the University of Kansas. She also got a master's degree in divinity at a MCC seminary institute.

The MCC institute helped prepare her for leading a homosexual congregation.

"It taught me how to deal with certain subjects of being a homosexual and how to deal with hate crimes," Leopold said. "I learned how to help people grow and to get beyond the discrimination they might face."

MCC has been an accepted member of the World Council of Churches since 1994. The congregation is composed primarily of homosexuals, but it also welcomes heterosexuals.

MCC began in California in 1968 and grew quickly. MCC also has congregations in Topeka, Wichita and Kansas City. The Manhattan branch of MCC has been active for nearly two years.

Leopold said the most important difference in MCC, compared to other churches, is the language it uses about God.

"The language you use shapes people's ideas about other people," Leopold said. "Most churches use father and he to refer to God. We talk about the creator, mother and father and God as a friend. We use God as an image and talk about who and what he might be, not as a gender."

The church accepts people for who they are, not what they are, she said. It looks at relationships the same way.

John, an MCC member since 1991, said he enjoyed the church's attitude.

"Whether you're straight, bi or gay, everyone is welcome," John said. "This is a church made for people to gather and worship, no matter who or what they are."

John said the church has taught him people have a lot of fear, and the fear is of having someone who's different than you as your equal.

Leopold said it is not important who would qualify as a partner, but the quality of the relationship itself is important.

Leopold said MCC tries to overcome bigotries and biases and reconcile with the straight world rather than to retaliate. Leopold respects loving, caring relationships and knows God does, too.

"If the gender issue was important, Jesus might have said something about it," Leopold said.

When confronted with the issue of how the Bible looks at homosexuality and acceptance of same-sex marriages, Leopold said people follow the part of the law that sets them up above everyone else.

"The Bible says that we shouldn't eat split-hoofed animals and people eat pork. It also states that we shouldn't wear two different types of cloth, and people walk out of their houses every day with this on," Leopold said.

Leopold said it's all how you want to interpret God's word and that to her God's laws are written in our hearts.

Voting outcomes crucial in state, national contests

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — It will be mid-afternoon in California when the polls close in Indiana and Kentucky and Bob Dole discovers if his upset dreams have any chance at reality. It won't be long after when Newt Gingrich has a decent guess at whether he will still be House speaker come January.

Across America, Tuesday's ballot is crowded with crucial contests. The presidential race is the headliner, and there are elections for 34 Senate seats and all 435 in the House.

Eleven states are choosing governors, and in at least 28 states the balance of power in legislative chambers was in question.

Not to mention important local contests and a record number of ballot questions, like a California effort to repeal state affirmative-action programs, and proposals in 13 states that will test the staying power of the struggling term-limits movement.

In all this election-night mayhem, there are several states and individual races that offer a glimpse into national trends — from the fight for the White House and Congress to whether Christian conservatives or organized labor gets the upper hand in turning out voters in targeted contests.

Here are 10 races or places to watch:

• KENTUCKY: Even with a win over President Clinton in this toss-up state, Dole would have a long way to go for his upset. But Dole cannot afford to lose the state. Down ballot, a GOP win over Democratic Rep. Mike Ward would calm Gingrich's nerves and dampen Democratic chances of retaking the House.

• GEORGIA: Another must-win for Dole, and a pivotal state in the battle for the Senate. Democrat Sam Nunn is retiring, and Republican Guy Milner had late momentum in a tight race. Democrats need to gain three seats to win the Senate; losing here would make the climb steeper.

• OHIO: The polls close at 6:30 p.m., and by then Dole will know if he has a prayer. No Republican has ever won the White House without carrying Ohio. Democrats hope to defeat GOP Reps. Martin Hoke in suburban Cleveland and Frank Cremeans in the state's more conservative southeast corner. These are critical tests of the $35-million AFL-CIO campaign to put the House back in Democratic hands.

• NORTH CAROLINA SENATE: Four-term GOP Sen. Jesse Helms in a rematch with 1990 Democratic challenger Harvey Gantt, who is black and a former Charlotte mayor. Race was again an issue in the end. Helms never wins by much and is banking on high Christian-conservative turnout.

"We need this seat to have a realistic shot of getting the Senate back," said Democratic pollster Mark Mellman.

• FLORIDA: Until a tightening of the presidential race in the final week, Clinton aides were picturing an electoral landslide — in part because of the Democrat's lead in this usually Republican presidential state.

A Clinton win here "and the so-called Republican lock on the Electoral College is shattered," said Clinton deputy campaign manager Ann Lewis. The Tampa-area seat of retiring Democratic Rep. Sam Gibbons is a GOP target.

• ARKANSAS SENATE: Clinton's home state factors big in Republicans' hopes to increase their 53-47 Senate majority. GOP Rep. Tim Hutchinson led late in the race to replace retiring Democratic Sen. David Pryor. Democrat Winston Bryant hoped for Clinton coattails.

• NEW HAMPSHIRE: Democratic state Sen. Jeanne Shaheen was favored to become the state's first woman governor — and the first Democrat elected to that job since 1980. Republican Bob Smith, a pro-life leader in the U.S. Senate, was in a tough race against former Rep. Dick Swett as Democrats looked to break the state's GOP tradition.

• ARIZONA: Not since Harry Truman in 1948 has a Democrat carried this state in a presidential race, a marker Clinton had high hopes of shattering until the race tightened of late. This is one of several Western states where Ross Perot's count could make a difference in the outcome. Freshman GOP Rep. J.D. Hayworth was labor's top target.

• WASHINGTON: The defeat of then-House speaker Thomas Foley headlined the 1994 Republican rout here. The six House seats gained by Republicans two years ago are the important battlegrounds, and late Republican momentum appeared to dampen Democratic hopes for a big swing back in their favor. Democrat Gary Locke was favored to become the first Chinese American governor of a mainland state.

• CALIFORNIA: At the start of the campaign year, Republicans suggested affirmative action would be an important national issue. It wasn't, in part because of the popularity of retired Gen. Colin Powell, who declared himself a Republican and warned his new party against focusing on affirmative action, and because of Dole's decision to put the GOP's ambassador of minority outreach, Jack Kemp, on the GOP ticket. Dole did return to the issue during his late California push.

Other issues of notice

CALIFORNIA: The Civil Rights Initiative would eliminate state and local affirmative-action programs of women and minorities. Candidate Bob Dole agrees with this measure.

WASHINGTON: An initiative would allow the use of vouchers to pay for private schools. Dole also agrees with this measure.

OREGON: A proposed sin tax that would double taxes on cigarettes will be voted on.

MAINE: Voters will decide whether or not to severely limit logging practices, including banning clearcutting 10 million acres owned by paper mills that drive Maine's economy.

COLORADO: An initiative would allow parents inalienable rights to control the upbringing, education, values and discipline of their children.

ON QUESTION ONE

Question One is the following:

Shall sale of alcoholic liquor by the individual drink in Riley County be allowed in public without a requirement that any portion of their gross receipts be from sales of food?

A VOTE YES ON QUESTION ONE IS A VOTE FOR...

EMPLOYMENT

The hospitality industry employs thousands of full and part time employees throughout Riley County. We can not afford to lose these valuable jobs.

A SOLID TAX BASE

The hospitality industry contributed millions of dollars in tax revenue...if this is lost the government will be forced to raise taxes in other areas (property taxes, sales tax, etc...).

HELPING RILEY COUNTY COMPETE

Riley County can't compete with other counties for valuable tourism dollars if we are forced to turn away out of town visitors because they are not part of our private club system.

OPINION

EDITOR: SERA TANK 532-0730 (KAROLYI@KSU.EDU) MONDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1996

IN OUR OPINION

Kansas not too far removed from California's initiatives

There are issues on ballots all over the country that could change our political system, our laws and our lives.

WHY WE CARE

It's not just the issues you're voting on that you need to be aware of. You also need to watch races and initiatives all over the country.

But you can't vote on them.

You might think that you've done your part by keeping up on the issues and candidates that you will vote on tomorrow, but there's more.

Keep an eye out for issues in other states that could set precedents for Kansas and the United States.

California has an issue on its ballot that could end affirmative-action laws. This has been a hot topic for some time now.

If affirmative action is repealed in California, there might be legally nothing wrong with it being repealed all around the country.

Term limits are another topic being voted on in this election. There are 13 states that are making that crucial decision.

School vouchers are an issue in Washington. This would give students payment vouchers to attend either public or private school. This has already passed in Milwaukee, Wis.

In Oregon, voters will decide the fate of a so-called sin tax, which would double the tax on cigarettes.

Doctors might be able to prescribe marijuana to patients for the purpose of healing if Arizona and California voters decide to allow it.

Maine voters will decide on one of the most important issues pertaining to the environment that we have seen in years.

If the initiative is passed, logging practices will be severely limited and so will the state's paper companies — a tremendous industry in Maine.

And don't forget to watch the numerous Senate and House races that could change the balance of power in Congress.

While many of these issues seem to be far removed from our lives at K-State, we're not immune to these issues. We need to watch other states' elections and issues.

Life is short; complain hard

Bitch and gripe all you want; we'll make more to complain about.

MY

Roopa SWAMINATHAN

Life is such a damn bitch.

And then, you don't even die.

Keep praying, and your dream might come true, my friend said.

Cute, very cute.

I was complaining there, just in case it had slipped everyone's mind.

I am easily one of those few people in the world who can complain about anything and everything, every second of the day and actually love it. I revel in whining.

Luckily most people I know are like I am. But then there are those sanctimonious know-it-alls who get irritated with me and my likes and yell, "Why do you complain? What have you to complain about?" I can read their minds ticking away, thinking ...

I am intelligent (and I genuinely believe that too!), am fairly successful in the social circuit (there are actually some suckers out there who look beyond blond, blue-eyed women), have a lot of friends who'll go beyond eating pizza with me (of course we go Dutch) and will actually show up if I call them for help (unless of course it is 2 in the morning — I mean no one is that friendly).

I have had a wonderful childhood (at least the part I remember), have had a successful career so far and the ultimate pièce de résistance — to some people, I am still considered young. I refuse to reveal my exact age in print. I won't lie about it, but I refuse to reveal it. And if you notice from the above, I am pretty smart — street smart.

> "What is life if not a series of complaints? I have made complaining an art form. I have so many things to complain about."

In case you are wondering exactly why I am rambling on about myself, there is a simple enough reason. If no one else is willing to talk about you, do it yourself. Self-propaganda works wonders. And now I have my own column, so there.

So to get back to my original story, and I do have one, I am almost always asked why I complain. What have you got to complain about?

Some attitude there, I tell you. Tut. Tut.

My response is, what is life if not a series of complaints?

I have made complaining an art form.

I have so many things to complain about. As a woman, as a young woman, as a brown-skinned Indian woman in the United States, discrimination against me is a given. So if I don't get a job, if I fail an interview, I simply scream DISCRIMINATION!

If I don't get asked out on a Saturday, it has nothing to do with me. I am not blond, you see. Every time I am accused of being arrogant, snotty and know-it-all (and believe me when I say those are some of the rather flattering remarks made about me), I tell myself the world is full of people who are not with it.

But just as you soak in your whinings, you meet those genuine people, the type who reek niceness from every pore. Who look at you and believe the sun rises and sets with you (I kid you not). Wretched souls who think you are the nicest, the kindest person in the world. I threwup on that one once, let me tell you.

And there are days when life really looks good. You get good grades for stuff you didn't work too hard on, you have some pennies left in your bank, the sun shines and the cutest guy on campus smiles at you at last.

Miracles occur, and even you wonder why you complain so much. Life indeed isn't so bad. That is the real dangerous time. The time when you see yourself slacking. A time when you relax and quit whining. You begin to conform.

But I will not accept defeat so easily. All I do is go home and turn on the television. Bingo!

You see Michelle Pfeiffer looking drop-dead gorgeous and wonder why everyone thinks she is the most exquisite woman in the world (BAH!). You flick channels in disgust to discover Claudia Schiffer pigging out on hamburgers and chips but still with a tummy flatter than an ironing board.

Nicole Kidman on another channel pontificates on her husband, Tom Cruise. She tells an adoring, drooling interviewer about how the first thing that attracted her to Tom was his kindness and friendly behavior.

Oh no! Madam was not attracted to Tom because he is the most gorgeous guy in the universe, not to mention one of the richest, most powerful men in Hollywood. Never that. (Wonder how nice and friendly Tom would be if I landed on his doorstep.)

Now, that's a thought.

Thank heavens for them, though. It is back to reality time. Back to moaning and groaning.

With a vengeance.

Life looks good. The George Costanza club for whiners is flourishing.

Life sure looks good.

How political correctness stole Halloween

Healthy treats, renaming Halloween as fall festival, fearing the neighbors? Where has Halloween gone?

MY

Mary Renee SMITH

As a parent, I tell my children not to bother the neighbors, not to take anything from strangers and to dress like civilized human beings.

But one day a year all hell breaks loose.

I cleverly disguise my boys and let them wander through the streets in search of things that will rot their teeth.

The same sort of ritual probably happened in your house when you were a child. It's called Halloween.

There is a growing movement by some people not to celebrate this terrific holiday anymore. Freaks.

I love Halloween.

Everyone should celebrate the fall harvest by dressing up their children as goblins and ghouls and sending them out into the cold night to beg door-to-door for candy.

The thing that pissed me off this year was the schools.

My children were not allowed to wear their costumes to school this year. That was the best thing about Halloween when I was a child. It was the one chance you had to see everyone else in costume — even the lunch lady dressed up.

Here in Kansas, where Halloween usually marks the first freeze, school parties were the one and only chance you had to wear your costume without your mom making you cover it up with a coat and hat.

They don't have Halloween parties in public schools anymore. There are fall festivities. I guess we are trying so hard to be politically and socially correct, we are ignoring holidays.

Please spare me.

You know it's Halloween, and I know it's Halloween. Give in, get over your not-so-hidden Christian agendas, and have some fun.

As a parent it is my job to help provide refreshments for this not-Halloween party. I received a letter from the teacher requesting I send healthy treats.

Healthy treats! Who does she think she is? This is Halloween. What would you have done when you were a child if, at your Halloween party, all the parents brought prune bars and tofu?

I made Puppy Chow, that stuff with Chex mix, chocolate and peanut butter coated in powdered sugar. Not only not the healthiest snack ever made but also one of the messiest. I packed it in little bags and stuck Halloween stickers on them.

My faith in Halloween was completely restored when my boys came back from trick-or-treating through their neighborhood with their treat sacks overflowing with candy.

Not the cheap stuff either — none of that nasty pseudo-taffy in the orange wrappers. They got whole candy bars from some houses.

Where were those people when I was little? When I was a child we had a dentist in our neighborhood who gave out those pellets you were supposed to let dissolve in your mouth after you brush your teeth to see the places you'd missed. He was the last of the true Halloween tricksters.

My confidence in the spirit of the holiday and the ability of society to loosen up was being restored. Until my son dumped his entire loot on the floor and said, "Mommy, you are supposed to check my candy before I eat it."

Damn. Damn. Damn.

I forgot about the fear of our neighbors we drill into our children's heads.

We are so incredibly concerned our children might be frightened on Halloween by haunted houses, scary costumes and some fake blood. Meanwhile we spend weeks telling them the people who live right next door might be putting razor blades in apples and arsenic in Tootsie Rolls.

We don't take our children door to door in our own neighborhoods, because we are terrified of the possibility of tainted candy. We will, however, take them to the mall to get treats from strangers who work on commission. Anyone else confused?

I have heard people refer to Halloween as the devil's holiday marked by Satan worship and animal sacrifice. Does anyone you know celebrate Halloween like that? Everyone I know dressed up like a super hero or Barbie and ate too much candy.

Halloween has come and gone for this year. Promise me you won't let the fun die next year.

Question 1 will not hurt city; task force misguided in efforts

Editor,

As a K-State student, I would like to respond to the article presented to the public "Ballot issue to affect bar food-sales quota."

Although I appreciate all the Little Apple Task Force has done to educate the youth in Manhattan, I believe that this organization has stepped out of its boundaries by taking an active interest in the 30-percent food sales question in the upcoming election. The Little Apple Task Force, which is funded by tax payers, is a committee made up of Manhattan citizens whose ages range mainly from the mid-30s to 60s.

This committee believes if the food-sales quota is defeated, bars will spring up all over Manhattan and cause a serious threat to area businesses. This theory is totally unfounded.

This law does not exist in many counties or states with large universities. Take for example, the University of Kansas, Nebraska University, the University of Missouri and countless others.

The Little Apple Task Force will claim that the Lawrence downtown community has lost business, but all the articles from which the group has quoted date back to the late 1980s and 1990s.

The Little Apple Task Force stated in the article that the problem with drinking is getting behind the wheel. Tell the task force to lobby to get more DUI checkpoints around the Manhattan area.

Question one will affect all the college community, small business, tourism and most of all will allow a group of people not even in touch with the times to dictate what the people of Riley County can and cannot do.

Do not allow the Little Apple Task Force to have more power than they think they already have.

Football commercial untruthful

Editor,

I'm sure everybody watched with pride as I did as K-State defeated Texas A&M on the evening of Oct. 19. What a victory! However, the promotional K-State announcement aired a couple of times throughout the telecast was intentionally deceiving.

It was as though Bob Dole and President Clinton conspired to write a K-State script designed to mislead.

Careful attention to detail revealed a crafty attempt to deceive without telling an outright lie. The unmistakable conclusion drawn from the announcement for most people unfamiliar with K-State was that we have a medical school.

We have so much to brag about that deceit is unnecessary! Shame on you administrators who approved the piece.

Group does research regarding lighting situation at K-State

Editor,

Several students are participating in a Small Group Communication assignment research areas on campus that are poorly lighted. We came to the conclusion that there is inadequate lighting in specific areas of the K-State campus.

There have been several reported instances in which students were assaulted in poorly lit areas.

Better lighting will not stop this problem, but it will decrease the number of assaults on campus.

Increased lighting provides a safer environment, thus curtailing possible crimes.

Specific areas that need lighting are as follows:

- along the south sidewalk of Claflin Road between the Military Science Building and Moore Hall
- along Manhattan Avenue from Putnam Hall to the Anderson and Manhattan avenues intersection
- between Shellenberger and Willard halls on the sidewalk leading west up the hill
- on the north side of All Faiths Chapel
- Seaton Courtyard
- the sidewalk on the south side of Old Stadium along the rugby and lacrosse fields
- the sidewalk between the Natatorium, Ahearn Field House and the north side of the Memorial Stadium
- four floodlights shining in the south side of Memorial Stadium and onto the track
- the sidewalk between the President's Residence and the open terrace to the east.

Student Senate has proposed a budget for the next several years.

It approves the budget one year at a time.

We encourage you to write Student Senate to support additional funding of campus lighting.

International Night provides global mix of talent

R.J. DIEPENBROCK
staff reporter

International Night brought McCain Auditorium alive Saturday with authentic foods from India to the Philippines and singing and dance from Southeast Asia to the American 1940s.

Sponsored by the International Coordinating Council and International Club, the night, "Colors of the World," provided those in attendance with a mix of talent that represented cultures from around the world.

"This is for the international students," Jim Endrizzi, International Club adviser, said. "This is an opportunity for the students to portray their different cultures."

Stephan Tubene, ICC secretary, said the night was representative of many different cultures, not just because of the foods, but because of the performances and the interaction of the students.

"Performances show the diversity in cultures," Tubene said. "It shows the diversity of the students at K-State."

The stage in McCain was decorated with the flags from the countries of the performers.

Throughout the lobby, there were more than 100 other flags representative of almost every country.

The estimated 400 people who attended were treated to musical delights by Ming-Tie Huang, graduate student in physics, as he played the pepa, a traditional Chinese instrument, and a candle dance, performed by students from the Vietnamese Student Association.

"It's good to see the efforts of these students have paid off," Locy Smith, sophomore in marketing, said.

Christina Daniels, junior in accounting, said the performances showed a different aspect of the cultures than what most people see on television.

"There are 14 different cultures represented by the performances," said Amarnath Poola, graduate student in engineering and president of ICC. "Our main goal is to represent the cultures of the world."

Accuracy questioned in public opinion polls

JASON WALLE
staff reporter

With elections drawing near, interest in the public-opinion polls is growing. Some K-State officials said those results are accurate, but only as accurate as they can realistically be.

"Public-opinion polling in the United States is really only a 20th-century phenomenon," William Richter, assistant professor of international issues, said. "It really developed into what we know it as today after World War II."

Richter said politicians focus a tremendous amount of their political issues around what public-opinion polls say.

"Politicians certainly want to know how salient an issue is, and what position people are taking," Richter said. "Politicians need a quantifiable measurement of how their constituents feel about a subject."

Richter said he believes public-opinion polls are similar to fuzzy snapshots of reality. The similarity is drawn from the fact that they represent only the moment they are taken. The fuzziness comes from different variables that play into statistical measurements.

In some instances, things can change so rapidly that from the time a poll is taken, to the time it is presented to the public, it may actually misrepresent current opinions, Richter said.

"It is critical to get a truly random sample, and that's the most difficult part," Dallas Johnson, professor of statistics, said.

For example, telephone polls are most often conducted between 6 and 7 p.m. Therefore, the only people polled are those who have telephones and are generally home in the evenings, Johnson said.

Some polls are intentionally biased in their results, but most often only at lower levels of government, Richter said.

"There are several things that public opinion polls can be used for," Richter said. "One is to gain an advantage over an opponent through the bandwagon effect."

Deviating from accuracy through asking leading questions is commonly referred to as Ads twist truth; facts provided in other ways

CHARLI SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

Most political ads are fairly liberal with the way they use the truth, David Procter, head of the Department of Speech Theater and Dance, said.

"Each ad is different from the others in the way they take a kernel of truth and sort of draw their own implications. They are not totally truthful," he said.

For example, an ad run by the Citizens for the Republic Education Fund says that Jill Docking will not tell her position on the balanced-budget amendment, he said. That's not true. She does support a balanced budget but not the amendment in Congress, because she said she feels it is flawed.

"If students are solely relying on political ads, they are in trouble, because the ads are so short and so vague and potentially false. There is no way they can get to know the candidates' positions," Procter said.

They have to go to other sources, he said. For example, the Manhattan Mercury is doing a series in which it lists the topics and detail candidates' positions on the topics. The Collegian also has run issue-related stories on local, state and national candidates.

ONE VOICE * ONE VOTE

Interested in the upcoming elections? The Collegian keeps track of its Election '96 articles on the Web at (http://collegian.ksu.edu/election).

"The students get much better information that way," he said.

There are literally hundreds of Internet sites, and it is possible to get position papers from the candidates, but that is more difficult, Procter said.

"Watch the newspaper closely. The two easiest sources are newspapers and the Internet," he said.

A lot of research has pointed out what political ads do is energize the already committed. They only convert a small percentage, less than 10 percent, he said.

"If you are a Democrat, you look at the Docking ads and say, 'Oh, yeah, she knows what she's doing,' and then you watch the Brownback ads and say, 'Oh, what a liar that guy is,'" Procter said.

Jason Dechant, senior in political science and international studies, said he thinks political ads have a disproportionate influence over those who are less informed, unfortunately. Dechant said you don't have to be a political science major to vote wisely.

"Your major in school is beside the point. It's how well you stay on top of the issues," Dechant said. "People who stay in touch aren't as influenced by the ads."

Maggie Keating, sophomore in political science, compared campaign ads to talk shows. She said people complain about talk shows, but they still watch them.

"People don't want to hear all the negative ads, but they still pay attention to what they say," she said. "Sometimes those little sound bites are a deciding factor for people who don't keep up on politics."

Unconfirmed rumors say Gordon's out

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

It has been reported recently in several area newspapers that K-State senior cornerback Joe Gordon is out for the remainder of the season after surgery to repair a cracked plate that was inserted in his right leg after he broke it Aug. 2.

Gordon

Because of Coach Bill Snyder's strict policy regarding revealing information about player injuries, the Collegian has been unable to confirm the reports.

However, Gordon did not report to the postgame press conference following the Oklahoma game, nor did he attend the mid-week press conference. He was requested at both.

Gordon missed the season's first four games but returned to the lineup against Nebraska and has played in each game since. Because he has played in four games this season, it appears unlikely the NCAA would grant a medical hardship if Gordon is indeed out for the season.

Gordon, a fifth-year senior, has 10 unassisted tackles and six assisted tackles in four games played. He also has broken up three passes.

If Gordon is out for the season, and with Lamar Chapman sidelined with an injured left leg, Snyder could have his work cut out for him deciding who will start where.

Cornerback Chris Canty will likely replace Gordon on the wide side of the field as he did earlier this season, while Demetric Denmark will take Canty's place on the short side.

Safeties Clyde Johnson, David Conley, Mario Smith and Monty Spiller could also add to the mix.

Teams struggle in Big 12 meet, finish 6th, 7th

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

The K-State men's cross country team finished sixth and the women's seventh at the Big 12 cross country meet Saturday.

The men finished with 156 points, just behind Oklahoma State and Missouri.

"One guy ran bad, and that'll do it," Coach Terry Drake said. "Paul (Birnbaum) normally runs with David (Dominguez), and Saturday he just couldn't do it."

The Wildcats top three runners are usually Ryan Clive-Smith, David Dominguez and Paul Birnbaum. Saturday, Birnbaum struggled, finishing in 42nd place, a score that added too many points to the Wildcats' final score.

Clive-Smith placed seventh with a time of 25 minutes, 34 seconds. Dominguez came in 19th, Chris May 34th, and Brent Stover placed 56th.

"That's the way it's been all season," Drake said. "If we can get everybody to connect on the same day, we won't do so bad."

On the women's side, the Wildcats were paced by senior Samantha McNamara who finished in 17th place with a time of 18:39.

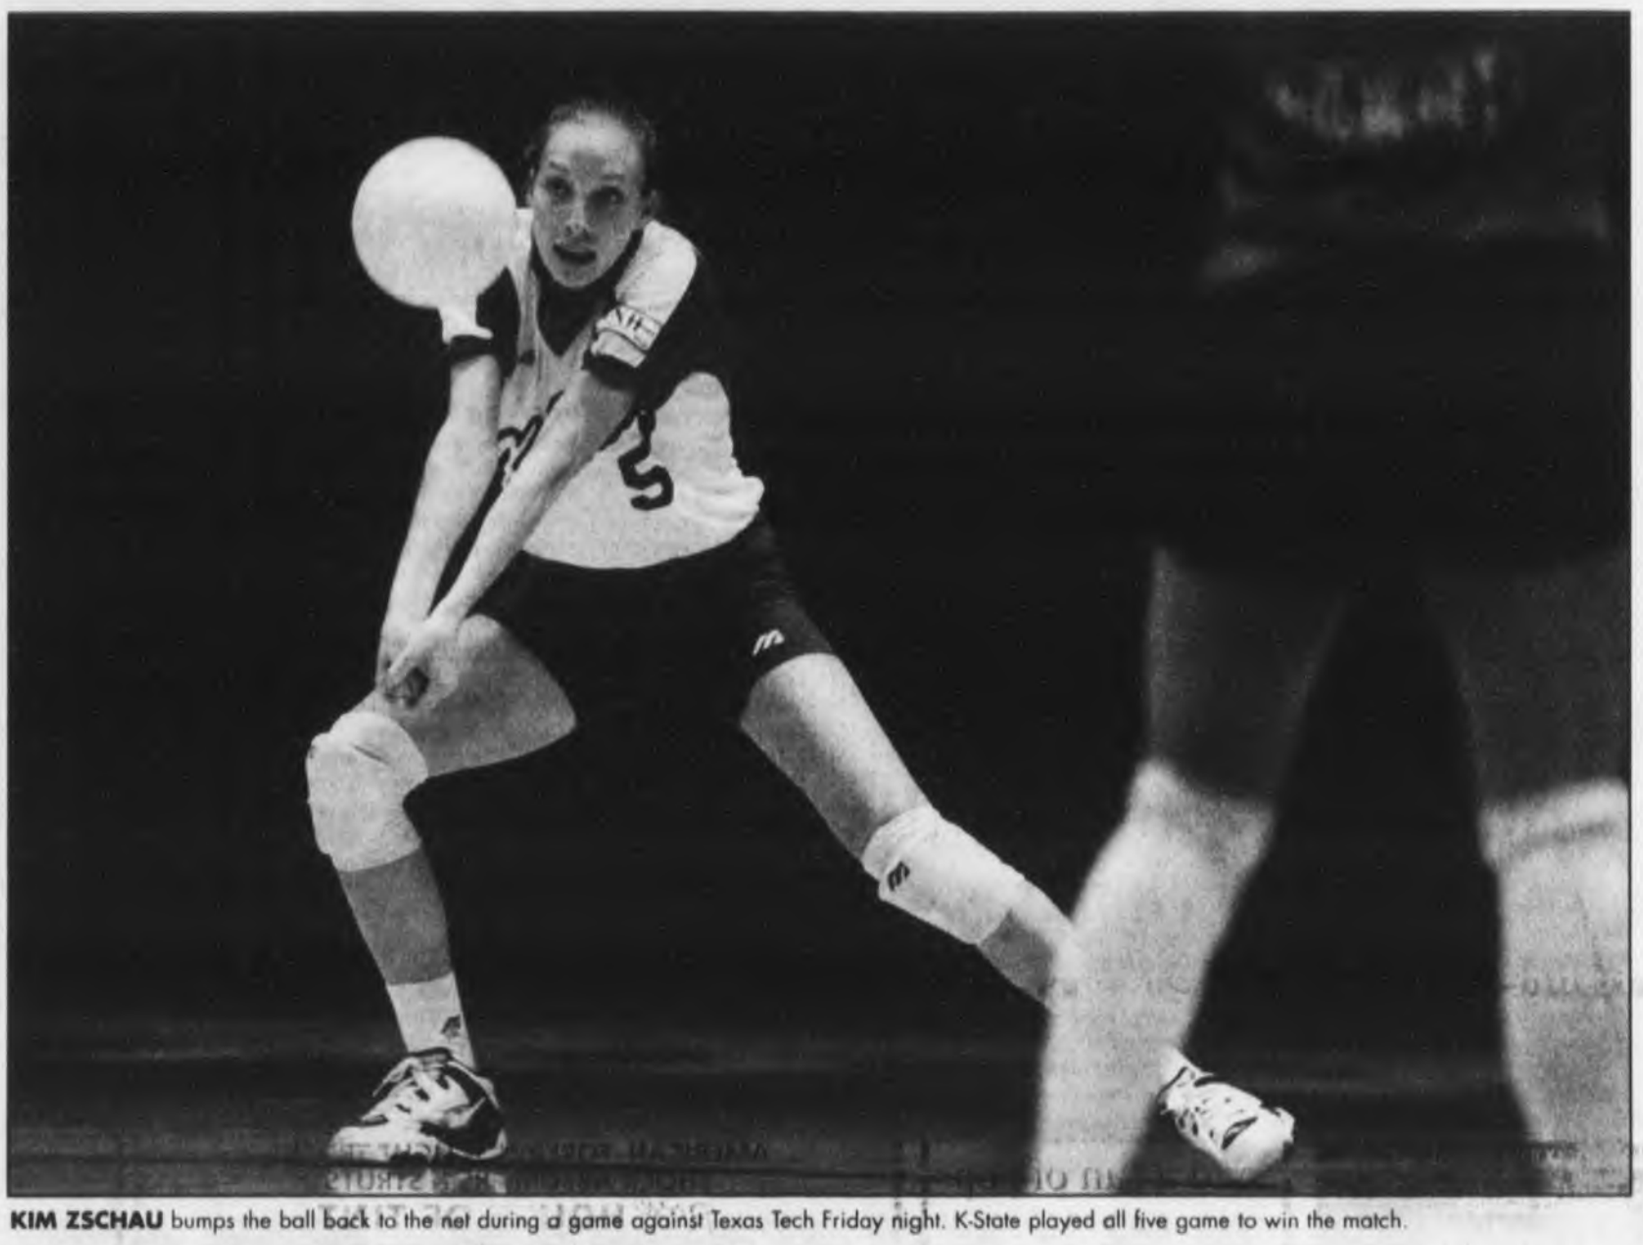
But the women faltered down the line, as Cristy Swartz was the next Wildcat to cross the finish line at 26th, Ashlie Kinton placed 42nd, Emily Diederich 54th, Kathryn Wolfram 61st and Kelly Andra 66th.

"Kelly was so nervous she could hardly function," Drake said, "and she ran like it."

The women were also without the services of Anita Hallauer, who was out with mononucleosis. Wolfram is racing in only her second meet since returning from a hip injury.

"I'm not sure we stepped up like we should have," Drake said. "I just think we could have done better."

The Cats have two weeks off before districts Nov. 16 in Peoria, Ill., and Drake said the Cats need to take the time to work out the kinks.



"It'll be an up-hill battle," he said, "but we're not out of it. I've got to hold myself accountable for some things that need to be changed. And they know they have some things to be working on, too."

I knew this team would fight every second they're out there.

It's no lie we've been struggling.

I WAS ABSOLUTELY PETRIFIED.

NERVE-SHATTERING
Volleyball team beats nationally ranked Texas Tech

STORY BY DAN LEWERENZ • PHOTO BY DARREN WHITLEY

K-State returned to its winning ways this weekend with a pair of victories against conference foes Texas Tech and Baylor.

In a conference like the Big 12, with three teams ranked in the top 10 (more than any other conference) and two more in the top 25, every match counts.

And when a young and rising team is about to face a nationally ranked opponent, and when that young and rising team has lost two straight decisions, it becomes apparent some matches count more than others.

"This is probably the most nervous I've been since our national championship in Michigan," Coach Jim Moore said. "I knew this team would fight every second they're out there. It's no lie we've been struggling. I was absolutely petrified."

But Moore's fears were laid to rest when the No. 23 Wildcats stormed back from 1-2 down to up-end No. 19 Texas Tech 12-15, 15-7, 14-16, 15-6, 15-4 in Ahearn Field House.

The first three games were unbelievably balanced, despite the lopsided score in the second.

But it was at the end of the third game that Moore's fears, made worse by his team's fragile state after losing at Texas and Texas A&M last weekend, seemed destined to become reality.

> "This is probably the most nervous I've been since our national championship in Michigan."
> • JIM MOORE, VOLLEYBALL COACH

In a seesaw affair that saw seven ties, K-State finally made its move at 12-12, cutting off the attack angles and forcing the Red Raiders to hit wide. The Cats served for the game three times, and again at 14-14, but stalled before giving up the 14-16 decision.

"I actually thought the match was over then. And that shows their character," Moore said. "This could have been a season-ender. I thought if we lost this match, it would have crushed us emotionally."

Instead, K-State roared back to win the fourth and force a fifth and decisive game, a sudden-death affair in which there are no side-outs and every volley ends in a point.

And most of those points went to the Cats, who opened with a six-point run.

"We just came out, and we decided who was going to win," sophomore middle blocker Val Wieck said.

Although this might have been the best team effort of the season, Moore singled out sophomore swing hitter Kim Zschau, junior setter Devon Ryning and Wieck as key players in the victory.

Zschau led the team with 19 kills, Ryning recorded 65 assists (just five short of the school record), and Wieck committed just one error in hitting .480.

The Cats continued to roll Saturday night with a 3-1 win against the Baylor Bears.

Although the Cats swept Baylor in Waco earlier in the season, Moore said he was not disappointed in the Cats' taking four games to win because they had focused so much on the Tech match.

"It's impossible not to have some sort of emotional letdown," Moore said. "And I don't think we played real bad. They played really good. They played really, really well — much better than they did at Baylor."

Zschau again led the team with 21 kills in the 15-10, 15-10, 14-16, 15-6 victory. Both Zschau and Toie Young hit .381.

"I just kept trying to swing hard and go aggressive at the ball," Zschau said.

The wins move K-State to 20-5 (8-4 in the Big 12), with road trips to Kansas and

K-STATE VS. KU: THE ROOTS OF THE SUNFLOWER SHOWDOWN

Historical match-up brings back 94 years of memories

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

It began in 1902 and the coach was C.E. Dietz.

The stage was set for the first-ever Sunflower Showdown between the Kansas State Agricultural College and the University of Kansas.

The Aggies — as today's Wildcats were known at that time — were carrying a 2-5 record into that last game of the season in Lawrence.

They carried a 2-6 record out of Lawrence that day, after a 16-0 Jayhawk win.

In 1906, the Wildcats returned to Lawrence. Kansas was undefeated against the Aggies with a 4-0 series record.

Under the guidance of Coach Mike Ahearn, KSAC earned its first win against the Jayhawks, 6-4.

KSAC would not defeat KU again until a 6-0 victory at home in 1924 under Coach Charles Bachman, although the teams posted three tie games in the interim. Bachman is responsible for renaming the Aggies the Wildcats.

The two teams battled annually, alternating victories seemingly every year or two. Neither squad could put together a string of consecutive wins over the other — until 1945.

That year, the Jayhawks played host to the Wildcats and proceeded to shut them down, 27-0.

The zero points translate into the number of wins K-State gained against Kansas in the next seven seasons.

In 1953, with Coach Bill Meek at the helm, the Wildcats won back the Governor's Trophy in a 7-0 win in Lawrence.

The only touchdown scored in that game was a 74-yard touchdown by Wildcat halfback/defensive back Veryl Switzer.

The Cats won again in 1954 and in 1955.

The 46-0 win against Kansas in 1955 is K-State's largest margin of victory ever against the Hawks. The victory on Nov. 5 of that year looked like a normal blow-out. But it was not.

BATTLE in the HEARTLAND A MULTI-PART SERIES

While watching films of the Jayhawks, linebacker Andy Stewart noticed a trend. The right tackle was tipping the direction of each KU play. If the play was headed right, the right tackle's right foot would be back slightly.

If the play was headed straight into the line or to the left, the tackle's feet would be even.

The K-State coaching staff created a new defense designed to take advantage of the insight, leading to K-State's total dominance in the contest.

But in 1956, the Jayhawks would once again begin to dominate the series, winning 29 of the next 37 games, and holding the Wildcats to a tie in two others.

Perhaps the lowest point in K-State football was one of those ties, a 3-3 contest in 1966 when Coach Doug Weaver directed the Cats.

K-State led 3-0 most of the game, and it appeared the Cats would end a 10-year losing streak to the Hawks. But a K-State fumble in the final minute of the game led to a KU drive that resulted in a field goal.

As the story goes, KU's drive was stalled with eight seconds remaining in the game, and a call went out on the Jayhawk sideline for someone who thought they could kick a 38-yard field goal. Lineman Thermos Butler volunteered and, although he had not kicked since high school, kicked a floater that barely passed the crossbars to tie the game at 3-3.

In 1989, Coach Bill Snyder came to K-State and began what could arguably be called the biggest turnaround in collegiate football history. But it took him three years before he could win the Governor's Trophy, a 16-12 win at KSU Stadium in 1991 that saw the goalposts come down afterward.

But a 31-7 loss in Lawrence in 1992 prevented Snyder's Wildcats from putting together consecutive wins against the Jayhawks.

That changed in 1993 when a 10-9 win at KSU Stadium sparked a three-season winning streak against the Jayhawks, including a 41-7 blowout in Manhattan between the No. 14 Cats and the No. 6 Jayhawks last year.

Will Snyder's No. 13 Wildcats make it four in a row Saturday against the unranked Jayhawks? If they do, they will tie the longest K-State winning streak against the Hawks (1924-27).

KU leads the all-time series 61-27-5, and leads 34-11-2 in games at Lawrence.

12 teams compete in College Bowl

SPEED

▶ The Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee sponsored the Eighth Annual College Bowl Saturday with 12 teams competing for a trip to the regional College Bowl at the University of Missouri.

DAVE KATZER
staff reporter

The Eighth Annual College Bowl was promoted as the varsity sport for the mind, and 12 teams showed up Saturday morning at the K-State Student Union looking for some playing time.

The bowl was a double-elimination tournament in which two teams squared off against each other in a question-and-answer contest, sponsored by the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee. The rounds were 15 minutes long, and the team with the most points at the end of the round moved on in the competition.

The players used hand buzzers to decide which team buzzed in first and had the opportunity to answer the question. Ten-point toss-up questions were asked, followed by bonus questions that were more challenging and worth more points.

A trip to the regional College Bowl at the University of Missouri-Columbia was up for grabs.

This year's winning team consisted of Jeremiah Goertz, senior in computer science; Travis Cecil, sophomore in mechanical engineering; and John Bynum, junior in criminology. Jason Ross, senior in computer engineering, served as the team's captain.

Bynum said the team didn't really do anything special to prepare for this competition but might practice for the regional competition.

"We'll probably read Newsweek each week to keep up on current events and maybe play Trivial Pursuit," Bynum said.

Karen Schlabach, sophomore in psychology and co-chair of the event, said the bowl went well other than one problem.

"It did go kind of long. We had to run the contest on a 16-team bracket, since we had more than eight teams," Schlabach said.

The contest began at 8 a.m. with registration and did not conclude until 6:15 that evening.

There was only one set of hand buzzers, and the double-elimination tournament running on the expanded bracket resulted in byes for some teams. This was the reason for the length of the contest, Schlabach said.

Alex Stucky, sophomore in nuclear engineering, was a member of the Another Four Jerks and a Squirt team that was eliminated after the first two rounds. Stucky said he liked the contest and plans to compete next year.

"I did it last year, and I thought it was run even better this year," Stucky said.

Awareness of hunger

Donahue speaks at annual mayor's dinner

PHIL DONAHUE speaks to a crowd in the K-State Student Union Ballroom Sunday evening about hunger in America.

BRANDI HERTIG
staff writer

More than 100 people got a taste of what the world population's food distribution is like Sunday night during the annual Mayor's Holiday Hunger Experience Dinner.

With each reserved meal costing $15, the dinner was planned to raise money to help the Flint Hills Breadbasket buy food to help those who don't have enough to eat.

The meal's distribution was divided into three segments.

One-fifth of the diners received an expensive, full meal. One-fifth ate a middle-class dinner, while the remaining three-fifths ate a one-dish meal.

The proportions mirrored the number of people receiving those types of meals at the world dinner table.

It's to remind people everybody is not as fortunate and there are people who go hungry, said Terrie McCants, Manhattan resident and three-time attendant of the dinner.

The meal reminded people hunger is a year-long issue, not a seasonal one.

"Without our constant support, some Manhattan citizens would go hungry," Sydney Carlin, mayor of Manhattan, said.

The featured speaker was former talk-show host Phil Donahue. His speech, though laced with humor, delivered a strong message about hunger.

"It is interesting, isn't it, that we're all descendants from people who somehow survived during poverty and depression, and now we seem to have trouble feeding everybody during a time of prosperity."

Donahue's speech also touched upon issues of religion and helping those in need.

"You can't be a Christian or a Jew or a member of any major religion and turn the other way."

Several times during his speech, Donahue made congratulatory remarks to the state of Kansas as well as Manhattan for maintaining a means to help those in need.

"Here in Manhattan, Kansas, is one of the most well-managed breadbasket get-the-food-to-the-people organization as is found anywhere. This is not a holiday rush of do-goodism. It's a 12-month-a-year program," he said.

"You should not be surprised that this noble undertaking is happening in a place where the people really know about food and distribution and feeding folks."

Donahue is involved in a number of charities, including St. Jude's Children's Hospital. He also serves on the board of Gay Men's Health Crisis.

"I think it's more important what you do than what you say," he said.

Area businesses support K-State organizations

AMY LAGRONE
staff reporter

Local businesses are the backbone for many activities put on by K-State groups.

Greeks, clubs and organizations depend on donations and support from bars, restaurants and stores.

"We could not do it without them," Nathan Brown, senior in education and member of Tau Kappa Epsilon, said.

The TKEs use local businesses to help support their philanthropy, TKE Powder Puff. Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon is one of the many places that supports this event.

Rusty Wilson, owner of the saloon, said he thinks it is important to help campus groups.

"They are our customers," he said. "We are just returning the favor."

Last Chance helps out a variety of groups by donating money, T-shirts and coupons. Wilson said it doesn't do it just for public-relations reasons. Most of the groups' activities are for a good cause.

Pyramid Pizza helps groups in a different way.

Most of the time, it helps by donating pizza instead of money. Sometimes it sells its pizza at the location of an event and contributes the first $100 of profit to the organization.

Peter McKee, one of the managers of Pyramid Pizza, said the restaurant usually does this about four times a semester. It recently helped Gamma Phi Beta and Beta Theta Pi with Spiketacular, a volleyball tournament. It also helped sponsor the Boys & Girls Club of Manhattan.

"It is something we can to do to help the community," McKee said. "It also helps get our name out."

Jill Cosier, senior in psychology and philanthropy chairwoman for Gamma Phi, said they always appreciate help from businesses.

"I think it's important," she said. "It not only helps us out, but it is good publicity for them."

Gamma Phi has two options from which sponsors can choose. They can either pay $25 and have their name printed on a big sign with the volleyball elimination bracket information, or they can pay $100 to have their name on the back of a T-shirt and on the bracket. KMKF-FM 101.5 also did over-the-air promotions for all of the sponsors.

Pyramid Pizza was not the only sponsor for Spiketacular. Copy Co., Varney's Book Store, Wildcat Creek Sports Center and Ballard's Sporting Goods also helped in some way.

Kyla Besthorn, assistant manager of Subway, said it usually donates food also.

"It helps to let people know we're here, and we want to help," she said. "It's not just about the advertising."

MARCIA HELLWIG, graduate student in accounting and second floor resident assistant in Boyd Hall, walks down a hallway as she makes her rounds Saturday evening.

ON DUTY

Resident assistants work long hours helping residence-hall life run smoothly

STORY BY DAN LEWERENZ — PHOTOS BY CARY CONOVER

For most students, the end of the day means going home to have dinner, watch the local news and study in their room.

But for the resident assistants in K-State's residence halls, going home means going to work.

"I figure with staff meetings and everything, I average at least 15 hours a week — not counting duty," said Marcia Hellwig, graduate student in accounting and RA on the second floor of Boyd Hall. "And I'd say between the postings and individual counseling, I'd say one to two hours every day."

That time is spent doing or coordinating many of the day-to-day affairs of the residence hall — everything from expediting residents' maintenance problems to bringing in educational speakers to patrolling the hall every night to making sure the building is in order.

A TELEPHONE, pager and keys are some of Hellwig's necessities during her on-call shift.

Students see their RAs doing rounds at night, and they know when their RA has had to confront them about something. But Hellwig said that's just part of the job.

"What they may not realize is the passive programming like the John sheets and the postings they do see and the counseling that goes on behind the scenes," she said.

And even the part they do know, residents can often misunderstand. A common misperception, Hellwig said, is that when RAs are on duty, they have to stay awake that entire night.

"A lot of people think that when I'm working, I'm at the front desk," she said. "It just means I'm in my room or on the pager so they can get a hold of me."

Each RA is responsible for a particular floor or wing (except in Van Zile Hall, where one RA manages both resident floors), with a building team sharing large tasks like being on duty.

Like most jobs, being an RA has busier days.

"The beginning and the end of the year are definitely the worst," Hellwig said. "In the beginning people are homesick, and we do a lot of social programming. At the end, they're moving out, and there are a lot of things they need. And holidays and mid-terms are tough."

To help ease the burden of that early rush, the Department of Housing and Dining Services requires RAs to go through a training session at the end of the summer and take a class either before or during their first semester on the job.

"We go through a very intense week-and-a-half of training, whether you're new or returning," Hellwig said. "And that gives you training on counseling, helping skills, confrontation — most of the things you need."

That also helps the RAs get a feel for the individual needs their hall or floor might have. Although the job description is the same in every residence hall, and there are many similarities, different buildings have different needs.

"I would say it depends on the population, whether there are a lot of freshmen or a lot of returning, upper-class students. First-year students need a lot of attention in terms of resource issues — how to drop a class or when they can go to Lafene," Hellwig said.

"And I don't want to generalize, but whether it's an all-male hall or an all-female hall or a coed hall makes a difference. I don't know that it makes a difference in terms of the amount of time, but the female halls have different needs than the male halls, and the male halls will have different issues."

And through all this, RAs are also full-time students, with homework to do and mid-terms to study for like everyone else.

"I'm a resident in the sense that I live here, I sleep here, I eat here, and I want to get along with everybody else," Hellwig said.

"But I'm a staff person in that I have to follow all the rules. They're supposed to, too, but I have to be a sort of a role model."

TOP. INSTEAD OF taking the stairs, Hellwig rides the elevator from floor to floor in Van Zile Hall. Hellwig said it's sometimes tiresome making rounds through three halls.

ABOVE. HELLWIG TALKS with Colin Flynn, senior in secondary education, in her room during her on-call shift.

Student finds profundity in influential artists

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

In developing her artistic persona, Chien-Chien Stucky found profundity in two influential violinists – both of whom happen to be performing in Manhattan this week.

Midori, the classical violinist prodigy who performed Friday in McCain Auditorium, and Claude Williams, the jazz violinist who performed in McCain Thursday night, have richly influenced Stucky's professional and personal choices as a musician.

Stucky, sophomore in violin performance, has studied the classical violin since the age of 4.

So, you'll have to forgive her for being a bit surprised to see Claude Williams performing jazz with the violin in Thursday night's Purple Blues Festival.

"I think a lot of people don't know the violin could be used for jazz music," Stucky said.

"There's not a lot of music written for it, so I think that's why it's not as popular. It blew me away the first time I heard it."

Although Stucky has never played jazz violin, she is looking forward to working with the K-State Concert Jazz Ensemble next semester.

"Jazz has a totally different feel than classical music," Stucky said.

"Jazz is more challenging, because it forces you to listen to what you are doing."

"It's improv. You have to play by ear," Stucky said.

"With classical music the notes are given to you. You have a little room for interpretation," she said, "but, there are limits to what you can do."

Following Thursday night's concert, Stucky ventured backstage to meet with Williams, to listen to him play and talk about his music.

Williams said he thinks Stucky will be jamming on the stage next year.

The most Stucky could do was smile and laugh in the presence of the jazz master who had wowed the concert's audience with his jazz violin.

Stucky's new experiences with the jazz violin are worlds apart from her early foundation in classical violin, especially meeting internationally renowned violinist Midori.

Stucky met Midori several years ago at a performance in Wichita when she was still in junior high school.

"She's a prodigy, and it really fascinates me that she got to do what I'm struggling to do now at a very young age," Stucky said.

"When you watch her, you know she doesn't care about the show," she said.

"She's playing it for the love of the music."

Stucky's love of music is taking her on a classical music career path.

She plans to pursue a master's degree at a music conservatory after finishing her undergraduate work at K-State.

"Right now, I'm trying to get as good as I can with the violin, and then I'll see my options after that," Stucky said.

Violin prodigy Midori plays violin with power and strength despite size

ASHLEY CELLER
staff reporter

Midori, a violin prodigy, performed classical music with eloquence and passion. Every note, regardless of how high or low, was carried out with a flowing melody in McCain Auditorium Friday night.

The violin is not commonly thought of as an instrument that requires a lot of physical movement, and most violinists prefer to sit down while performing.

However, Midori stood throughout the whole performance and used her whole body to play the violin.

She stood with her feet about two feet apart, and she swayed to the rhythm of the music.

Despite her small stature, Midori played with strength and power. The violin is natural to her, because she has played it since she was 4 years old.

Midori was accompanied by a talented pianist, Robert McDonald. The two very different sounds of the instruments coming together made the music profound.

> "The violin is not commonly thought of as an instrument that requires a lot of physical movement, and most violinists prefer to sit down while performing."

They performed the works of Franz Schubert, George Enescu, Fritz Kreisler and Cesar Franck.

Their best selection was a piece called "The Preludium and Allegro in the style of Pugnani" by Kreisler. It included a wide variety of sounds and scales, yet it was a soft and relaxing piece.

At the end of the concert, the crowd gave a standing ovation, and Midori graciously announced the two would play one more song.

It was a short piece. It was light and uplifting, a perfect choice for the last song.

Midori plays on a higher level than most violinists. The difference lies in the transition from note to note, and the flow with which the transitions occur. Midori played the violin like an opera singer, every note sounding perfectly alive.

Fee changes approach

REVISING FEE PAYMENT

Chris Dean
staff reporter

As students prepare for next semester, administrators are working to make sure everyone is informed about the new mail-in fee payment system.

"We want to get the word out to students, because there will be several changes," said R. Douglas Ackley, assistant controller for cashiers and student loans.

The most significant change affecting students will be the deadlines. All bills will be mailed out the first week in December. Any payment not received by Jan. 8 will result in dropped classes.

"The statement of account must be in the cashier's office by 5 p.m. on Jan. 8 — not in a postal box somewhere," Ackley said.

One way to make the process easier for students, Associate Registrar Gunile DeVault said, is for them to make sure their correct local address is on file with the University. Not getting a statement will not be an excuse for missing the deadline.

"If they don't get their bill by Dec. 10, they need to call us," Ackley said. "It's the students' responsibility to pay this. They know it's coming."

In order to inform students of the deadlines and other changes, the cashier's office will hand out fliers during pre-enrollment. There will also be a cover letter included with the bill that explains the process. Students can also check page 5 of the course catalog for details.

Although Ackley said he didn't anticipate many people missing the deadline, the most important thing was that students understand the changes this year.

"We want to get the information out and make students aware that it's important," he said. "Regardless of what the bill says, you have to respond. If you owe money or are getting money back, you must respond."

One reason for the switch was convenience, Ackley said. Students can now pay their bills by mail, on the phone, in person at the cashier's office or in the drop box outside Anderson Hall.

"Students have indicated that they do want a mail-in system. With any system, you have people who like it or don't like it," Ackley said. "I think students will like the change."

The new system will also allow the University to drop classes of non-returning students earlier, opening up their spots for other students. All classes of non-paid students will be dropped the night of Jan. 8.

Arena registration is not completely gone, however. For any student needing financial aid or credit-balance refunds, or for new students and late enrollees, registration can be done in the K-State Student Union starting Jan. 10. Only about 800 to 1,200 students are expected to go through fee payment this way.

However, for the majority of the student body, the new system has its benefits.

"It gets us away from the arena registration," Ackley said. "Now students can work an extra day or two, ski an extra day or two or three."

Military police patrol Aggieville

Kelly Furnas
staff writer

Due to the large number of Fort Riley soldiers who frequent Aggieville, military police officers patrol with the Riley County Police Department on the weekends.

"Riley County police must patrol there regularly," said Deb Skidmore, public relations director for Fort Riley. "The military police are there just in case there is an incident involving a soldier."

Normally, there are two military police patrolling on the weekends.

During the weekend K-State played Nebraska, Fort Riley sent over five police officers.

They are unarmed, and they patrol on foot.

"So far we've had no problems whatsoever," Skidmore said. "It's just a goodwill mission with Riley County."

Capt. John Newsome, deputy provost marshal at Fort Riley, is one of the military police who patrols Aggieville. He said the patrolling has many benefits for him.

"I'm on patrol either on post or in Aggieville," he said, "so this is not additional work for the military police on the weekends. Actually, it is nice to do something different once in a while.

"We get to work and talk to the Riley County Police Department officers, so it is a good opportunity to trade enforcement techniques and information."

In addition to benefits for the soldiers patrolling, he said the community gains something by military police's presence.

"It is good to show the community that Fort Riley cares about what the soldiers are up to while off-duty," Newsome said. "We get a few strange looks now and then, but most people are used to seeing us."

Despite the community's curiosity, the soldiers understand the presence of military police.

"Most troops know why we are in Aggieville," Newsome said. "If they need help, we are there for them."

Newsome also said there had not been any serious problems with soldiers. He said the main reason they are there is to ensure problems don't arise.

"We want to first prevent any problems," he said. "If they do occur and troops are involved, it is great to be available right away.

"We don't enforce Kansas laws or Manhattan laws, but our presence seems to have had the desired effect."

Intersession offers diverse selection of classes

Debbie Wood
staff reporter

January intersession starts Dec. 30 and ends Jan. 15. Now is the time to sign up for classes.

Forty to 50 classes are offered for up to three hours of credit. Between 600 and 1,000 students enroll for intersession each year.

"It gives students a chance to take fun courses that usually aren't offered, and it gives them chances to take courses that meet degree requirements," Deb Taylor, intersession coordinator, said.

The regular K-State faculty and sometimes graduate teaching assistants teach the classes in a more personal and smaller setting. Students still take tests and complete projects just as in a full-semester course.

"Courses have the same level of information as it would be in a regular semester," Taylor said.

Some classes are taking trips to Las Vegas and England.

"This gives more options for students who want to stay in the studying mode, and they get to meet different students and have fun," Taylor said.

Taylor encourages students who think they might be interested in enrolling in an intersession class to do so at pre-enrollment, because the popular classes fill up quickly.

A student can also enroll in an intersession class during enrollment time this month. Look for the Division of Continuing Education representative in Willard Hall or go to the office in College Court Building 131.

Students need to pay for intersession courses when they enroll in them. If the student's spring loans have not come in, the Division of Continuing Education will give students emergency loans.

Another way DCE has helped students enroll for intersession is by letting them use credit cards to pay for the classes.

"Hopefully we've provided two ways to help, so we can get you enrolled," Taylor said.

Taylor encourages students to enroll in intersession for the credit as well as the opportunity.

"Any student who hasn't been here over the holidays should experience it at least once. It's quiet and an intimate place to be," Taylor said.

KENT GLASSCOCK
STATE REPRESENTATIVE
Leadership that Works

Kent worked hard with Republicans & Democrats to:	As a result, those of us in the 62nd District received:
Cut taxes and manage the budget.	$1.3 billion in tax cuts and a state budget that actually went down!
Provide needed support for K-State and Public Education.	Salary increases plus a share of tuition increases at K-State along with $60 million for Farrell Library and classroom construction. $113 per pupil increase for public schools.
Build a stronger economy and promote job growth.	$500 million back in the Kansas economy through a moratorium on unemployment taxes and enhanced tax credits for job creation.
Reform state government.	Repeal of hundreds of unneeded rules and regulations, welfare reform to keep assistance payments from being spent on drugs, a tough new Juvenile Justice Authority, and a 5 percent reduction in the state workforce while protecting K-State and education employees.

Kent Glasscock provides leadership we can count on in Topeka. He deserves our vote on November 5 and we deserve his strong leadership for our district and our state.

Library to open 24-hour study area during summer

LILLIAN BEEBE
staff reporter

Students looking for a quiet place to study and have a soda on campus at 2 a.m. will have that luxury next year.

Farrell Library is opening a 24-hour study area.

The study area will tentatively open this summer during intercession, Bob Kreger, Farrell building manager, said. Intercession will be used as a shakedown period to work out the bugs in preparing for increased student use.

"The study area is located on the first floor on the east side of the building, which is just off Mid Campus Drive," Kreger said. "It's in what we call the east tower."

The study area can accommodate 202 people and is about 6,500 square feet in area, excluding the bathrooms.

Kreger said students can enter the area through the archway on the South side of the building, facing Denison Hall. This will bring them in on the first floor.

Patrons can also use the main entrance, which will bring them in on the second floor, he said. There they have the option of taking the stairs or the elevator.

"With a 24-hour open space, there are so many things that can happen," Kreger said. "I was real concerned for the security of the students overnight."

Those concerns will be dealt with by hiring a full-time security guard. Campus police will provide a person to be in the study area and patrol the library, Kreger said.

The position becomes available Jan. 1 and is part of the K-State Police, said Capt. Robert Mellgren of the campus police.

"Their purpose is to maintain the security of the area," Mellgren said.

Kreger said the area will have vending machines and a microwave provided by Vending Services.

"We are negotiating with the Union for a coffee cart during the day that would sell coffee and sandwiches," Brice Hobrock, dean of student libraries, said.

> "If the library is only open until 11 p.m., it's hard to get studying done. So I think it's a great idea."
> • MELISSA FILIPPI
> SENIOR IN ANTHROPOLOGY AND BIOLOGY

Computer access in the study area is tentative at this time, said Karen Cole, associate dean of student libraries.

"It is our intent, not only as a library but as a university, to provide computers in the 24-hour study area," Cole said.

The concept of having a 24-hour study section in Farrell evolved through meetings with Student Senate during the past 10 years, Hobrock said.

Two suggestions that kept reappearing were for extended library hours for nights and weekends and for allowing food and drink, he said.

The two concepts came together during the planning stages of the library expansion in 1992, Hobrock said.

"Students should have a say-so," Hobrock said. "They should get what they want."

Student fees are contributing $5 million to the expansion project, Hobrock said.

"We needed to provide someplace that was open all the time to meet student needs," he said.

Many students said they agree.

"I think that would be great," said Angie Cure, sophomore in pre-health professions. "Students need a quiet place to get away and study. Sometimes I have to find an empty room on campus to study in."

Fitting time to study at the library into their schedules is tough for many students.

"If the library is only open until 11 p.m., it's hard to get studying done," said Melissa Filippi, senior in anthropology and biology. "So I think it's a great idea."

Publication Practice MC 360

If you are interested in working in newspaper ad design/production you can earn one hour of journalism credit during spring semester 1997. Just attend class one day a week from 8:30-11:30 a.m. The instructor's permission is required. No prerequisites required.

If you are a graphic design major and can work at least 12 hours per week, you can earn three hours of credit in graphic design. Prerequisites must be met and instructor's permission are required.

The experience you earn in the spring could qualify you to apply for a paid, part-time position in the summer and/or fall.

Come to 113 Kedzie from 8 a.m.-3 p.m. for more information and syllabus.

Think this election is strange? Try these

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Space aliens have not kidnapped President Clinton. Bob Dole has not offered to pose nude in Playgirl. Ross Perot is not transsexual.

This election season has been perfectly normal — at the top of the ballot. Some might even call it dull.

But lurking elsewhere on the ticket, and around the country, are unusual, interesting or downright weird races, contests that put the camp back in campaign and the crass in democracy.

Consider the campaign for Volusia County Council in New Smyrna Beach, Fla. Nothing unusual here, except that incumbent Lynne Plaskett said she was roused from her bed one night by space aliens, who levitated her and cured her of cancer.

Her opponent said he was glad she was cured.

Or the race for Maryland's 4th Congressional District, where Republican John Kimble, running in heavily Democratic territory, said he'd pose nude for Playgirl if radio shockmeister Howard Stern would help him raise $1 million. The response was uncharacteristic silence from Stern.

Or Southern California's 27th Congressional District, where Libertarian Elizabeth Michael is trying the scattershot approach to identity politics. She identifies herself as a transsexual and lesbian of black, white and American Indian ancestry, and a practicing Jew who accepts Jesus as the Messiah. Her heroes include Margaret Thatcher and Gen. Robert E. Lee.

Elsewhere on the campaign trail:

• THE SMELL-O-RAMA CAMPAIGN: In Alabama, a 30-second TV spot for state Supreme Court incumbent Kenneth Ingram makes a judicious, reasoned argument against his opponent. It opens with an image of a skunk and a narrator intoning, "Some things you can smell a mile away."

• BUT THE PERSONAL TOUCH MEANS SO MUCH MORE: Mickey Conroy, a candidate for board of supervisors in Orange County, Calif., made an obscene hand gesture when he spotted his GOP runoff opponent at a rally.

• NO-JACK CITY: In the 9th Congressional District of Texas, G. Jack Brooks dropped out of the race after a judge refused to allow him to appear on the ballot under that name. Actually, G. Jack is no Jack at all. He is Gary A. Brooks and no relation to the district's former 21-term congressman ... drum roll, please ... the Hon. Jack Brooks.

• THE NAME GAME: Famous names on Tuesday's ballot include Harry Connick Sr., father of Jr., running for re-election as district attorney in New Orleans; and Steve Keillor, brother of Garrison "Prairie Home Companion" Keillor, running for the Minnesota state Senate.

• THE NAME GAME TWO: The most widely recognized name may be that of stock-car king Richard Petty, who is running — perhaps a little too fast — for secretary of state in North Carolina. Petty was charged with reckless driving and hit-and-run after he allegedly bumped a car from behind on Interstate 85 as he drove home from the Charlotte Motor Speedway.

results in the Senate races had a margin of error of plus or minus three percentage points and in the House races of five to six points.

Kansas poll results in the Brownback-Docking race and the 3rd District congressional race differed significantly from those in the Mason-Dixon poll published Saturday by the Kansas City Star and Lawrence Journal-World.

Mason-Dixon had Brownback ahead of Docking, 46-45, in a sample of 812 registered voters with a margin of error of 3.5 points, and had Hancock leading Snowbarger, 47-40, in a sample of 432 registered voters with a margin of error of five points.

Mason-Dixon also had Roberts ahead of Thompson 54-37 in its statewide sample.

The Kansas poll also gave Brownback an apparent lead, 49-44, in the 3rd District of suburban Kansas City, while Mason-Dixon had it 49-42 for Docking in that district.

Phil Lange, Central Research's pollster, said the difference could be that the Kansas poll sampled registered voters who said they intended to vote and Mason-Dixon sampled registered voters who may or may not vote.

Frieden wiped out a 20-point deficit to Ryun since the September Kansas poll, when he trailed 42-22.

"Frieden has been coming up for the last three months," Lange said. "It may be the result of his television campaign, and he's obviously hit the right buttons with voters."

POLLS

Deviating away from accuracy through asking leading questions is commonly referred to as push-polling, Richter said. Push-polling can be used to generate popularity which in return not only gains more votes, but can raise fundraising as well, Richter said.

"Through manipulating and formulating the questions in a particular way, it's very easy to get the exact responses you want," Johnson said.

Students seem to think that the credibility of a polling depends largely on the source.

"I generally believe a poll if I've read it in a credible magazine such as Newsweek or Time," said Jayme Gawith, sophomore in nutrition and exercise science.

Courtney Ukens, senior in elementary education, said, "With all the agenda setting that goes on in politics it can be hard to tell, but if I see it in a reliable source, I'll believe to an extent."

Richter said he believes that maybe the public should be a bit more leery about what is presented to them regarding political polls.

"Although most public opinion polls we see are as accurate as they can be, people tend to treat the numbers more realistically than they probably should," Richter said. "They need to remember it's just a fuzzy snapshot."

ADS

The ads started out a lot better but now it's getting down to the last minute and they are very negative, she said. Crunch time for the candidates means emphasizing what the other candidate did wrong.

"Instead of saying, 'This is what I did that was good,' they say, 'This is what the other candidate did that was bad,'" Keating said.

Keating said she's been involved in politics all her life because of her family. She wants to do campaign fieldwork after graduation so she really watches the candidates — their campaigns and ads — closely.

"I don't watch that much TV but it's pretty hard to miss them," Keating said.

Angie Lilly, a junior in social work, said she thinks political ads try to get the politicians message across as best they can.

"They have not changed my vote. I watch them but don't really think what they say affects my opinion," she said.

Clinton wins grade-school mock election

MISSY SNODGRASS
staff reporter

This year, some area voters do not need to meet the 18 -years-of-age voting requirement.

Students at Lee Elementary School cast their votes for the future president of the United States on Monday.

The school coordinated many activities to go along with the election. Each grade was responsible for one aspect of the voting day.

"We tried to include all the grade levels so everyone could get a feel for it," Jane Eberle, sixth-grade teacher at Lee Elementary, said.

Eberle said many teachers referred to curriculum guides to see what was appropriate for each grade level to learn about the election. They tried to include all curriculums in the exercise. Each class will be talking about the election, but teachers will be specific about issues in the upper grades and general in the lower grades.

The kindergarten class was in charge of designing "I Voted" stickers. First-graders made posters to be hung around the school to create awareness. The second-grade class designed boxes for ballots to be placed in after students voted. Also, second- and third-grade classes made banners that were displayed around the school.

The fourth-grade class polled its class and the fifth- and sixth-grade classes for a nationwide survey. The results will be announced on CNN.

The fifth- and sixth-grade classes were responsible for explaining the election procedures to all the students and faculty members voting. The students worked in shifts throughout the day.

"I think the older grades are more into it, because they understand it better," Alice Hudson, sixth-grade student, said.

The school was divided into three districts. The districts were used to designate areas of the school for registration and voting purposes.

Every student registered to vote at the end of October. Eberle said it was a part of the electoral process students should know about.

Before the students were allowed into the voting booths, they had to present their registration cards.

The ballots included pictures of President Clinton, Bob Dole and Ross Perot with a box next to each picture for students to make their choice.

Before the election, some teachers prepared their classes by studying the issues and watching the debates.

"I never really understood what the debates really

FINAL WORDS.

In the final day of pre-election campaigning, BOB DOLE warned of increasing PRESIDENT CLINTON ethical questions and said, "America deserves better."

As Americans prepared to cast ballots in the last presidential race of the 1900s, Clinton had the upper hand against Dole and ROSS PEROT in the polls.

REPUBLICANS were favored to keep their House and Senate majorities.

In regard to an ailing DOLE CAMPAIGN, Florida Republican Chairman Tom Slade said, "It truly would be a political miracle if Dole can pull this out."

However, House Speaker NEWT GINGRICH voiced confidence about not having to hand his gavel over to Democrats come January. "I'm currently planning on what we'll do next year in the majority," he said.

On ELECTION DAY, Kansas students in grades K-12 throughout 36 communities will participate in a national mock election.

Father of talk shows travels to Manhattan

STORY BY PORTIA SISCO • PHOTOS BY CARY CONOVER

Phil Donahue spoke about his talk show, politics and society in America to an audience of journalism students Monday morning in K-State Student Union Forum Hall.

Sydney Carlin, mayor of Manhattan, invited Donahue to visit Manhattan.

"I've been friends with Donahue for 20 years," Carlin said.

Carlin's husband attended Notre Dame with Donahue, where they became friends.

DONAHUE SPEAKS to students Monday morning in K-State Student Union Forum Hall. In his speech to journalism students, Donahue talked about his talk show, politics and the status of society in America.

Donahue's first job in news was as a TV reporter in Michigan.

"I was 21 years old, and I looked 14, and I'd ask the mayor a question, and he would stop and talk to me. I began to realize how powerful this thing called media is," Donahue said.

Before his talk show, Donahue said he covered plane crashes, strikes and murders.

"I covered my first murder in 1965," Donahue said.

It was shortly afterward that Donahue went on the air with the first talk show ever.

"A talk show happened to me in 1967. After 6,000 shows and 29 years, we finally folded our tent earlier this year," Donahue said. "Issues made us fly. Issues are what people will watch. Success kept the censors away."

What people call weird news has changed over the years, Donahue said.

"What's weird? We did a show in 1967 on interracial marriages. People said that was weird," he said. "In 1970, we had Jane Fonda on the show speaking against the war. People said that was weird. We have to be careful about what we call weird."

> WHAT'S WEIRD?
> We did a show in 1967 on interracial marriages. People said that was weird. In 1970, we had Jane Fonda on the show speaking against the war. People said that was weird. We have to be careful about what we call weird.

The audience for talk shows has changed over the years.

"People are more interested in personal issues. We brought male strippers to television. My biggest worry was where were we going to put the microphone," Donahue said.

Donahue's favorite guest was Marlo Thomas.

"I married her," Donahue said.

Donahue said there are no extreme left-wing liberals in politics.

"I think the conservatives have bastardized the word liberal," Donahue said. "They've paralyzed half of the speaking population. All of us have been deprived because of it."

Medicare, Medicaid and upholding the Constitution were all liberal political moves, Donahue said.

"Washington only seems to want to pay for things that go boom," Donahue said.

Donahue has interviewed presidential candidates on his show.

"The system is starting to fail. We need campaign reform and more respect of third-party candidates," Donahue said.

Talk shows are a reflection of society, Donahue said.

"If you want these shows, you have to change the rules," Donahue said. "That's why Time and Newsweek look like People magazine."

The editors know Kevin Costner sells. What good is it to write if people aren't reading, Donahue said.

Donahue also addressed the Jenny Jones trial.

"This is a homophobic murder. This isn't about Jenny Jones. This is about homophobia," Donahue said.

Some omission and manipulation of information was also involved, Donahue said.

"There is a virulent strain of ignorance and fear. We are responsible as Americans to stop the homophobia. This is just another episode in this country's history of homophobia," Donahue said. "I think that justice will be done."

Marketing and commercialization shouldn't have a role in news, Donahue said.

"We are just an airplane ride away from Argentina, where some people end up in shallow graves for printing what the big guy didn't want to hear," Donahue said. "We have the most powerful free nation on earth. We get a homogenized version of the truth.

"I, for example, think we should televise an execution," Donahue said. "Who will fight for the right to televise an execution?"

There are other credible talk show hosts, Donahue said, who

Home HIV test available in area stores; results can be obtained within a week

DEBBIE WOOD
staff reporter

A home HIV test is an alternative to getting an HIV test by a health-care provider. A kit called Confide can be found in the Manhattan area.

OMJ Pharmaceuticals Inc. manufactures Confide. This test has passed rigorous standards by the Food and Drug Administration in order to be sold over the counter.

The test is available in local stores, but it is not out on the shelves. There is a slip of paper that is available near the pharmacy counter with the word Confide on it. A bar code is on the back for the pharmacist to scan.

"All you have to do if you don't want to ask for it is tear off the slip of paper and hand it to the pharmacist just like you would a prescription and they will bag it and let you pay for it there confidentially," said Reita Currie, registered nurse at Lafene Health Center.

The kit comes complete with two lancets to prick the finger, an adhesive bandage, antiseptic, a test card to put the dabs of blood on and a carton to mail the test card. Directions with pictures on how to conduct the test are included.

There is a series of numbers on the test card that must be torn off before it is mailed. This is the identification number and the only way the lab can identify a person calling in for results.

The results can be obtained within a week of the mailing date.

"They state that if the test is positive, it is more than 99 percent certain that it is positive, and you should see your doctor," Currie said.

Currie said this is not the best way to get tested for HIV and a person should confirm the results with a health-care provider.

"I still personally feel the best way is to come in and talk with a counselor to discuss your reasons for being tested," Currie said.

Currie also said she feels concern for the person seeking testing if the results are positive and the person has no one to talk to.

"I have reservations about someone finding out test results over the phone, alone and not knowing what they might do," Currie said.

If the test is negative when they call the lab a recording tells them the results, but because the test results are black and white and AIDS is such a devastating disease, it is important for the person to have human contact and comfort if the results are positive.

Currie said even if the test results come back negative, the person is not out of danger.

"I've heard too many personal accounts of speakers going around the country who only had one test and said that was enough. Often times you do need a backup test to be done," Currie said.

There are a couple of brands of these tests on the market, but Currie said Confide was the only one Lafene could find in this area.

There are stores in Manhattan that sell the test including Wal-Mart for $35.98, Dillons for $39.99 and Barry's Drug Center for $39.80.

Lafene does not sell the test, but a person could get a blood test for HIV, which would cost $30.

Student publications turn a profit; Royal Purple planning on CD-ROM

CHAD HELIN
staff reporter

Increases in price have helped both the Collegian and the Royal Purple turn profits this semester, staff representatives reported Monday at the Board of Student Publications meeting.

"Our sales are actually down a little," Ashley Schmidt, Royal Purple editor, said. "But the increase in price helped get our dollars up."

This year, the Royal Purple is looking into a CD-ROM version of the book to supplement the hard copy.

The purpose of the CD-ROM is to generate excitement and to cover groups in a more in-depth manner, Linda Puntney, Royal Purple adviser, said.

The CD-ROM will come with the yearbook and will not be an additional expense.

"Our intent is not to charge," Puntney said.

Another new feature from the Royal Purple is a preview magazine that will appear in the Collegian. It will give students a glimpse of what to expect in the new book.

Patrick Carney, chairman of the board, is working on getting a negative check-off box on student registration forms, with Don Foster from the registrar's office.

The box, which will be on 1998-99 registration forms, will automatically charge students for a yearbook if it's not checked off. Carney is working on getting the box on the registration forms for the 1997-98 school year, he said.

"We want to keep it clean and simple the first time it's used," Puntney said. "We don't want to confuse any students."

The Collegian's advertising inches are up from last fall, Stacy Foulk, advertising manager, reported to the board.

By hiring extra advertising representatives, the staff has been able to reach more businesses in Manhattan, she said.

"The more students we have, the less they each have to do," Foulk said. "We're all extremely busy and extra people help out a lot."

Gameday Manhattan, a Saturday version of the Collegian, is new this year and is a big reason advertising inches are up, she said.

24 HOURS IN REVIEW

NATION WORLD

• ZAIRIAN REBELS DECLARE UNILATERAL CEASE-FIRE. With the international community threatening to intervene, Zairian Tutsi rebels declared a cease-fire Monday in eastern Zaire and agreed to allow aid agencies to try to get Hutu refugees home to Burundi and Rwanda. Fighting between Tutsi-led rebels and Zairian troops has forced thousands of refugees to flee their U.N. camps, venturing deeper into Zaire and farther from the reach of aid workers. Diplomats and aid groups met Monday in two African capitals to discuss what to do next.

• FAMILY MASSACRED IN EL SALVADOR. A family of eight — including five children — has been hacked to death with machetes, the second family to be slaughtered in the rural area west of San Salvador in about a week. The victims, who ranged in age from 67 to 2, were killed in San Miguelito, about 40 miles west of the capital, police representatives said Monday. It was not immediately known when the killings took place, and there were no immediate suspects.

• YELTSIN TO UNDERGO HEART SURGERY. Boris Yeltsin is fit enough for his bypass surgery, and the long-awaited operation will take place in the next few days, the Kremlin announced Monday. The brief statement was issued after Yeltsin's medical team met with American heart surgery pioneer Dr. Michael DeBakey, who is a consultant on the operation. The exact date is not known.

• BRITISH TELECOM TO BUY MCI. Phone rates are sure to cheapen. The $20.8 billion marriage of MCI and British Telecom will create a marketing free-for-all, goading global rivals to slash prices to get customers. In joint announcements Sunday, British Telecommunications PLC and MCI Communications Corp. agreed to create a "communications powerhouse," with annual revenue of $42 billion and 43 million business and residential customers in 72 countries. They will call the merged business Concert, named after a joint venture begun three years ago when British Telecom bought a stake in MCI.

• TRAWLERS BEGIN DIGGING UP OCEAN FLOOR. Fishing trawlers began scraping and scooping up the ocean floor Monday in search of parts of downed TWA Flight 800. Investigators say the dredging operation is their last best chance to find crucial missing pieces of the jumbo jet that could tell them what caused the jetliner to explode nearly four months ago. The Paris-bound plane exploded minutes after takeoff from New York's Kennedy Airport on July 17, killing all 230 people on board. Two trawlers, usually used to fish for scallops and clams, arrived Monday and began dredging the ocean floor at the crash site in the Atlantic Ocean, about 10 miles off Long Island.

• ROMANIAN ELECTION. In a major political shift, Romania's opposition swept into power in parliament and President Ion Iliescu was forced into a runoff, according to preliminary election results Monday.

After Sunday's vote, Iliescu, a former communist, was running just ahead of Emil Constantinescu of the center-right Democratic Convention, ensuring that there will be a presidential runoff Nov. 17. The results reflected voter anger over rampant corruption and low living standards in one of eastern Europe's poorest countries after nearly seven years of rule by Iliescu and his allies. With more than half the returns tallied, Iliescu's support plummeted to 33 percent from the 48 percent he received in 1992's first-round elections.

• SETTLER POPULATION TO CHANGE IN WEST BANK. Already hobbled by violence and rancor, Israeli-Palestinian peace efforts suffered another blow Monday as Israeli officials detailed plans to nearly double the number of Jewish settlers in the West Bank. Settlement czar Ariel Sharon unveiled the plan during a weekend tour of the territory, and his spokesman, Raanan Gissin, elaborated on Monday. The plan calls for building two new cities in the West Bank that will accommodate 100,000 more Jewish settlers.

CAMPUS

• CARRUTH, WARD EARN BIG 12 HONORS. Colorado wide receiver Rae Carruth and Kansas linebacker Ronnie Ward were the Big 12 Conference players of the week. Carruth produced the highest receiving total in Big 12 single-game history with a school record-tying 222 yards on seven receptions with a pair of touchdowns in the Buffaloes' 41-13 win at Missouri. Ward, also a senior, registered 16 tackles, had one quarterback sack and blocked a field goal that was decisive in the Jayhawks' 34-31 victory at Iowa State.

• NBA PLAYER ALVIN ROBERTSON JAILED. Former NBA All-Star Alvin Robertson was ordered Monday to serve six months in jail for a burglary conviction. Robertson was convicted in October of burglarizing the apartment of ex-girlfriend Sharon Raeford. Jurors decided he should be placed on 10 years' probation and fined $10,000.

• JETER WINS AL ROOKIE AWARD OF THE YEAR. Derek Jeter, who began the season as the second-most publicized shortstop in New York and blossomed into one of baseball's best young players, unanimously won the AL Rookie of the Year award Monday. Jeter batted .314 with 10 home runs and 78 RBI, then helped the Yankees win the World Series just four months after his 22nd birthday.

K-State Student Union caterers reveal careful planning to meals

K-STATE STUDENT UNION caterers prepare a banquet-style meal. Behind the scenes, caterers prepare meals many hours before the first guests arrive.

Story by Matt Basler

Catered events appear to be well-run shows to those who eat at them. However, there are not too many people who know how much planning and preparation actually go into catering an event.

Tracy DeTiege, junior in speech pathology, is a K-State Student Union caterer who has been catering for years.

Union caterers have a variety of duties they must complete before serving guests.

A typical banquet for DeTiege starts well before guests arrive.

After she clocks in, she and the other caterers turn the warmers on to keep the plates and food warm before serving. The food and plates are kept in hot carts to keep them warm while caterers complete their other duties.

After the hot carts are set up, DeTiege focuses her attention on getting the banquet room set up. This includes getting the tables and chairs set up for the number of guests who will be dining.

Once tables and chairs are arranged, DeTiege and the other caterers supply each table with the right amount of pitchers, glasses, silverware and napkins. Each table also has a breadbasket that is set out before the rest of the food.

DeTiege said caterers also put salads, creamers and butter dishes on the tables before the main course is brought out.

ODD JOBS
PART OF A CONTINUING SERIES

When DeTiege is done preparing the tables and is waiting for the guests to arrive, she gets dressed.

All caterers must wear the same uniform — black pants and a white, long-sleeved shirt.

Once DeTiege has changed, she starts serving food.

Eating at a catered event has all the advantages of eating out.

"It's basically restaurant style. We pick up plates and serve water," DeTiege said.

However, there is one big difference between DeTiege and a server at a restaurant. DeTiege gets no tips.

"We're kind of waitresses, but we're not," DeTiege said.

DeTiege said the average number of people at a banquet ranges from 150 to 200. However, DeTiege remembers Family Weekend, when the amount of people was twice as large as a normal catered event.

She said it was tough because she had to work 12 hours straight.

"Sometimes people can't work, so the same people have to work over and over again," she said.

DeTiege said there is a high turnover rate among caterers.

"All caterers are students, and management has to work around our schedules," she said.

Also, because many of the caterers are students, many graduate and move on.

Because the catering is run by Professional Food Service Management, Union caterers serve food directly from the Union's kitchen.

"The people that cook the food for the banquets are the same people that cook for the cafeteria," DeTiege said.

DeTiege said the working environment is fun as a Union caterer.

"You're working around other people, and you make a lot of friends. We go out a lot," DeTiege said.

Also, DeTiege said another good thing about working for Union catering is that she can make her own work schedule.

"We have a choice of where and what events we want to work at," she said.

DeTiege said that because her job is on campus, she can go to work between classes.

This saves her a lot of time she would lose if she worked somewhere else.

Although the Union caterers have two managers who oversee them, DeTiege said there are work leaders who are responsible for getting everything set up and making sure everyone is doing their part.

"The work leaders delegate the authority," DeTiege said.

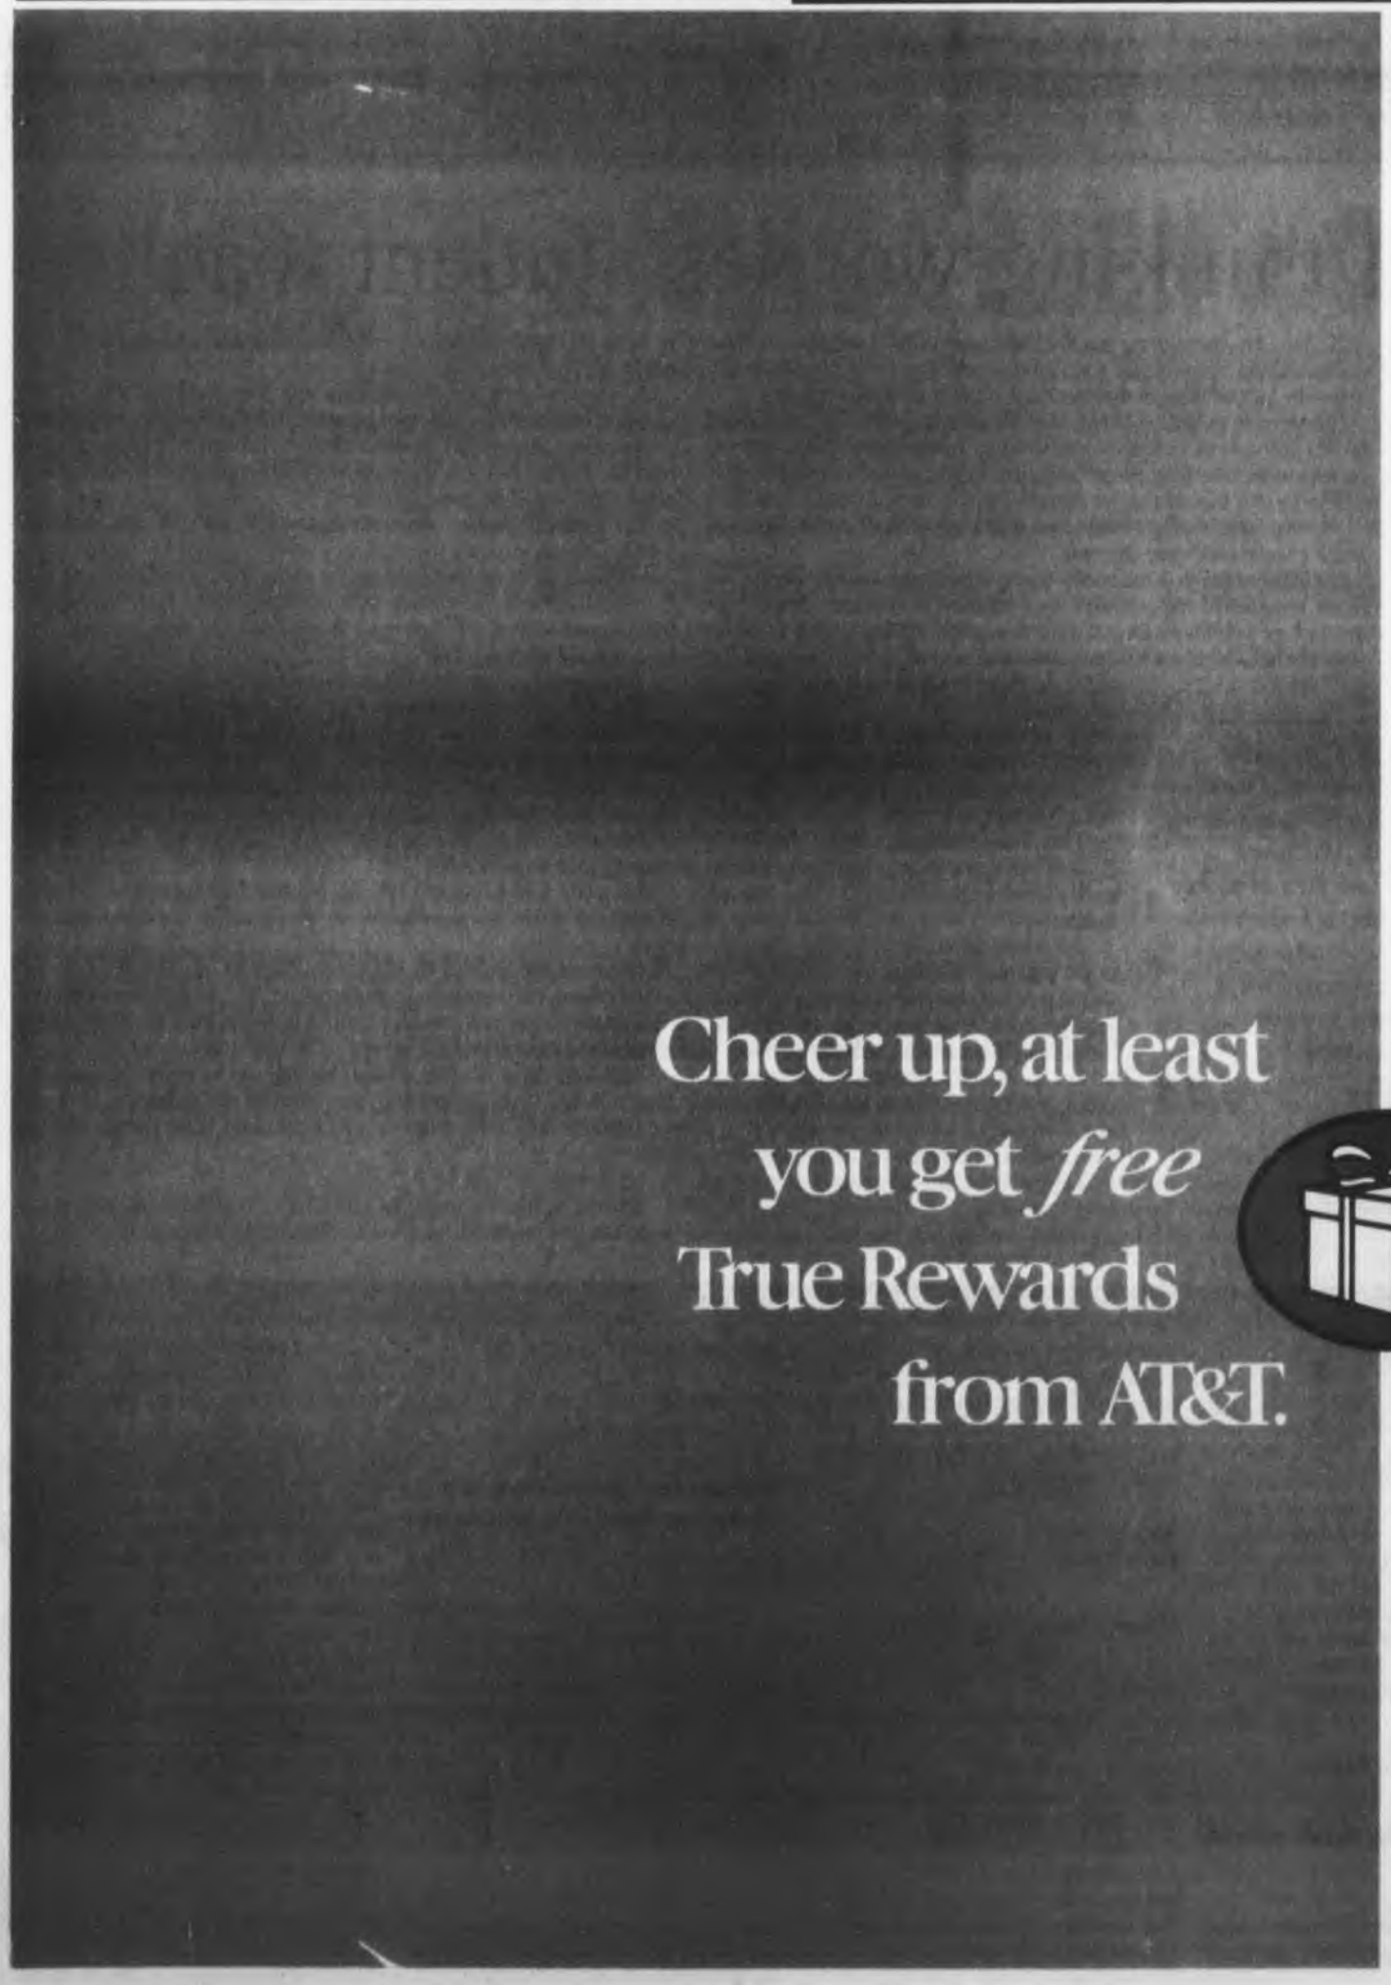
DeTiege said there are definitely times when she gets frustrated.

She said that sometimes she does not get food fast enough or fill glasses on time, and people get irritated.

She said these people do not understand she has several other tables to look out after.

"People tend to be snobby and rude because there are so many people and so little servers," she said.

However, there are some guests who understand her dilemma.



"Some see us running around and understand. These people say 'I understand you're busy, but when you get a chance, could you fill my glass?'" DeTiege said.

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

Get off your behind; it's time for you to vote

Today is the day we've been priming you for all semester.

Today is the day that could change the political future of this country.

Today is the day that you have the power to make a difference.

WHY WE CARE

You've done all the work. You've prepared to your fullest. You've studdied. Today is the day for you to go out and make your vote count.

Wow! We bet when you got out of bed and started the process of picking out matching socks, you had no idea that today would be so important.

Well, it is.

You've registered. You've studied the candidates. You've studied the issues. And now it's your turn to do something.

Vote.

Is that simple enough for you?

Put down the damn paper, get to the polls and cast your vote.

The decision you make today — and that includes the decision of whether you choose to vote today — will affect the future of Manhattan, Kansas, the United States and probably the entire world.

You are doing your part in electing tomorrow's leaders.

This is a hefty responsibility that has been placed on your shoulders by the writers of our constitution.

It is a responsibility placed on all our shoulders.

Don't ignore it. Do something about it.

It's your vote, and it's your job to use it.

Vote.

It's real power.

But wait — there's more. Not only do you get to have a say in the future of this nation.

Not only do you get to exercise your constitutional rights.

Oh, no. Don't think that the fun stops there.

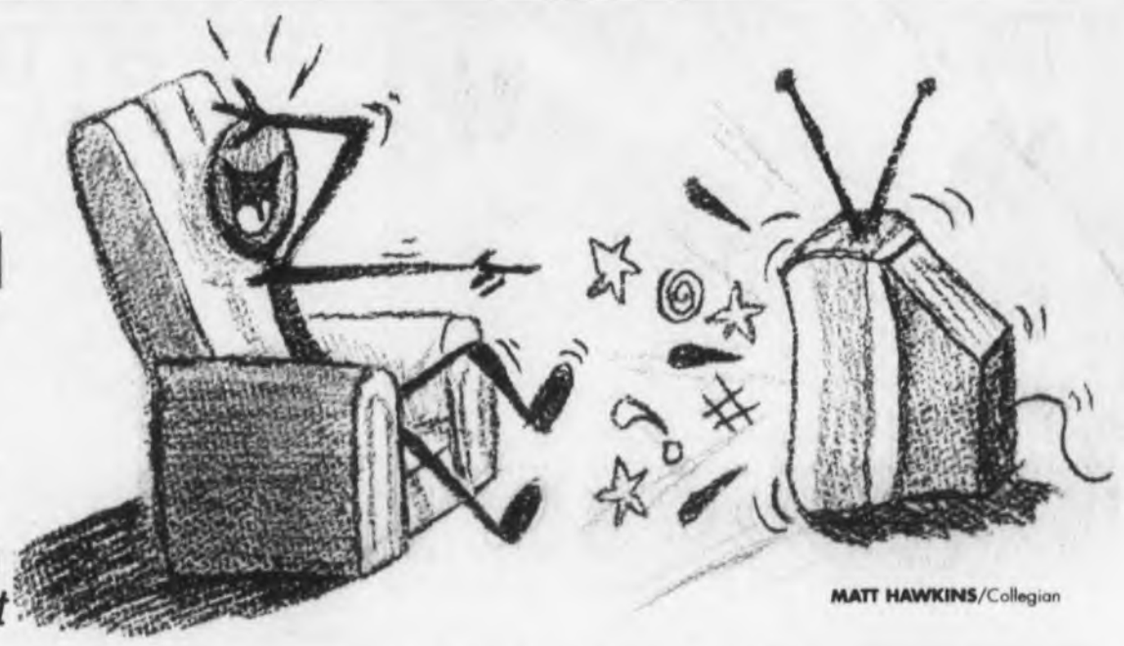
When you cast your vote into the history of this nation, you will get a free sticker that says "I voted."

Now if that doesn't do it for you, nothing will.

Seriously, folks. Get out there and perform your civic duty.

If you need help, you can always take one last quick peek at the Collegian Voters' Guide.

Get out there.



Make your decisions known. Let our future leaders hear your voice.

Vote.

In Our Opinion, an editorial discussed and chosen by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board. For information on who is an editorial board member or how you can become a member, contact Sera Tank at (karolyi@ksu.edu).

Comedy and condescension in politics

Public-servant aspirants think we're dumb; vote to prove we're not

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

It's almost over now. We laughed. We cried. But mostly laughed.

And now, we go to the voting booth. This very moment, voters across the nation are casting their ballots and, I would imagine, breathing sighs of relief. After all, those of us who have already performed the simplest of civic duties need not be subject to political campaigns for a little while.

At least, relief is what I experienced about a week ago when I mailed my completed absentee ballot back to Sherman County. There was no more I could do for the time being. After the better part of a year filled with campaigns and more campaigns, I had only to sit back and wait for the rest of the country.

I suppose that made me something like the Eastern Time Zone election day. My polls were officially closed, but there would be no final word from California for another three hours.

Nothing's over until it's over. In the interim, I found no candidates resting on their laurels or waving white flags. If anything, it seemed that the majority were pushing harder and, in some cases, punching lower.

Political campaigns were getting funny again.

As I hinted earlier, this year's campaigns were filled with entertaining moments, but by the time October rolled around, some of the funny had worn off. Suddenly, the candidates were monotonously spitting out the same old punch lines, like 5-year-olds who can't figure out why people aren't laughing as hard the seventh time as they were the first.

Even so, I don't want to indulge in the anti-politician bias that's so fashionable right now, so let me refer to the candidates, from state senator hopefuls to presidential hopefuls, as public-service aspirants.

In the period between sending in my ballot and election day, I noticed various public-service aspirants resorting to nasty advertisements aimed at the aspirants opposing them. Having already voted, I was blissfully oblivious to them yet amused by them, too.

Wrath, opponents' records taken out of context, desperation — it was all there. Though none among this onslaught of negative public-service aspirants' commercials would've changed my vote, they did set me to wondering:

How dumb do public-service aspirants think we are?

> "True, Joe Voter doesn't really understand economics. He could not tell you how to balance the budget. Nor does he have sound, logical reasons for his stances on social issues. He just feels one way or another."

True, Joe Voter doesn't really understand economics. He could not tell you how to balance the budget. Nor does he have sound, logical reasons for his stances on social issues. He just feels one way or another.

Nevertheless, he knows a thing or two. He knows he doesn't want to pay more taxes if it can be avoided. He also has a pretty good instinct as to when he's being jerked around, and he doesn't like it.

No wonder he's tempted to call public-service aspirants by other names.

I hope he isn't too jaded to get out and vote, though. Bitterness toward politicians is a cop-out.

Yeah, public-service aspirants treat us like we're dumb. They're manipulative, and it hacks us off. Still, voting remains the most basic way to express our trust in aspirants to serve us well, or at least our approval of their relative straightforwardness.

So if you haven't yet, put the Collegian down and vote, stupid.

Students' lack of critical thinking worries student teacher

MY

Christy LITTLE

Everybody is guilty of a lack of critical thinking from time to time. Sometimes they might even lack common sense.

I am a person who will argue passionately about censorship, poetry or Newsweek's latest cover, but I am often guilty of mangling our VCR timer or pushing doors that read "PULL," all in the name of absentmindedness.

Certainly, high-school graduates should leave with the kind of mindset that prevents them from erring in the ways of common sense. I think most of us do — most of the time.

But a fear I have is that students are entering higher education without the capacity to simply think. Thinking seems like a basic concept — even a child does it — but I have observed that active, critical thinkers are few and far between.

It is a fear many of my college professors have echoed as they ranted and raved at the lectern, unable to make tired, listless students analyze reading or participate in class discussion. I was largely oblivious to this frustration until I stepped in front of the classroom myself and faced the great, collective, passive mind of the 1990s student.

I met mild resistance while teaching sentence structure and news writing. I expected it. Then my English classes began preparing oral presentations on violence, fresh from a monthlong reading of "A Clockwork Orange."

I thought students would be challenged and interested in taking on the problem of modern-day violence. I also thought they would not want to look foolish in front of their classmates. I was wrong.

I heard speeches about child abuse, date rape, spousal abuse, domestic violence, television and violence, music and violence, movies and violence, drugs and violence, and gangs and violence.

> "Seriously, though, I can hardly express my disappointment at how students approached the overwhelming problem of violence. What most amazed me was how many of my free-minded students (some of whom walk the halls barefoot with curse words scrawled on their shins and feet in Magic Marker) were complete advocates of censorship."

In fact, my cooperating teacher and I were awfully depressed to hear about nothing but violence for a solid week. But I was also depressed about the lack of thought that went into most of the presentations.

"Television is bad," I heard. "By the time a child is 18, he will see 63,451,109 acts of violence on telelvision. People imitate what they see on television; therefore, people will commit acts of violence such as they see on TV. For this reason, we should altogether get rid of television."

By that logic, the light-blue tuxedos seen on "Dallas" reruns should be making a comeback any day now.

Seriously, though, I can hardly express my disappointment at how students approached the overwhelming problem of violence. What most amazed me was how many of my free-minded students (some of whom walk the halls barefoot with curse words scrawled on their shins and feet in Magic Marker) were complete advocates of censorship.

TV- or music-promoted violence? Get rid of it! Who needs to watch it, anyway?

There, that solves it. Time: four minutes. Speech over.

What would these students do if Big Brother came and purged their compact-disc collections? Why, they'd become violent themselves.

There was obviously no thought whatsoever put into their solutions.

Another frequent solution to the problem of worldwide violence was to get rid of drugs. Great idea! The government has been trying to do that for 30 years. Understand that these students gave no specifics on how this was to be accomplished.

But if John Smith, high-school senior, would like to see them abolished (which would mean unloading what he currently possesses in his car trunk), then that's it. Presto! No more drugs.

John has spoken for four minutes, and he, too, sits down complacently. John has solved worldwide violence during his third-hour class, and next hour, he will multiply fractions.

It is a demanding schedule, being a high-school senior.

I don't suppose my cooperating teacher or I expected a true solution to violence in a four-minute presentation. But I do know I expected more than the vague, illogical arguments I heard. Only two students really pleased me with their presentations.

One student, speaking about violence on television, discussed censorship as a means to reduce the problem — then refuted it. He spoke of First Amendment rights and the rights of the press. It was excellent.

I recall making eye contact with my cooperating teacher across the room in one of those rare moments in which we are both thinking, "My God, that kid's making some sense!"

Those moments are few and far between.

The other student presented another astonishing presentation. He recited several lines by Homer. They were gory lines describing bodily mutilation and swords piercing bladders.

His classmates collectively paled and held their stomachs for dear life. He then remarked upon the sense of censoring something as fine as Homer when it was far more violent than anything his classmates had recently seen on television.

His point was well-taken, and he concluded censorship would never benefit our nation. It was a remarkable speech, and he is a remarkable student.

There are not many of them.

Extending the speech requirements to, say, 12 minutes might have provoked more thoughtful answers. But a 12-minute speech is a painful thing for both the speaker and the listener at the high-school level.

Still, I question whether critical thinking can be triggered unless the most arduous, extensive demands are placed on the student.

Unfortunately, most students will never read from Homer on their own.

Coordinator thanks those who volunteered for blood drive

Editor,

I want to thank everyone who was responsible for the success of the fall 1996 Bloodmobile on the K-State campus during the week of Oct. 7-11. The total collection was 726 units, surpassing the total collected at the University of Kansas, 613, and retaining the traveling trophy for K-State.

Special thanks go to Stefanie Huff, Mark Leiker, Heather Classen, Alex DeBaun, Jeremy Rogge and Robert Dudley, who coordinated large portions of the effort. I am grateful to the K-State Student Union, KSU Facilities, Kiwanis Club, area businesses who advertised on their marquees, area churches who printed our reminder in their bulletins and the following student organizations who helped organize and advertise the Bloodmobile: Alpha Epsilon Delta, Alpha Phi Omega, Army ROTC, Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls, Circle K, Delta Tau Delta, Golden Key, Pre-Nursing Club, Pre-Physical Therapy Club and Pre-Vet Club. And, of course, the event would not have happened without the help of community and student volunteer workers and the all-important donors. The American Red Cross. All who will receive the gift of life are grateful.

The spring blood drive will be on campus Feb. 17-21. We hope all donors will return and bring a friend.

Susan Gormely, coordinator, KSU Bloodmobile

Reader wishes to thank rakers

Editor:

I just finished reading Monday's front page article about community service. I want to extend my thanks to all who participated, especially to those who raked up my front lawn on Sunday. Considering it had been done once before, it's amazing how many bags of leaves were packed. Thanks again.

Honor those who deserve it

Editor,

" ... If you can read a book, thank a teacher. ... If you can read any book you want, thank a librarian. ... If you can read any book wherever and whenever you want, thank a veteran."

Considering the sacrifices so many men and women made that allow us, the privileged few, to work and study at this fine university, is it not a betrayal of faith or trust that we do not sacrifice even one day a year to honor them?

Reader says pedestrians are in danger from cars on campus

Editor,

I understand the concern people have for their personal safety on campus. It is a horrible feeling walking on campus afraid of being attacked. But I have another worry that concerns personal safety. It is the congestions of cars and pedestrians on campus streets. Every time I cross the the street, I pray I don't get hit by a car.

The speed limit on campus streets is 20 mph.

Most of the time, the cars are driving much faster than this. The pedestrians are the ones who are watching out for cars, when it should be the other way around. Basically, K-State is a walking campus, and we pedestrians should have the right of way.

I realize closing the campus would cause big problems with delivery trucks and service vehicles, but something needs to be done. K-State police have only two radar guns. It is difficult to enforce the law if you have limited means to do so. I think the best solutions for giving pedestrians peace of mind when crossing the street is to put speed bumps on campus streets. The cost and maintenance of each bump would be fairly minimal. I think the University should look into this problem to try to find a solution.

To have someone get seriously injured or killed before anything is done would be a little too late.

Former Cat proving worth in ABL

Stires

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

For former Wildcat Shanele Stires, getting to play in the American Basketball League — even if it's only temporary — is more than just a job.

It's a chance to prove herself.

But it's nothing new to the 5'11" forward from Salina. Cut from her junior-high team, and not recruited out of high school even though she led the state in three-point shots made and earned second-team all-state honors, Stires has spent her career proving herself.

Stires got the chance to prove herself again last June, when the ABL had its inaugural draft tryout in Atlanta. But playing for K-State took its toll — most of the players drafted played for big-name schools like Stanford, Tennessee and Louisiana Tech.

No Big 8 school had more than two players drafted.

But she proved her worth to Columbus Quest coach Brian Agler, Stires' coach her final two seasons at K-State, by earning first-team all-Big 8 honors as a senior.

After a year of professional ball in Greece, Stires returned to the United States and signed up to play for Athletes in Action, a semi-pro team, and worked out with the Quest before joining AIA.

"I came out a week early to play with the Columbus team," Stires said.

"And that went really well. I thought I played well with them."

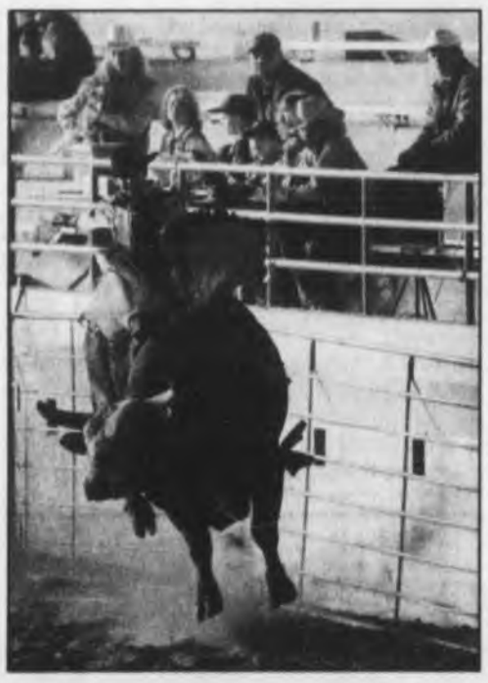
AIA's tour took them to several college campuses and professional arenas.

Stires had another chance to show her ability when the Quest played host to AIA in an exhibition game. And again, she said she played well enough to get Agler's attention.

So when Quest small forward La'Shawn Brown came down with appendicitis, Agler knew who to call.

Agler said Stires was a good match for his team because she already knew the offensive and defensive schemes from her time at K-State.

And Stires, who signed a 30-day contract Thursday, said the match is good for her because it allows her to get her name out in the professional circuit.



"It's a good deal because I can get some exposure," Stires said.

"It's finally a foot in the door."

The Quest sits atop the Eastern Conference standings and is the only undefeated team in the ABL.

RIGHT. WHILE LIGHT shines through the windows of Weber Arena, members of the K-State Rodeo Club wait for the next event to start Saturday at the K-State Alumni Rodeo.

BOTTOM. HANGING TIGHT, a bull rider tries not to be bucked from the bull he was riding Saturday at the K-State Alumni Rodeo at Weber Arena.

'SHOULDA BEEN A COWBOY'

K-State Alumni Rodeo gave friends, family chance to saddle up story by tara wray • photos by darren whitley

Weber Arena was overrun by 10-gallon hats and gold buckles this weekend when more than 100 cowboys and cowgirls saddled up to participate in the K-State Alumni Rodeo.

"Turnout was fantastic," Steve Frazier, Rodeo Club coach said. "We had a lot of entries and a lot of people here to watch."

An audience of about 150 showed up Saturday to watch the flock of cowpokes participate in nine National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association events, including goat and steer roping, saddle and bareback riding, and bull riding.

Justin Lynn, president of the Rodeo Club, said he chose to try the bull riding, but he said his performance was less than perfect.

"I got bucked off," he said. "You could say I didn't place."

An eight-second ride in either bull riding or bareback riding ensures a cowboy of a win.

Lynn said his mom also threw her cowgirl hat into the ring Saturday when she participated in barrel racing and placed third.

"It's exciting. It feels really good when you do a good job and the crowd appreciates you," Lynn said.

About 25 of the 70 Rodeo Club members joined in the competition, open to club alumni and families along with Fort Scott rodeo team members, alumni and their families.

Matt Williams, junior in animal science, tried his luck at bareback and bull riding on Saturday and won both events.

"My horse wasn't much fun," Williams said. "It jerked on me, but I got by him."

Williams won $130 for his eight-second bull ride and $90 for his performance on bareback.

"It's good watching out here, but it's even better participating," Williams said. Williams is also a club member.

One might wonder what makes a cowboy want to hop on the back of an angry bull or fierce stallion.

"It's got some excitement. There's lots of adrenaline and a little fear sometimes," said Ryan McDonald, senior in construction science and Rodeo Club member. "It's just a rush."

> "There's lots of adrenaline and a little fear sometimes. It's just a rush."
> • RYAN MCDONALD, RODEO CLUB MEMBER

McDonald tried bull riding but didn't stay on for the required eight seconds.

Sunday's competition was a jackpot tournament open to the general public. Competitors ranged in age from grade school to retirement.

The Rodeo Club holds practices twice a week. Members are required to pay $15 and have their own horses.

Nov. 15 and 16 the club will host the Challenge of Champions and Bull Mania rodeos at Weber.

Don't focus entirely on gridiron Wildcats; basketball Cats begin competition Friday

While most of the purple-clad campus is focusing in on the upcoming weekend battle in the heart of L-Town, the men's basketball team is starting its preseason Friday night within the Cat community.

Sure, the game is against a group called the NBC Thunder Camps, and although the opposition sounds like a TV network teaching weather skills, it still signifies much.

Yes, the afternoons of pigskin are fading quickly, which means you can either A) Retreat to your homestead and live in a hermit-like state until those glorious days of Kansas spring roll around, or B) Descend upon Bramlage Coliseum and help other frenzied Catters tear the roof off the sucker.

All right, so maybe the K-State hoops crew isn't as well publicized as Roy's toys are, but that doesn't mean there's nothing exciting to see on the new Bramlage hardwood.

For instance, this year's squad brings a new challenger to Aaron Swartzendruber's title of most difficult last name: freshman Pero Vasiljevic (pronounced vuh-SEAL-juh-vic). Not only does the name inflict headaches when trying to say it all at once, but the guy's got game as well. We can only hope that friction doesn't build up between the two hoopers over this coveted title.

MY Jon
BALMER

"Well that's great, buddy, but what more can you offer?" More, you say? Then more you get!

If you crave K-State football so much you find yourself dreaming of sleeping under authentic Wagner Field turf-sheets, then never fret, because aside from the fact this is a demented fantasy to have, one KSU Stadium mainstay will migrate his cage over to Bramlage for the season.

This fellow is Willie, our beloved mascot with the oversized head. This giantism of the head doesn't mean Willie doesn't take pride seriously. Quite the contrary, my Wildcat children.

And although many wonder why Willie was born with a feline head on a human body, none question his dedication to spreading Wildcat pride across the land. So if your blood runs purple, or if you just really dig the mascot, remember that his season doesn't end on the football field.

Outside these side-notes, the team itself has much to showcase in 1996-97.

Center Gerald Eaker is the lone senior of the squad, but this doesn't mean the intensity level will drop off. With a cast of Cats like Ayome May and Mark Young along for the ride, the runnin' and gunnin' should keep on coming.

And while Coach Tom Asbury said it might take the offense time to come around, the defense should continue to be as tight as Los Angeles traffic.

With the new recruits comes something that has been absent from past squads: height. Tall-towers Dax Jones and Shawn Leonard lead the list at 7 feet, and Vasiljevic tops off at 6'9" inches. The sudden abundance of skyscrapers should mean more opponents' shots redirected to the stands.

If all these reasons still don't persuade you, perhaps you should just go to take part in the Coliseum craziness. Once inside this newly refurbished court, prepare to free all the classroom-stored energy inside you as you partake in glorious fan frenzy.

Don a purple jumpsuit, strap yourself into a Wildcat costume, return from mascot-napping with Jerome the Jayhawk before the Jan. 4 match-up, or heck, just get decked out in a Zebra-striped shirt and taunt the referee like a mother.

There are plenty of ways to make your mark on the game, and who knows, perhaps the ESPN cameras will turn your way and you, yes YOU, will become part of Dick Vitale's ode to roundball. You just never know until you become a Bramlage Beast.

Although Friday's game might not pack the wallop of high-intensity basketball you crave, it does nonetheless ring in the season. And after these preseason match-ups have ended, the real season gets under way. The first opponent to enter the Cats' den is UMKC (with a mascot like a Kangaroo in town, the taunters will come in droves) on Nov. 22, so be prepared.

Get ready to feast on Cat-ball and raise the decibel level higher and higher, 'cause the end of Snyder's season doesn't mean one should become a house-dwelling, snow-fearing gremlin.

K-STATE VS. KU: THE ROAD KU HAS TRAVELED IN 1996

Jayhawks' season hangs in balance with 4-4 record

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

Perhaps one game can salvage KU's season.

A win Saturday against K-State in Lawrence would give Jayhawk fans something to celebrate. The Hawks are 4-4 on the season and have won only two conference games, losing three.

The season began positively enough, with dominating wins against Ball State (35-10) and Texas Christian (52-17). But No. 19 Utah stunned the No. 20 Hawks, dishing out a 45-42 loss.

Although Heisman candidate June Henley ran for 216 yards against the Utes thanks to an impressive effort by the Hawks offensive line, KU's defense gave up 45 points and 579 yards of total offense.

BATTLE in the HEARTLAND
A MULTI-PART SERIES

Utah quarterback Mike Fouts found little pressure coming from the Jayhawk defense and finished with four touchdowns and 476 yards against the Hawks, the most any quarterback has ever thrown against a Kansas defense. The former record was 379 by K-State's Chad May in 1994.

"We didn't effectively put pressure on the quarterback," Kansas coach Glen Mason said after the game.

"Even when we did put pressure on him, he was able to get rid of the ball and find the receiver. That was part of the problem."

But the Utes weren't just throwing the ball. Utah running back Chris Fuamatu Ma'afala ran for 103 yards on 17 carries and found the end zone twice.

After a 52-24 win at Oklahoma the next week, KU proceeded to drop three straight in a 30-17 loss to Texas Tech, a 20-7 loss to No. 7 Colorado and a 63-7 shellacking at No. 5 Nebraska.

Last week against Nebraska, the Jayhawk defense allowed 595 total yards, including 254 yards and a career-high three touchdowns for Husker quarterback Scott Frost.

"I knew he was a good quarterback, probably an underrated one," Kansas safety Tony Blevins said after the game.

"But I didn't think he would throw for this many yards against us. It's very, very frustrating for us. I don't know what the solution is. We just have to go back to practice and keep working hard."

The Hawks are coming off a 34-31 win at Iowa State, where Henley ran for a season-high 226 yards for three touchdowns on 40 carries.

But Henley wasn't the only Heisman hopeful to produce effectively Saturday. The Jayhawk defense couldn't stop Iowa State's Troy Davis, the nation's leading rusher, from carrying 33 times for 171 yards and a touchdown.

Again, it was Kansas' defense that failed to produce, allowing 345 yards by the Cyclones. Iowa State quarterback Todd Doxzon completed nine of 18 passes for 165 yards.

The Jayhawks aren't battling just defensive woes, though. Off-field incidents by Henley and defensive back Maurice Gaddie have had an effect on the team.

Henley was suspended from playing against Nebraska after being arrested on suspicion of drunken driving. Gaddie, who has started six of seven games at strong safety, was suspended and did not make the trip to Iowa State. Gaddie leads the Hawks' secondary in total tackles with 51.

Injuries also have been plaguing the Jayhawks. Tight end Jim Moore, who started the last 19 games for KU, did not play against Iowa State after suffering a concussion against Nebraska. Center Jared Smith and linebacker Jeremy Hanek are out for the rest of the season. Smith has a chronic shoulder problem, and Hanek has a knee injury.

Audience participation important for cult classic movie, 'Rocky Horror Picture Show'

JASON WALLE
staff reporter

In the realm of "The Rocky Horror Picture Show," normality carries no substance.

Union Program Council had its annual Halloween showings of the famed cult classic Thursday and Friday in the Union Ballroom.

The film centers around a transsexual mad scientist named Dr. Frank N. Furter who develops a man for his own pleasure.

Audience participation is the name of the game.

While dressed as characters in the film, audience members yell and throw props at the screen, making fun of the actors and actresses as the film plays.

Many audience members dress as Dr. Frank N. Furter.

"You see some pretty scary things here," Courtney Worthington, junior in psychology, said.

"You feel like you're at a drag show," Michael Bishop, junior in computer science, said.

Bishop said the evening resembles a bad episode of the TV show "Mystery Science Theater 3000."

"It's a cult classic that has developed to where all people do is make fun of it," Bishop said. "The movie itself sucks, though."

The night kicked off with the traditional virgin auction. Anyone who has not seen the movie is considered a virgin and is auctioned off to whoever can come up with the most bizarre form of payment.

Although no actual transactions take place, virgins are traded for everything from John Denver records to dismembered genitalia and biohazardous turkey basters.

"It's really a crappy movie," Michael Nawrocki, first-year veterinary medicine student, said. "The only reason the movie still makes money is so that people can act silly."

Nawrocki, who has seen the movie 33 times, said the movie allows him to relieve some stress without suffering the consequences.

"I tend to lead a rather high-stress life," Nawrocki said. "This night allows me to throw things at people and yell profanities without worrying about being arrested."

'Tibetan' offers multiculturalism

SETH GURSS
staff reporter

The Tibetan Institute of Performing Arts gave K-State a healthy dose of multiculturalism Sunday with its Tibetan Song and Dance Ensemble.

The ensemble performed at 3 p.m. in front of a large audience in McCain Auditorium. The program consisted of 14 dances that ranged from the religious to wild celebrations.

Dressed in elaborate Tibetan costumes that contained almost every color imaginable, the performance began with burning incense and a prayer offered to their gods.

One of the most exciting parts of the performance was when members of the ensemble performed the ralpa, a gypsy dance.

The men did acrobatic stunts that included walking on their hands, leaping fan kicks and dancing similar to Russian jigs.

A performer sat on the floor with his legs crossed, rolled back until he was upside down and then walked across the stage on his shoulders.

In contrast to the acrobatics and festive celebrations, many other dances had a religious theme.

Five monks performed twice during the ensemble. They sat on the floor and sang Tibetan chants.

Each of them looked solemn and performed with deep voices that sounded as if they were gargling water.

This is what made the performance particularly impressive. Its mixture of culture and religion was evident.

Another impressive aspect of the ensemble was the variety of instruments the performers used. There were handbells, bass drums and many more instruments that were unfamiliar.

One of the most impressive instruments used was the Tibetan lute. It is similar in sound to the banjo but is a different shape.

In one dance, members of the ensemble played the lute while they did a series of quick-stepping dances similar to tap-dancing.

Another instrument used was a horn that sounded similar to the trombone. Its shape, though, is long and straight. The horn extended approximately 8 feet from the performer.

The ensemble closed the performance with a thrilling performance of the Tibetan national anthem. The entire performance was entertaining and interesting. It was clear the institute was interested in sharing its culture with the audience.

Jamyang Dorjee, director of the institute, said Tibetan culture is important all over the world.

"We are trying to show the audience that the Tibetan culture does not belong to Tibetans only. It is a part of the world culture heritage," Dorjee said.

The ensemble is in the middle of a 37-performance tour in the United States. Its next performance was Monday in College Station, Texas.

If you are interested in working in newspaper ad design/production you can earn one hour of journalism credit during spring semester 1997. Just attend class one day a week from 8:30-11:30 a.m. The instructor's permission is required. No prerequisites required.

If you are a graphic design major and can work at least 12 hours per week, you can earn three hours of credit in graphic design. Prerequisites must be met and instructor's permission are required.

The experience you earn in the spring could qualify you to apply for a paid, part-time position in the summer and/or fall.

Come to 113 Kedzie from 8 a.m.-3 p.m. for more information and syllabus.

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBER OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

•CLASSIFIED AD WRITING TIPS

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

were," Hudson said. " I watched them this year and learned what their perspectives were. That is when I thought Clinton would be better."

The faculty at Lee Elementary wanted to use the election as an educational tool in their classes.

"We want them to develop awareness of the world around them," Eberle said.

"Also, to think about the issues now and to respect each other's opinions," Eberle said.

Students liked the idea of the election.

"This is the first time that we did an election," Tom Stutzman, sixth-grade student, said. "Before, we went into closets and said who we wanted."

According to the election results at Lee Elementary, Clinton will remain the president. Clinton won with 178 votes, followed by Dole with 110 votes and Perot with 25 votes.

likes Rosie O'Donnell's show.

"That's my studio," Donahue said.

There are good talk shows that still carry the message he started with, Donahue said.

"I think Oprah is doing good work. We've got to stop the broad-brush criticism of talk shows," Donahue said.

Donahue said he is not sure of his plans for the future.

"Maybe I'll take my boat up to Maine. Maybe I'll write a book," Donahue said.

After his speech, Donahue took time to answer questions and sign autographs.

"I'll take away a very happy memory of my visit to Manhattan, a very different Manhattan than the one that I am familiar with," Donahue said.

Michael Johnson, junior in pre-journalism and mass communications, said he is interested in having a talk show like Donahue did.

"It was wild. I learned so much. I grew up watching 'Donahue.' When you watched his talk show, you learned something," Johnson said.

"He's the father of talk show," said Scott Aldis, freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications.

Clinton pledges to work for brighter tomorrow

NICOLE KIRBY
city/government editor

LITTLE ROCK, ARK. — Re-elected with 50 percent of the vote, President Bill Clinton addressed Little Rock, Ark., with a message of future responsibility .

"We've got a bridge to build, and I'm ready if you are," he said, echoing his campaign theme.

He said the United States had work to do on the environment, education, jobs, the budget, welfare, families and drugs, and he asked the nation to help him work.

> "Americans will be watching the leaders of both parties to see who will be willing to act, not just to talk. I will be willing to act."
> ● PRESIDENT CLINTON

"I will do all I can to advance these causes, but all American people must advance them through personal responsibility," Clinton said.

He also pinpointed a need for cooperation between himself and the Congress to help achieve these goals.

"The Congress will be closely divided. They are telling us to work together and put aside the politics," he said.

Clinton attributed some of the recent problems in government to partisan politics.

"Americans will be watching the leaders of both parties to see who will be willing to act, not just to talk," he said. "I will be willing to act."

Despite his history of tension with Republican leaders, Clinton honored his opponent, Bob Dole, with a tribute.

"I would like to say a special thanks to Senator Dole, and I ask you to join me in a moment to appreciate his lifetime of service," Clinton said. "On behalf of all Americans, I wish him well and godspeed."

Much of the rest of his address was devoted to thanking those who helped him succeed, including his constituents, friends and family.

He devoted a special thanks to his daughter and reflected on their lives.

"Today I went down to the train station to vote in the last election that I will appear on the ballot, and as I have done every year since she was born, I took Chelsea with me," Clinton said. "As I stood there in that voting booth, I thanked God that I am an American."

He also thanked Vice President Al Gore for his service and lavished him with praise.

"Al Gore is the best vice president this nation has seen," he said after listing Gore's accomplishments.

Gore had compliments for the president in return.

"Under Bill Clinton, the U.S. is not just better off. It's better," Gore said.

Most members of the crowd agreed, although not all were avid supporters.

Linda Bryant, Little Rock resident, voted for Clinton.

"I really agonized over the decision. Last time, I voted for Perot," she said.

"I still feel the major issues weren't addressed, and I still think Perot was right on," she said. "When I got in the ballot box, I was a little queasy, but it was Clinton, because I feel that his consciousness has been raised and he's on the right track."

Others were more definite in support, like Susan Shirley of North Little Rock, who voted for Clinton.

"I think he holds a greater vision for the future of our country," she said. "For one thing, I don't think we need a gentleman quite as old as Mr. Dole in office."

Dole surrenders GOP to new generation

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — His lips pursed tight against emotion, Bob Dole surrendered his Grand Old Party to the next generation Tuesday with a journeyman's prayer that we will meet again and meet often.

It was a simple goodbye, without rhetorical flourish, to a half-century in public service.

"It hurts to lose," Dole said.

In conceding his third and final run for the White House, Dole spoke to the generations of Republicans after him.

"Stay involved, and keep fighting the good fight, because you are the ones who will make the 21st century the next American century."

Dole

While he and his wife, Elizabeth, ducked out of what was to be their victory party, Dole resisted finality.

"I leave you all tonight with a full heart and a fervent prayer that we will meet again and meet often," said the man from Russell.

From county attorney to a record-setting turn as Senate GOP leader, he spent a lifetime in dawn-to-darkness service to the Republican Party.

Suddenly a citizen without office, Dole refused to go quietly into retirement. Echoing a line he recalled from one of his first interviews at the Kansas statehouse 45 years ago, Dole promised, "I'm gonna sit back for a few days, and then I'm going to start standing up for what I think is right for America."

With that, he headed back in darkness to his Watergate apartment, doubtless trying to imagine the place in politics he could cling to still.

For most of his 73 years, Dole was looking ahead.

REPUBLICAN SAM BROWNBACK walks toward the stage to give his victory speech Tuesday evening at the Ramada Inn in downtown Topeka. With his and Pat Roberts' victories, both seats in the Senate will be retained by the Republican party.
During his speech, Brownback thanked his family and campaign volunteers as well as Jill Docking, his opponent. 'She ran a fantastic campaign, and brought up a lot of good issues,' he said.

As Congressman Sam Brownback approached the microphone to give his acceptance speech, he gave a high-five to Pat Roberts.

Docking

His reason for celebration was not only because of his victory over Democrat Jill Docking, but also because the Republican party will retain both seats of the Senate.

"It's a great night," Brownback, who is from Topeka, said in his acceptance speech. "Tonight Kansans have made the choice for hope, opportunity and renewal."

Peterson wins race against Hochhauser, hopes position benefits K-State students

JEREMY KELLEY
staff writer

Republican Jeff Peterson won a tight race over Democrat Sheila Hochhauser to win the title of state representative.

Peterson gave a short victory speech and addressed the crowd of supporters who gathered at the Riley County Republican headquarters.

"I wasn't so sure I would win, but thanks for coming out and supporting me," Peterson said. "It's really just my name on the ballot, and I support you."

In his victory speech, Peterson continually thanked the people who helped him throughout his campaign.

"My staff made this campaign their priority," Peterson said.

Peterson

"Their support made it all come together." Peterson said this win was a win for the people of Kansas and he wanted to help other elected officials to do as much as he could.

"More than anything, I want to have a successful career," Peterson said. "I hope the Republicans (who have been elected) can finish what they started, and I want to help all those who have been elected make Kansas better."

Furthermore, Peterson said his position as state representative would greatly benefit the students at K-State.

Hochhauser

"I hope I can make good bonds for the future and grow the state economy," Peterson said. "We should invest today to pay for education in the future."

Peterson vowed he would devote more time to the communities and develop more community awareness.

NATION WORLD

• MAN CONVICTED IN MAIL-BOMB SLAYING OF JUDGE. A man who carried out a wave of mail bombings that raised racial tensions across the South in 1989 was convicted Tuesday in a blast that killed a federal judge.

The jury recommended the electric chair. Walter Leroy Moody, 51, was found guilty in state court of murder and assault in an attack on 11th U.S. Circuit Judge Robert Vance, who died when he opened a package in his kitchen in suburban Mountain Brook. Vance's wife was wounded. Moody already is serving seven life sentences without parole after being convicted in federal court of murdering Vance and a civil-rights lawyer, threatening to kill 17 judges and sending two other bombs.

• ETHNIC CRISIS IN CENTRAL AFRICA. African leaders searched for a remedy Tuesday at a summit on the ethnic crisis in Central Africa that has scattered more than a million refugees in eastern Zaire and threatens regional stability. The success of the one-day meeting may depend on the participation of Rwanda and Zaire. Zaire accuses the Tutsi-dominated armies of Rwanda and neighboring Burundi of providing arms and men to support ethnic Tutsi rebels who have swept through Zaire's two easternmost provinces in the past three weeks. Rwanda said Monday it would attend. Zaire has been sending mixed signals.

• PRESIDENT FIRES BENAZIR BHUTTO; SUCCESSOR SWORN IN. Benazir Bhutto was under virtual house arrest today after being dismissed as prime minister by the president, who said he was forced to act because of accusations that she was corrupt and undemocratic.

Soldiers with assault rifles guarded the gates to Bhutto's home. Her husband, Investment Minister Asif Ali Zardari, was arrested earlier in the day along with 20 other members of Bhutto's Pakistan People's Party. Zardari has been implicated in a number of scandals. President Farooq Leghari named retired politician Miraj Khalid as interim prime minister and set new elections for Feb. 3, nearly two years before Bhutto's term was to have ended. The National Assembly was dismissed today along with Bhutto.

• LAW ON DECENCY AND RESPECT IN NEA GRANTS RULED. An appeals court ruled Tuesday that a 1990 law tying decency standards to federal arts funding was unconstitutional.

The law was passed during a furor over the National Endowment for the Arts' role in funding such works as the homoerotic images of Robert Mapplethorpe. It required the NEA to consider "decency and respect" for American values when granting money to artists.

In a 2-1 ruling, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said the law was overly vague and discriminated on the basis of an artist's viewpoint.

• KASSEBAUM WEDDING DATE SET. A leak at the highest level has blown the secrecy surrounding the marriage date for Sen. Nancy Kassebaum of Kansas and former Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker.

It's going to be Dec. 7. Bob Dole let it slip Monday during a rally with Baker. Kassebaum, 64, confirmed last month that she and the 70-year-old former Tennessee senator would wed. Kassebaum, who is retiring after 18 years in the Senate, has been divorced since 1979. Baker's wife died three years ago. So far, the location of the wedding is still a secret.

• MICHAEL JACKSON TO BECOME FATHER. The mother of Michael Jackson's child is Debbie Rowe. Jackson, 38, announced he's going to be a pop on Monday, denying a tabloid report that the couple used artificial insemination and that Rowe, the singer's friend for 15 years, was being paid to have the baby. Rowe, 37, will have the child sometime next year. There are no marriage plans, and the pop superstar will raise the child himself. Jackson recently divorced Lisa Marie Presley.

• LACHEMANN RETURNS TO ANGELS. Marcel Lachemann, who resigned as the California Angels' manager three months ago, rejoined the club Tuesday as pitching coach on the staff of new manager Terry Collins.

Lachemann, 55, earlier spent nine years as the team's pitching coach and has been with the organization a total of 14 years.

• NEBRASKA'S NEE CLEARED. The NCAA has cleared Cornhusker basketball coach Danny Nee of wrongdoing in claims of paying a recruiter to bring Nigerian basketball star Osita Nwachukwu to Nebraska, NU athletic director Bill Byrne said Tuesday.

Christopher Pond of Raleigh, N.C., had claimed in a Houston Chronicle article last March that he received $8,400 from Nee in 1992 to bring Nwachukwu to Lincoln to play basketball for the Cornhuskers.

• WOMAN WHO BROKE BASEBALL GENDER-BARRIER DIES. Toni Stone, who helped shatter the gender barrier by playing on a men's professional baseball team in the 1950s, has died. She was 75.

Stone died Saturday at a nursing home near Oakland, Calif. Funeral services were pending.

The daughter of a barber and a beautician, Stone's full name was Marcenia Lyle Stone Alberga.

Tenure denial questioned

professor files for decision reversal

SPEED

▶ Ali Kanso El-Ghori, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, appealed the advisory-committee decision to deny his tenure.

Sara Edwards
campus editor

One K-State professor decided to fight his tenure denial.

Ali Kanso El-Ghori, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, filed for reversal of the decision to deny his tenure with the General Faculty Grievance Board.

Most professors go through the process to receive tenure after teaching at the University for six years, but they can apply sooner.

In the College of Arts and Sciences, the process involves the consultation of senior professors in the department and then the advisory-committee.

The advisory committee then makes its recommendation to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. The dean can make a recommendation to the provost, said John McCulloh, professor of history and former advisory committee member.

In El-Ghori's case, the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications senior faculty voted on his tenure in late 1995. Four voted yes, three voted no, and two abstained.

Carol Oukrop, director of journalism and mass communications, sent his tenure packet through with her letter recommending him for tenure.

The advisory committee voted unanimously against El-Ghori's tenure. Peter Nicholls, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, did not recommend him for tenure, and James Coffman, provost, did not, either.

After approaching Nicholls and Coffman to reconsider, El-Ghori said he appealed the provost's decision, and his case eventually went to the General Faculty Grievance Board.

During this time El-Ghori retained legal council.

A General Faculty Grievance Board panel started hearing El-Ghori's case Tuesday. The hearing was recessed until a later date.

During the hearing, El-Ghori, the grievant, and the University brought in witnesses to question. They were still in the process of listening to witnesses when the hearing recessed. A time has not yet been determined when the hearing will resume.

The grievance process can take up a lot of time for the people involved, said Lyman Baker, instructor in the English department. Baker is helping El-Ghori with the grievance process.

"If both sides really think it's right, then it's worth it for the institution," he said.

The General Faculty Grievance Board is composed of tenured full-time faculty members, said Ruth Dyer, chair of the board. The 30 members are chosen randomly and serve three years each. Ten members rotate out each year and are replaced by new members.

Panels consist of a certain number of members who are free at the time to hear grievances.

The panel has 21 class days to make a report to President Jon Wefald after the hearing is over.

"The panel only has the power to recommend," Dyer said.

Dyer said she was guessing that in the last six years there were only five or six grievances for denial of tenure.

Wefald said after the panel prepares its report he reviews it.

"I have a certain amount of time to look at the report and hand down a decision," Wefald said.

Auto accident takes life of BSU secretary

Hall

Portia Sisco
staff writer

There was a funeral service Tuesday for Stacey Hall, junior in social work.

Hall was in a car accident on her way home Friday and died in a hospital Saturday afternoon.

"According to the grandmother, she was on her way home, and a deer ran out in the road, and she swerved," said Carla Jones, K-State director of student life.

"She was conscious after the accident, because the next motorist pulled over, and she spoke to the individual," she said.

Jones said Hall was taken to a hospital, and the family decided to terminate her life support early Saturday afternoon.

The funeral took place in Lawrence, Hall's hometown, Tuesday morning.

"She was a friend to all and a loving and caring person," Gary Hall, Stacey Hall's father, said. "Stacey was my first-born."

K-State students attended the funeral.

"There was a lot of support from K-State," Gary Hall said. "Family members and all of my brothers and sisters and my co-workers in USD 497 have all been very supportive."

Stacey Hall began at K-State as an architectural engineering major, but she later switched to social work, Gary Hall said.

"I really think she had a natural inclination for it," he said.

Stacey Hall was the secretary for the Black Student Union. She was also involved with Helping Hands.

"It's still a great loss for me," Gary Hall said.

Stacy Hall's cousin, Karma DePriest, said, "She always had a positive outlook and a positive attitude. She was always in a good mood."

A memorial service will be at 7 p.m. Thursday in All Faiths Chapel.

Various groups enroll early

Chris Dean
staff reporter

The ability to sit back and relax as the closed-class list grows is not only a senior privilege.

The Committee on Academic Policy, a group made up of representatives from the various deans' offices, allows certain organizations on campus to enroll the day before pre-enrollment officially begins.

These groups include the debate and forensics teams, veterinary medicine students, foreign-exchange students, disabled students and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

According to Don Foster, registrar, there were several criteria used to decide which groups would be allowed early enrollment.

The main criteria was the group's time restraints and how closed classes would affect their schedule.

"For instance, with student athletes, there are several teams that begin practice at 2:30," Foster said. "Secondly, their grants and aid requirements require that they successfully complete so many hours."

Kevin Page, director of the academic learning center, said this was not preferential treatment but a necessary accommodation.

"There is a lot more required and asked of a student athlete," he said. "I think that the students who would complain would say they would also not want to see the student athletes fail academically."

Page said the athletic department has had early pre-enrollment for more than 20 years. Other groups have had the privilege for about four years, Foster said.

Foster said the early enrollment should not have an effect on the rest of the student body, because it is unlikely a class would fill up with the limited number of students.

Evaluation changes to be considered

Brandi Hertig
staff reporter

The Faculty Senate Faculty Affairs Committee decided Tuesday to consider a Students' Advisory Committee proposal to re-adjust instructor evaluations and the accessibility of the evaluations to students.

SAC's proposal called for a mandate that all Kansas Board of Regents universities use only student evaluations that have been approved by the board for their validity. This has been proposed because many instructors think the forms only reward those instructors whom students find entertaining or lenient.

The board has yet to convince all of its universities to use the forms accepted by it. Until it can convince other universities to use the forms, SAC believes the students' evaluation process may be invalid.

SAC recommended requesting a list of faculty grievances about the current forms from the Council of Faculty Senate Presidents. After receiving the list, SAC said each concern should be addressed with CFSP, SAC, the Council of Chief Academic Officers and the Council of Presidents.

After this process is complete, SAC said it thinks the board can mandate a greater role of the student evaluation of faculty members in the faculty evaluation process.

The accessibility of the evaluation information to students was the other aspect of SAC's proposal. SAC proposed students should have access to the evaluations so they can choose their classes more effectively.

According to SAC, an educated decision is necessary in selecting classes due to the implementation of linear tuition, because each hour students enroll in will cost them money.

"What we're really trying to provide to people is course information," Chris Hansen, student body president, said.

SAC recommended the student forms be divided into two parts. The first part is evaluation information for faculty and students. The second part is evaluation information for faculty.

The first part would be made up of a form of standardized questions made available to students to aid them in selecting classes.

The second part would consist of questions requested by the faculty of each unit. These questions would be used in faculty evaluations only and would not be available for student use.

The proposal is still in the committee, sub-committee phase, Hansen said.

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

Elections are over; your job just started

Whew!

It's all over. You did your part. Right?

You registered to vote on time. You got your absentee ballot if necessary. You researched the candidates. You researched the issues. You woke up Tuesday morning, marched into the voting booth, and you cast your vote. And what a responsible vote you cast.

It's all over. We can take a break for another four years. Right?

Wrong.

Now, your job really begins. Now you have to follow through on what you started.

Now that we got these people into office, it's our job to continue to let them know what we want.

We need to continue to make our voices be heard. It's their job to listen.

Don't let our representatives lose touch with the people who got them where they are today. Don't let them forget the people they represent.

Write letters. Get involved in political groups around campus and in the community. Read the papers. Watch the nightly news.

Stay current on what's going on in the city, state, country and around the world.

Let your government officials know what you think they should do.

It's their job to listen.

Just as it was your civic and constitutional responsibility to vote, it is also your responsibility to take an active role in the running of our government.

That's right — OUR government.

Don't let President Clinton forget it.

Don't let Pat Roberts forget it.

Don't let any of our newly elected officials forget it.

And most importantly, don't YOU forget it.

WHY WE CARE

You've voted, but your job is far from over. Keeping in touch with the issues is your responsibility, too. Make sure your voice is heard.

In Our Opinion, an editorial discussed and chosen by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board. For information on who is an editorial board member or how you can become a member, contact Sera Tank at (karolyi@ksu.edu).

we're all eclectic

Getting to know a person forces stereotypes to diminish and true personalities to come through

MY

Russell FORTMEYER

For a society that loathes them – even condemns them with outrage – stereotypes might well be our favorite topic.

Before I develop a discussion on stereotypes, this will not be a stereotypical column on stereotypes. Far from it, my friend. Alas, all topics must be put in context.

I'm all for stereotypes. It's hard to imagine working on the Collegian without possessing a keen appreciation for campus stereotypes. If you haven't noticed, our paper is full of them, but that is the scope of this column (columnist's note: nice editor; editor me friend kiss kiss).

Our passion for stereotypes is, in most part, fueled by our TV programming. Unfortunately, or fortunately, a 30-minute sitcom or two-hour movie doesn't offer the kind of in-depth character study required to understand someone's true person. This forces writers into using the ol' stereotype crutch (Re: "Friends"). It's even worse in cases in which the sitcom uses stereotypes of other sitcom characters (Re: "Friends").

However, the profound human quality this shabby writing overlooks is our inherent eclecticism.

How many times have your preconceived notions about someone been dispelled after you find out a new aspect of their lives?

For example, that token fraternity member who wears plaid and goes to "that bar" really drives you crazy when he talks about last Friday's date party in the back of your 8:30 a.m. sociology course.

But if you asked him questions about his eclectic personality, you might come to realize he spends his spare time listening to traditional rural Southern folk music, feeding orphans and performing some minor cancer research on the side.

This might overstate my case (Besides, I'll be the first to admit the idea of a fraternity member wearing plaid does seem a bit outrageous).

However, the fact remains that we each develop uniquely eclectic interests. It is the degree of this eclecticism which differs.

The easiest example for our generation is musical tastes. Personally, I've never been satisfied with one musical genre. There's always something missing in one that forces us to another. I like some country music, and some alternative, but I really prefer jazz. However, I listen to sentimental favorites from the 1970s and 1980s, too.

We can probably agree music is the best case example of personal eclecticism. The next step is to transfer this level of eclecticism to our other interests, such as sports, art, literature, political discourse and ice-cream flavors (though at the K-State Student Union, I usually order cookies and cream — who wouldn't?).

The election Tuesday was the fitting end to a lackluster campaign that proved one thing, if anything, each American has a different concept of how our country should plan to exist during our crossing of the bridge to the 20th century.

Because many of the election issues were moral, I won't try to argue it would be beneficial to be eclectic morally. However, moderate politics is quite popular at the moment, considering President Clinton's last four years were more conservative than liberal. It's Clinton's ability to do both which has made him popular.

Perhaps we could simply pick and choose our political opinions from a grab bag instead of pondering our own personal party alignment and other superficialities that are maintained and expanded by the monied establishment. OK, I hope you can tell by that last statement the 1996 campaign has finally gotten to me and spoiled every last optimistic kernel in my body.

Often overlooked is one's choice of profession. At the Collegian, many students from varying majors join together in the spirit of journalism (You might or might not agree, heh heh, but then again, do we care?). I've oft been referred to as the token engineer on staff. And that's only if I'm not believed, first, to be a journalism student.

My choice to explore journalism is simply a part of my fierce eclecticism. What's preventing a business major from making ice cream in Call Hall?

Take one look at friends' apartments to judge their eclecticism. My Republican friends have Bob Dole posters-turned-art hanging on walls, but on closer inspection one would also find many communist manifestos, a copy of "Mein Kampf" and plans for a bomb — eclectic objects sitting around which prove no person is one-dimensional.

There are many clichés I could use to reinforce my point, such as "variety is the spice of life." I've always considered Hollywood Reporter better than Variety, anyway.

Literature, like music, is the somewhat easiest of eclectic qualities. Some prefer romance novels or mysteries, but most will still pick up a book that sounds good, no matter what genre it's classified.

One simply doesn't pick up an eclectic quality in one's personality overnight. It's an acquired aspect, developed using a vital curiosity and intense imagination.

Artistic taste is a matter of complexity. By far, a realist or impressionist approach to art attracts the most appreciation from society.

The prettiness factor far outshines social relevance, just as entertainment value does the same within the cinema. This area needs work, or rather, development.

One simply doesn't pick up an eclectic quality in one's personality overnight. It's an acquired aspect, developed using a vital curiosity and intense imagination.

Eclecticism remains an enduringly admirable quality. It will never be up there with good looks or cool clothes, but it is relatively found in all of us.

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

There is no shame in vicariously living through romance novels

MY

Sera L. TANK

Jacque grabbed Alexis in a flame of unrelenting passion. He clung to her desperately, falling to her feet. "I can't believe I didn't see it before, Alexis," his voice melted into the night air. "I love you, darling. The love I feel for you is so endless, boundless."

Alexis bent down, her full breasts overflowing out of her white lace gown. "Jacque. Oh, Jacque. How could it have taken you so long? It's too late. I love your father."

Oh, yes. I am a slave to passion. A lover of romance. A sap for a good love story.

I confess. I'm coming out of the closet with both feet planted firmly on the floor. I am in love with romance novels, and I am not ashamed of it.

I am in love with love.

I've been known to forgo homework for some good sap. (which, Professor Finnegan, is in no way connected to my recent turmoil in Physical Anthropology).

On a Saturday night with nothing to do, you'll often find me curled up with my footie pajamas, a hot cup of herbal tea and my cat, reading about the tortuous love affair of Gigi and Zach.

Oh, the pain. The passion. The secret longings. And the stolen kisses.

I used to be ashamed of it. I used to try to hide my literary preference. I would tear off the covers of books if I were to read them in public. I would make fun of people who read romance novels.

I think many women love these books, but they are afraid to admit it for fear they will be chastised. It's probably much the same reason men rarely admit they subscribe to Penthouse or rent porno movies. (Yes, men, we know all about it.)

But really, what's wrong with liking these books? A man. A woman. A little smut. It's all good.

Soft porn? Maybe. I guess if you want to call it that, you can. I admit, in some cases, these books can get a little sexually explicit. But I wouldn't say that's necessarily a bad thing.

I'm sure my dad would feel better knowing that I'm getting my kicks vicariously through Harlequin romance novels, rather than going to Aggieville and drunkenly looking to some stranger for affection.

I have a friend who says these are cookie-cutter books. She says every one of them has the same basic plot. Only the setting and characters change.

I'm sure my dad would feel better knowing that I'm getting my kicks vicariously through Harlequin romance novels, rather than going to Aggieville and drunkenly looking to some stranger for affection.

I disagree. These books aren't all about falling in love, getting married and living happily ever after.

These books talk about real-life dreams, aspirations and desires every woman has.

Successful authors of these books know how to contact their readers' souls. They know how to reach into that place in a woman's heart that her significant other will never be able to reach, but we all wish he could.

I have two favorite romance authors: Danielle Steel and Judith Krantz.

Steel has a way of writing so that a woman can relate. There's some smut in her books, but for the most part it ends at "he felt himself rise again."

Once in a while she has a few more graphic scenes, but she focuses more on feelings. Her writing is flowery and mushy. I love it.

One thing Steel is really good at is writing about every woman's secret fantasy: to have a man treat her like the princess she is. Yes, she has the art of male worship — at least on paper — down to a science.

There was a point about two years ago when I read about five Steel novels in a four-week period.

My boyfriend at the time must have thought I had permanent PMS or had gone completely nuts. Suddenly nothing he did was good enough.

He just wasn't treating me like Brad treated Serena or Clayton treated Zoya.

Poor boy. He just didn't have any idea about what he was up against.

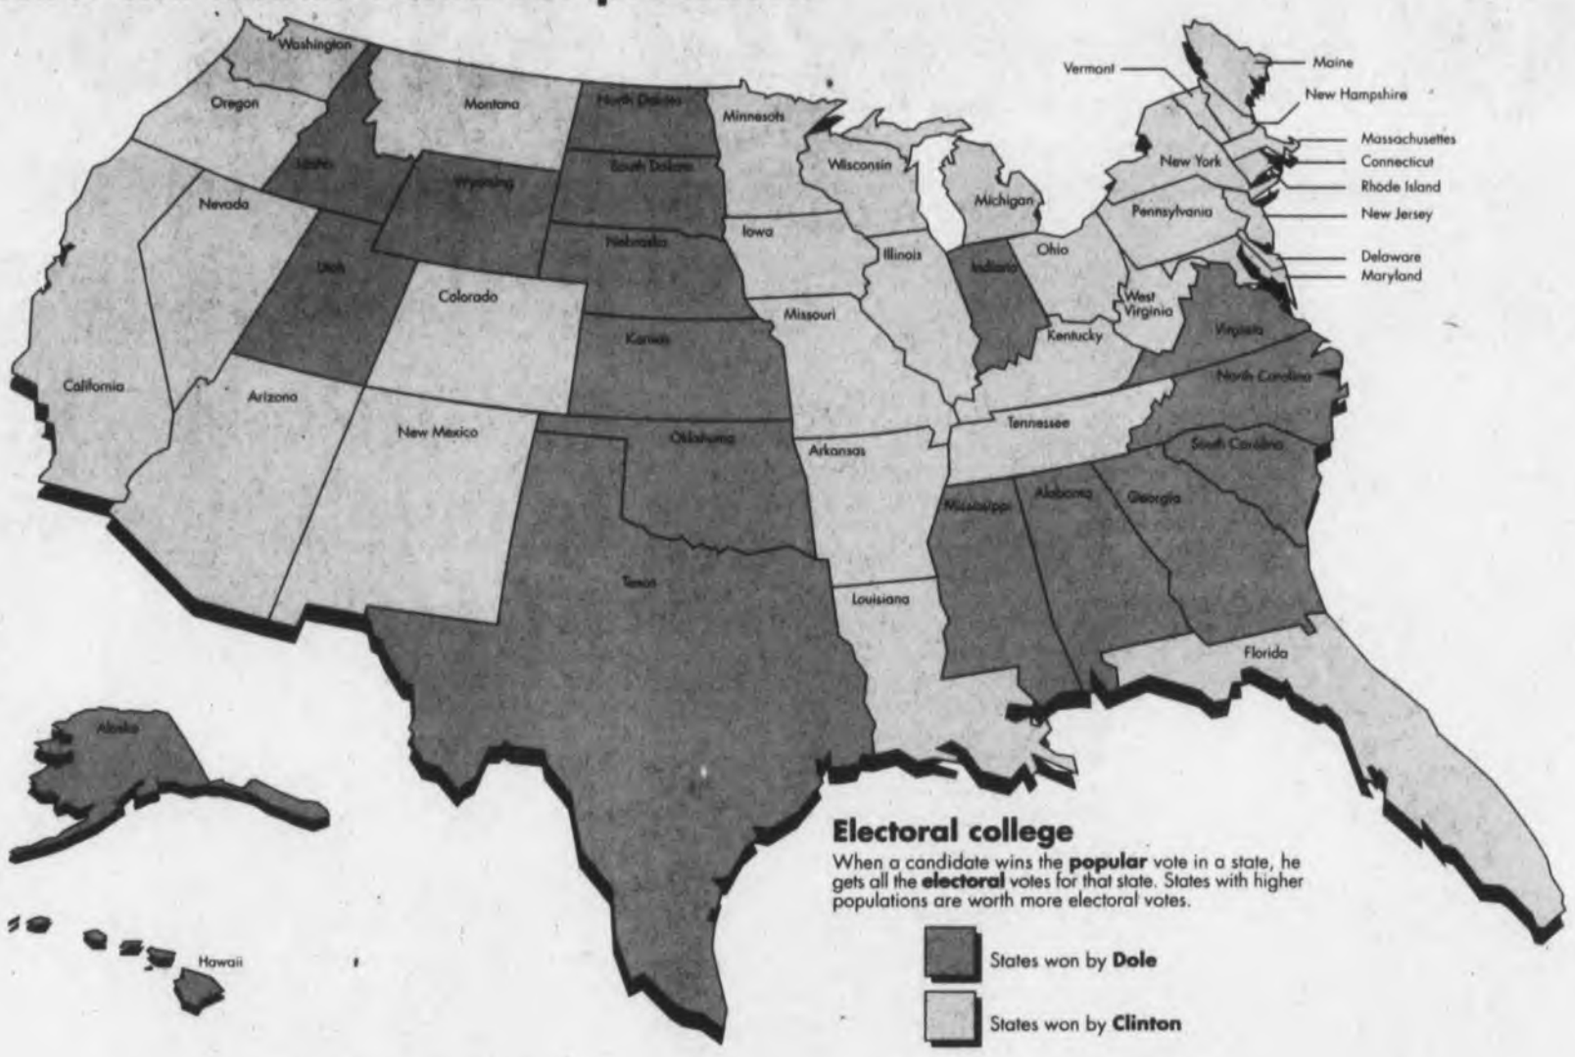
Judith Krantz, on the other hand, isn't as good a writer as Steel, but she is a wonderful storyteller. Her plots usually revolve around a professional young woman who can have any man she wants, but is perfectly secure in her singleness.

OK. Maybe it's not an all-too-common, real-life kind of thing, but it could happened. Wouldn't we all love to be worshipped by men, but be too concerned about our careers to even give them a second glance.

In Krantz's books, usually this wonder woman ends up finding an intriguing man who is so perfect he makes her (gasp!) take a week's vacation from work to gallivant off to Italy.

If you're looking for smut, this is the place to find it. Krantz is very graphic, and you'll probably learn every appealing term for both male and female genitalia and mammary glands that you'll ever need.

From Steel I get my romance and flowery language of love. From Krantz, I get my smut and sex.



Between the two of them, I think I live a pretty fulfilling love life.

HOW WE VOTED

How the states voted for president

Electoral college

When a candidate wins the popular vote in a state, he gets all the electoral votes for that state. States with higher populations are worth more electoral votes.

States won by Dole

States won by Clinton

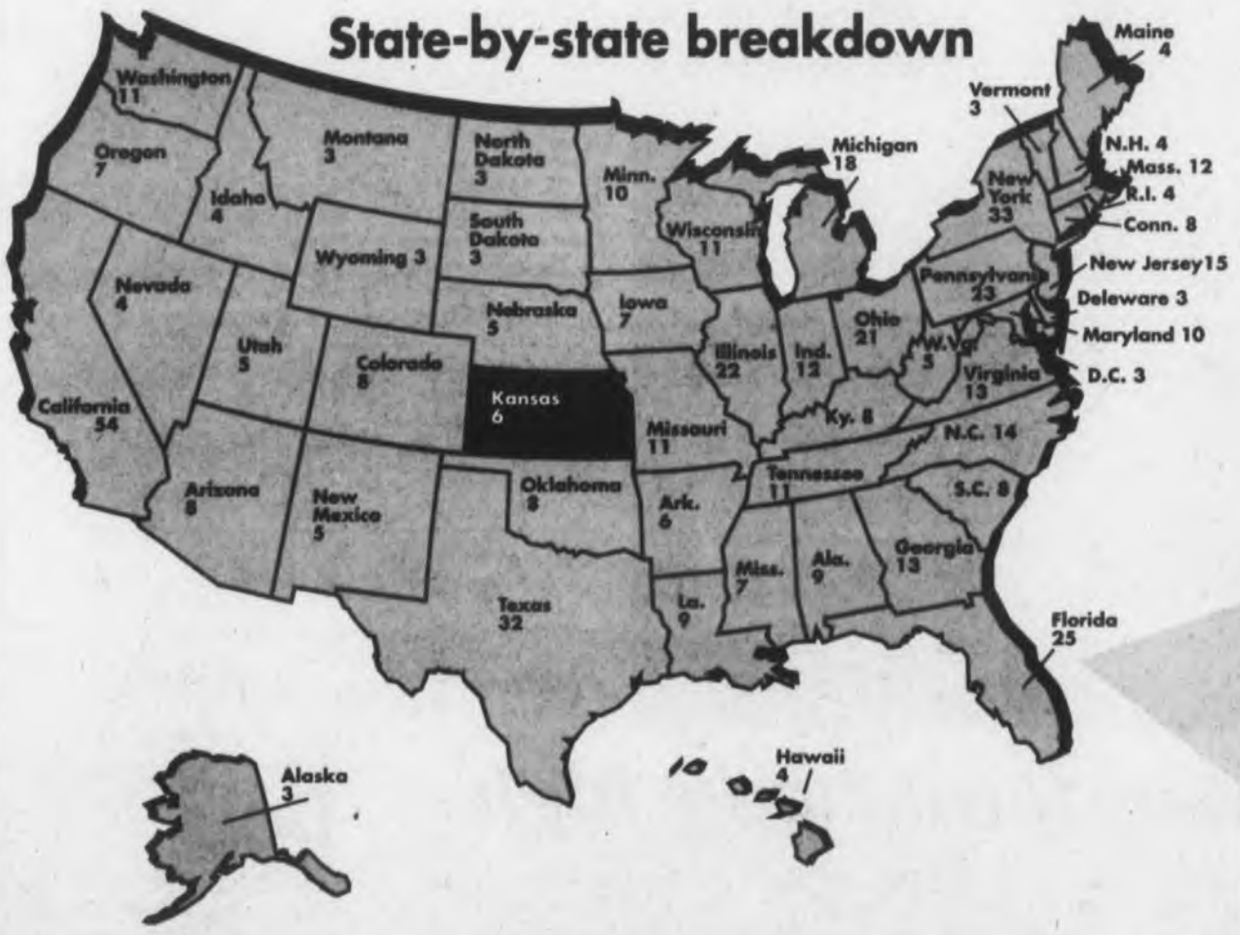
Road to the presidency via electoral college

1 founding fathers

The system of electing the president was established by the Constitution in 1789. The founding fathers devised the electoral college to elect the president, but they did not anticipate the emergence of national political parties or a communications network able to bring presidential candidates before the entire electorate.

2 casting your vote



In the beginning, many states did not provide for popular election of the presidential electors. Today, however, electors are chosen by direct popular vote in every state. When voters vote for president, they are actually voting for the electors pledged to their presidential candidate.

3 electoral college

Each state has a specified number of electoral votes. The number of electoral votes each state has depends on the combined number of senators and representatives for the state. Kansas has six electoral votes. Typically, once the state polls return, all the electors will vote for that candidate. However, the electors have the option of voting for the candidate of their choice.

State-by-state breakdown

4 state-by-state

With 100 senators and 435 representatives in the United States, plus three electors for the District of Columbia, the total electoral college vote is 538. To be elected president, a candidate must receive an absolute majority, or 270, of the electoral votes cast. If no candidate receives a majority, the house of representatives picks the winner from the top three, with each state delegation in the House casting only one vote, regardless of its size. Only two U.S. elections have been decided this way.

Many issues sway voting decisions of K-State students

staff writer

Students voted on issues, character and personal opinion at Derby Food Center on Tuesday.

One student said she voted on party lines.

"I voted for them because they're Democrat," Teanikia Britton, sophomore in business, said.

Financial issues and education were important to Ayana McBeth, sophomore in environmental design. She said she thought President Clinton addressed financial-aid issues.

"I knew I wasn't voting for (Bob) Dole when I came in," McBeth said.

Jennifer Bacon, graduate student in family studies, said she voted on the candidates' stances on issues, such as the environment and education.

"Welfare was pretty important," Bacon said. "What really stood out was character. I didn't feel that Clinton or Dole really wanted to get in there and make changes."

In more local elections, Bacon said she voted for Jeff Peterson because she was familiar with his name and his work.

"I think that the politicians and their trustworthiness is important, because we have to be able to trust our leaders," Margene Furnell, sophomore in secondary education, said.

"I can trust Dole. I'm Republican," Furnell said.

Furnell said she watched the Sam Brownback-Jill Docking race carefully.

"It was just a lot of mudslinging," Furnell said.

On a national level, several issues were important to students.

"The issues that are important are downsizing the government, putting more of the government back into the states, balancing the budget, education and taxes," Tami Pratt, junior in elementary education, said.

Pratt said voting on the local races was difficult.

"I didn't exactly know. It was all based on what I've seen and read and heard from other people," Pratt said. "I voted for Peterson because of what he did for K-State."

Kara Kurtenbach, sophomore in theater, said the issues she considered before voting were balancing the budget, education and the economy.

"I'm an Independent," Kurtenbach said.

Aaron Leonard, senior in architectural engineering, said he voted on personal opinion.

"I'm traditionally Democrat, although I don't always vote Democrat," Leonard said.

Vivien Olsen, senior in English, said she voted on Clinton's past experience. She also said Dole's negative campaigning was a big factor when she voted.

"I think I've been pretty sure about the presidential election all along. When they start the negative campaigning, it makes you want to turn your head," Olsen said.

Character was another factor that helped students decide who they would vote for in the elections.

"The most important thing to me in the presidential campaign was character. The United States needs a leader with family values who cares about the people," Sandra Dewey, freshman in biology, said.

Dewey said she voted for Dole.

"The funny thing is I'm from Arkansas, and I don't support Clinton because of character issues," Dewey said. "I made sure I educated myself on issues and candidates and voted my conscience."

Aaron Otto, senior in political science and student body vice president, said he thought the Motor Voter Law increased the number of voters.

"There are 700 registered voters in this precinct, and 336 have voted so far," Otto said at 5 p.m. Tuesday.

"A lot of those people are graduate students, and a lot go home," Otto said. "There's been a steady stream of voters."

Government shutdown paves path for Clinton victory

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The mold for President Clinton's victory wasn't set in the winter Republican primaries, the party conventions, the general-election campaign or the televised debates. It was forged on Dec. 16, 1995, in the halls of Congress.

That's when House Speaker Newt Gingrich refused to strike a budget deal with the White House, triggering a Christmas-season partial shutdown of the federal government.

More Americans blamed the shutdown on the Republicans who controlled Congress than on Clinton.

The president, learning well the lessons of the 1994 midterm elections when Republicans seized both chambers, stood up to Congress and adroitly moved right to lay claim to the political center.

Then-Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole had nowhere to go. By the time he had moved far enough right to nail down the GOP nomination, it was hard for him to get back to the middle. And Clinton was already there.

Clinton solidified his lead over Dole in public-opinion polls after that budget confrontation and never lost it.

Americans weren't ready for any more revolutions.

Elections are a good barometer of the mood of the country, and the national temper this year has been one of relative contentment — not the anger needed to fire a president.

"The contours of this race really took shape very early in the spring," said White House spokesman Mike McCurry, savoring Clinton's big victory. "The president appealed to the center of the American political spectrum."

"It's tough to beat an incumbent when the economy is rising, however slowly," Dole's campaign chairman, Donald Rumsfeld, told CNN's Larry King.

Nor did it appear that voters were ready to change control of Congress again, either. Incumbents, in general, fared well regardless of party.

GOP pollster Frank Luntz said Clinton was able to successfully cash in on many Republican themes, including an end to big government.

That's how voters could vote for Clinton and a Republican Congress, he said.

"Dole didn't dissociate himself early enough or strongly enough from the revolution that was happening in the House of Representatives," said James Thurber, a political scientist at American University.

"Americans didn't like the government being shut down. They don't like perceived and actual cuts in education, environment, Medicare.

"Clinton has been a strong candidate, very presidential, and that makes a difference," Thurber said.

Dole went through a bruising primary contest, even losing the vaunted New Hampshire primary to conservative commentator Pat Buchanan.

He survived but was bloodied, left without campaign spending money for three months, while Clinton — unopposed in the primaries — battered him with $25 million.

One student's belief in the right to vote takes her to Chicago

SCOTT PHILLIPS
staff writer

So you really think your vote counts?

For one K-Stater, one vote is without a doubt the difference between one who is allowed to voice an opinion about politics and one who shouldn't.

Karen Rioch, senior in microbiology from Chicago, made the decision Monday to fly home and cast her vote. She had forgotten to go through the required process to receive an absentee ballot.

"By all means necessary," Rioch said. "It's that important to me. If you don't vote, I don't want to hear your opinion.

"It is one vote closer to Dole getting in and Clinton getting out."

Rioch said she used up a free round-trip ticket to fly anywhere in the United States to fly home to cast her vote. She said she had planned to go to Walt Disney World to visit her sister, but voting seemed more important.

"At first I thought she was crazy," John Cecchin, senior in civil engineering and friend of Rioch's, said. "But she has 100 percent of my support because she believes in her vote. She comes from a big family of die-hard Republicans.

"Yeah, I think one vote makes a difference too," Cecchin said. "I've told her before that there is something to live for and something to die for. She believes in her vote."

Rioch modestly said she blames procrastination as being her reason for flying back home to vote.

"It's my own fault," Rioch said, "but why vote if we have this option?"

With the large percentage of people who don't vote, Rioch doesn't look as if she is politics-crazy. Rather, she serves as an example — an example for those who didn't vote.

"It doesn't matter who you vote for, as long as you at least vote," Rioch said.

People swarm in thousands to Little Rock to celebrate Election Day

NICOLE KIRBY
city/government editor

LITTLE ROCK, ARK. — With small leaves falling gracefully over the podium like confetti, a crowd of thousands waited for President Clinton's victory speech in downtown Little Rock, Ark.

Cramped tightly together into a city block facing Arkansas' Old State House, the crowd patiently waited, enjoying the music of Kathy Mattea, Tony Bennett and the Philander-Smith Gospel Choir, who performed songs such as "Walking Away a Winner," "The Best is Yet to Come," and "Oh Happy Day."

"I think it's really neat to look out at the crowd. We're all so diverse," Mattea said.

The crowd often twisted its neck around to see a scoreboard that gave updates on the election returns, and every time it reported Clinton and Gore took another state, a chorus of cheers erupted.

Separated from the podium by a wrought-iron gate and a lawn, the crowd pressed forward until a Secret Service officer opened the gate and began selecting people to stand up in front of the podium on the lawn.

Some of the audience members got front-row seats through dedication.

"The little Secret Service man said it's going to be two hours until we let you back in, and we said, 'We've been here all night. It doesn't matter,'" Joyce Hightower, Little Rock resident, said. "We want our spot right there up front."

Hightower had to wait while the Secret Service swept the area for security earlier Tuesday afternoon.

She was a member of a much smaller crowd of dedicated Clinton fans who wanted good seats. Many vendors showed up early to sell to these fans.

One man in a red, white and blue polyester suit waved a flag and told passersby this was the time to be a flag-waver.

The man, Eugene Gravatt of Benton, Ark., sells flags at many such events and was at the 1992 celebration in Little Rock, as well as the inauguration the next year.

"I know Bill Clinton, and I asked him when he and Chelsea were here at the parade if he thought it would be OK if I brought them to Washington, D.C.," Gravatt said. "So I loaded them up, and the committee bought them and gave them all away free."

The crowd became impatient after the scoreboard announced Clinton's re-election, chanting, "We want Bill!" and booing the singers who came out instead of Clinton.

"We're not rude. We're just tired," Carmesha Dickerson, Little Rock resident, explained.

When Clinton did appear, the crowd went wild, cheering and pushing for slots to see through the crowd to the podium.

> "The little Secret Service man said it's going to be two hours until we let you back in, and we said, 'We've been here all night. It doesn't matter.' We want our spot right there up front."

Dole's presence on rural Kansas town ranks high

KIM HEFLING
news editor

RUSSELL — The pronoun he seemed to be synonymous with the name Bob Dole in Russell Tuesday.

"What time is he coming in?"

"Is he here yet?"

Dole supporters — many of whom are residents of Russell — gathered along Main Street and outside First Christian Church, where he would be voting Tuesday morning to catch a glimpse of the hometown hero.

And finally he came.

Around noon, Dole, along with his wife, Elizabeth, and his daughter, Robin, pulled up alongside the church in a blue Chevrolet Caprice to cast their votes.

"This is it," Dole said. "We worked hard, and the last thing you do is vote. I have to say I voted for myself."

As Dole walked into the church surrounded by members of the media and Secret Service agents, he shook hands with many of those in attendance and greeted personal friends.

Across the street, children from Simpson Elementary School yelled, "Go Bob Dole," and "Dole '96" in unison from the playground.

Dole said there was one thing he'd like to say to Kansans.

"Just thank you," he said. "This is a big, big moment. I voted right — No. 288. That's a pretty good turn out."

As Dole answered questions from the media and shook hands, many of those in attendance yelled out support for Dole.

"You're ready for another '96," one member of the audience yelled.

Shortly after voting, Dole visited his house at 1035 N. Maple St., formerly owned by his parents.

While there, he went inside for a private moment with his family and to visit with a small group of local media, while many other members of the press swarmed outside his home.

And once again he emerged.

Outside his home, Dole thanked those who had volunteered in his campaign and who had supported him over the years. He also praised the lessons of honesty and integrity he had learned in Russell.

When asked if he regretted any aspects of the campaign, Dole said it had been a good ride with its ups and downs.

"Whether you win or lose, you always think there are things you might've done, but I've always been one to look ahead and not look back — just always look ahead no matter what," he said.

When asked if he would miss the campaign trail, Dole said,"It's going to feel weird not getting up every morning and having to pack a suitcase," he said, "but it'll feel good."

After delivering a short statement, Dole once again shook hands and greeted many of his supporters — many of whom he addressed by name.

"Hey, Gordon," he said to a supporter.

"Mardy. How are you doing? How's your health?" he said to another.

Then it was time for Dole — and his entourage of campaign support staff and a traveling media pool — to depart for Hays. In Hays, Dole would catch a plane for Washington, D.C., where he would find out later in the evening the outcome of the presidential election.

After Dole's car had driven off and most of the media had departed, a few members of his family gathered outside in small clusters to discuss the campaign and the state of Dole's health.

"I thought it was wonderful to see him," Gladys Friesen, Dole's aunt, said. "He was upbeat and positive."

Friesen said it has been exciting to follow Dole's career over the years. She said she remembers helping him hang campaign posters when he began his first campaign. In 1953, Dole became Russell County Attorney.

"He's been through a lot — from a hospital bed to victory," she said.

Lu Ann Hullman, Dole's first cousin, said Dole didn't look or act tired.

Sharon Fox, another first cousin of Dole's, said she agreed.

"It's amazing to think that on a trip such as this he's only gotten about one to two hours of sleep at a time on the seat of a plane."

Connie Krug and Terri McKown, both first cousins of Dole, said they did not believe the media had portrayed Dole's true personality throughout the campaign.

"He's much more humorous than how he is portrayed on TV," Krug said. "His wit is so funny — it's unbelievable."

McKown said she agreed.

"He's a very, very kind, warm-hearted individual," she said. "The press hasn't brought that out as much as they should."

Along Main Street, many Dole supporters waved flags and held posters for Dole to see as he drove out of town. On one corner, a vendor sold T-shirts with slogans such as "Just say no to drugs, crime and Clinton," and "Bob Dole from the heart of America with a heart for America."

In front of shop windows — most decorated in red, white and blue in support of Dole, with slogans such as "See you in the White House" — many residents of Russell compared stories about Dole.

Bub Dawson, Russell resident and K-State season football-ticket owner since 1947, said Dole worked at his family's dairy store when he was in high school.

"He was a good worker," Bub Dawson said. "He worked for $2 a week and all the ice cream he could eat."

He said he wanted to see Dole elected.

"He'll bring some character and decency to the White House," Bub Dawson said. "I've helped him every chance I get."

Bub Dawson's wife, Donna, said there wasn't any doubt in her mind who would win.

"We're gonna win," she said.

Bub Dawson said he agreed.

"I believe the people are going to realize he has character and Clinton does not, and this will be manifested in the vote," Bub Dawson said.

But, Bub Dawson said, there was one problem with supporting Dole.

"I hate to wave this thing," Bub Dawson said pointing to his red, white and blue pom pon. "You know why? These are KU colors."

Robert J. Dole saw a future of paralysis and pity, so he taught himself to walk again. When, in 1973, Richard Nixon pulled Dole from the helm of the Republican National Committee, he won Senate leadership for a record 12 years.

It was a campaign that took him from heartening highs to despairing lows — from predawn throngs outside a New Jersey diner to a tiny turnout among San Diego Republicans that seemed to presage his defeat.

Nearing the end of his last battle, Dole sought the comfort and company of Arizona Sen. John McCain, a Vietnam veteran and a friend.

It was McCain, at an Iowa bowling alley early on election morn, who cast this election in its historic terms as Dole stood still — hands folded, face wrenched — and blinked away rare tears.

"This is the last crusade of a great warrior," he said, "a member of a generation of Americans who went out and made the world safe for democracy so that we could have lives that were far better for ourselves and for our children."

GOP SWEEPS KANSAS

PAT ROBERTS and Sam Brownback raise their arms in victory Tuesday evening at the Ramada Inn in downtown Topeka. With their victories, both seats of the Senate will be retained by the Republican Party. Both Roberts and Brownback are K-State alumni.

Democrats fall beneath Republican juggernaut

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

U.S. Senate Democratic candidate Jill Docking's election-night party was to have been at the Wichita Boathouse, but she will not be shipping off to Washington this January.

Docking, a Wichita stockbroker, conceded to Sam Brownback at 8:30 Tuesday night surrounded by her family, friends and supporters.

"Tonight, in one of the hardest-fought campaigns in Kansas history, the voters have made their decision," Docking said. "I congratulate Sam Brownback on his victory and wish him and his family well."

> "I've been honored to represent hundreds of thousands of Kansans in this campaign who are concerned about the direction of politics in Kansas."
> • JILL DOCKING

After congratulating Brownback, Docking wasted no time pointing out Brownback's far-right conservatism — an issue that has been a major theme of her campaign.

"I've been honored to represent hundreds of thousands of Kansans in this campaign who are concerned about the direction of politics in Kansas," Docking said, in a thinly veiled warning of Brownback's politics.

"I committed myself to this race four months ago, because I was concerned about the increasing influence of the far right in Kansas.

"Many people rallied to this cause, but not enough to ensure victory tonight," she said.

Docking spoke of a need for more moderate political activism throughout her concession speech in front of a crowd of about 300 supporters.

"Our efforts brought forth many courageous Republicans who stood up to their party and said publicly, 'No, you have gone too far,'" Docking said. "Tonight, I want to honor their courage.

Docking

Thompson

"Political courage is in short supply these days, so I also want to urge each and every one of you Democrats, Independents, moderates and Republicans to keep fighting.

"I think we all have to do some soul-searching tonight.

"We must ask ourselves if party and partisanship is truly more important," she said.

Docking ran her campaign as a moderate, appealing to members of both the Democrat and Republican parties. Throughout her campaign, she made many references to Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, a Republican who is retiring after 18 years in the Senate. Kassebaum has been embraced by both parties during her tenure.

"If those of us in the political center continue to divide ourselves solely by party label, moderate voices will be silent in Kansas for years to come," Docking said.

"Kansas is a state of moderation," she said. "We will get there eventually.

"I point to Sen. Kassebaum, who has had a wonderful history of moderation. I applaud her for the job she has done."

Appearing at Docking's side, after introducing her, was Tom Docking, her husband and a well-loved former lieutenant governor. Behind them was the Docking family, a popular political dynasty in Kansas that has spawned three generations of successful Kansas politicians.

Tom Docking said he had no idea if his wife would seek election in 1998, when Brownback's term will be expired.

"We need to go through a period to re-assess the race and why we lost," Tom Docking said.

"I remain frustrated by the fact we did not convey our messages as we wanted."

After her speech, Jill Docking took a moment to address K-State students who had worked on her campaign.

"I've been enormously proud of the young people who have helped on this campaign," Jill Docking said.

"It's important that we all get involved in the political process."

Docking ran close to Brownback in many polls, and most pundits found it too close to call right up to election day.

In another U.S. Senate race, Sally Thompson lost to Pat Roberts for Kassebaum's seat. Roberts won by collecting 62 percent of the votes.

NARROW

Brownback received 464,363 votes, and Docking received 379, 217. The Kansas Poll had reported last week that Brownback would carry 53 percent of the votes.

"It's been a tremendous campaign," he said. "It was a tough fight, and we won."

In his speech, Brownback thanked his family, campaign volunteers and his opponent.

"I'd like to thank Jill Docking," he said. "She ran a fantastic campaign and brought up a lot of good issues."

Brownback repeated his plan to reduce, reform, and return, which he used throughout the campaign. He had continually mentioned the need to reduce the federal government, reform Congress and return power to the states.

"This is one of the best times in America," he said. "Now we need to mend our divisions and move forward.

"As Kansas goes, so goes the nation."

Gov. Bill Graves was also on hand to congratulate the candidates.

"The reason we're celebrating Republican victories tonight is because Kansans were here for them tonight," Graves said. "We still have a Republican team in place. As governor, I'm excited to be working with this new team."

Joe Vehige, Topeka, was one of the spectators at the rally. He said he thought Brownback gave a good acceptance speech and will represent Kansas well.

"He said exactly what he campaigned on," Vehige said. "I think he'll follow through on his campaign promises."

Vehige also mentioned the importance of keeping Republicans in Congress.

"Clinton is still in there," he said, "and we need people to keep him in check.

"Like Sam said, these next few years will be great for this country."

Brownback is a freshman congressman, representing Kansas' 2nd District. He serves as a member of the Budget, International Relations and Small Business Administration committees.

Brownback grew up in Parker and graduated from Prairie View High School.

He received a bachelor of science degree with honors in agricultural economics from K-State and a law degree from the University of Kansas. While at K-State, he was elected student body president.

Incumbent Oleen sets plans for her 3rd state Senate term

BRAD BISNETTE
contributing writer

The energetic hum of voices at the Republican headquarters in downtown Manhattan fell silent as incumbent Lana Oleen, winner of the 22nd District Kansas Senate seat, addressed Republican supporters gathered there last night.

"We didn't take the top piece of the ticket, and some will live to regret that," Oleen said. "But we're doing well here in Riley County."

Oleen will begin her third four-year term as the 22nd district state representative. The district includes all of Manhattan and Junction City.

Eileen King, president of the Republican Women organization, said Oleen was a shoo-in, but Oleen said she had taken nothing for granted in this campaign.

"We worked hard in this campaign. We addressed the issues and remained positive," Oleen said.

Oleen

Oleen said campaigning against Ruth Schrum was tough. She said both she and Schrum had the same standing on many social issues. Both agreed with the current abortion laws and disagreed with permitting concealed weapons.

In the end, Oleen said her record assisted her in the race.

"I have proven I can build a coalition of legislators, and I have proven that I can work with both Republicans and Democrats," Oleen said.

"In Topeka, no matter how high you raise your hand, you only get one vote. It's not a shrill voice, but an informed voice, that makes a difference."

Schrum

The voting constituents of the 22nd District have elected Oleen to represent them for 12 consecutive years. Oleen said keeping informed on constituent needs has been the key to her re-elections.

"I really work hard at constituent services," Oleen said. "Senators need to do more than go to Topeka for legislation for 90 days every year. I try to be at K-State or at Fort Riley as much as possible, because they have constant demands that need to be met year-round."

Looking at the term ahead of her, Oleen said she is up to the challenge that state officials will have as more responsibility is delegated to them by the federal government.

"It's an exciting time to be in state government," Oleen said.

"We're ready to say we can do it better than the federal government. We're closer to the people. We live here. We work here. Whatever we vote for, we have to live with the next day," she said.

Kristin Heuertz, junior in marketing, worked closely with Oleen on her campaign. Heuertz helped create newspaper advertisements, distributed yard signs and called voters on Oleen's behalf. She said working with Oleen was always a positive experience.

"She treated everyone who helped her like they were friends, not workers," Heuertz said. "She thanks you for everything and recognizes all of the little things you do."

But now the campaigning is over for four more years, and Oleen said she is relieved. Now, it's back to being mom to her son and daughter, she said.

"I've asked all of my helpers to come in tomorrow (Wednesday), even though the campaign is over," Oleen said. "They are going to help me turn my yard signs inside out and make them into signs for Manhattan High's football game this weekend. My son's the quarterback."

66th District results shock Hochhauser

ANDREW FRANCIS
staff reporter

Democrat Sheila Hochhauser and her supporters were shocked as election results came in that showed opponent Jeff Peterson was winning the race for the 66th District House seat.

Local Democratic supporters were confident Hochhauser had a strong chance to win the election.

Hochhauser was first elected as state representative in 1988. She was on the Appropriations Committee her past three terms.

"It's very difficult to unseed an incumbent," Brad Fenwick, Manhattan resident, said.

"She has tried to balance her positions and not over-represent one faction," Fenwick said.

Hochhauser said she thought the Dole campaign made it difficult for local Democratic candidates to make their issues heard.

She congratulated Peterson for his victory before returning to give her concession speech at the Democrat watch party at the Wareham Opera House.

Although she conceded the election, she thanked the people who worked on the campaign.

"It's been a great time for eight years," Hochhauser said.

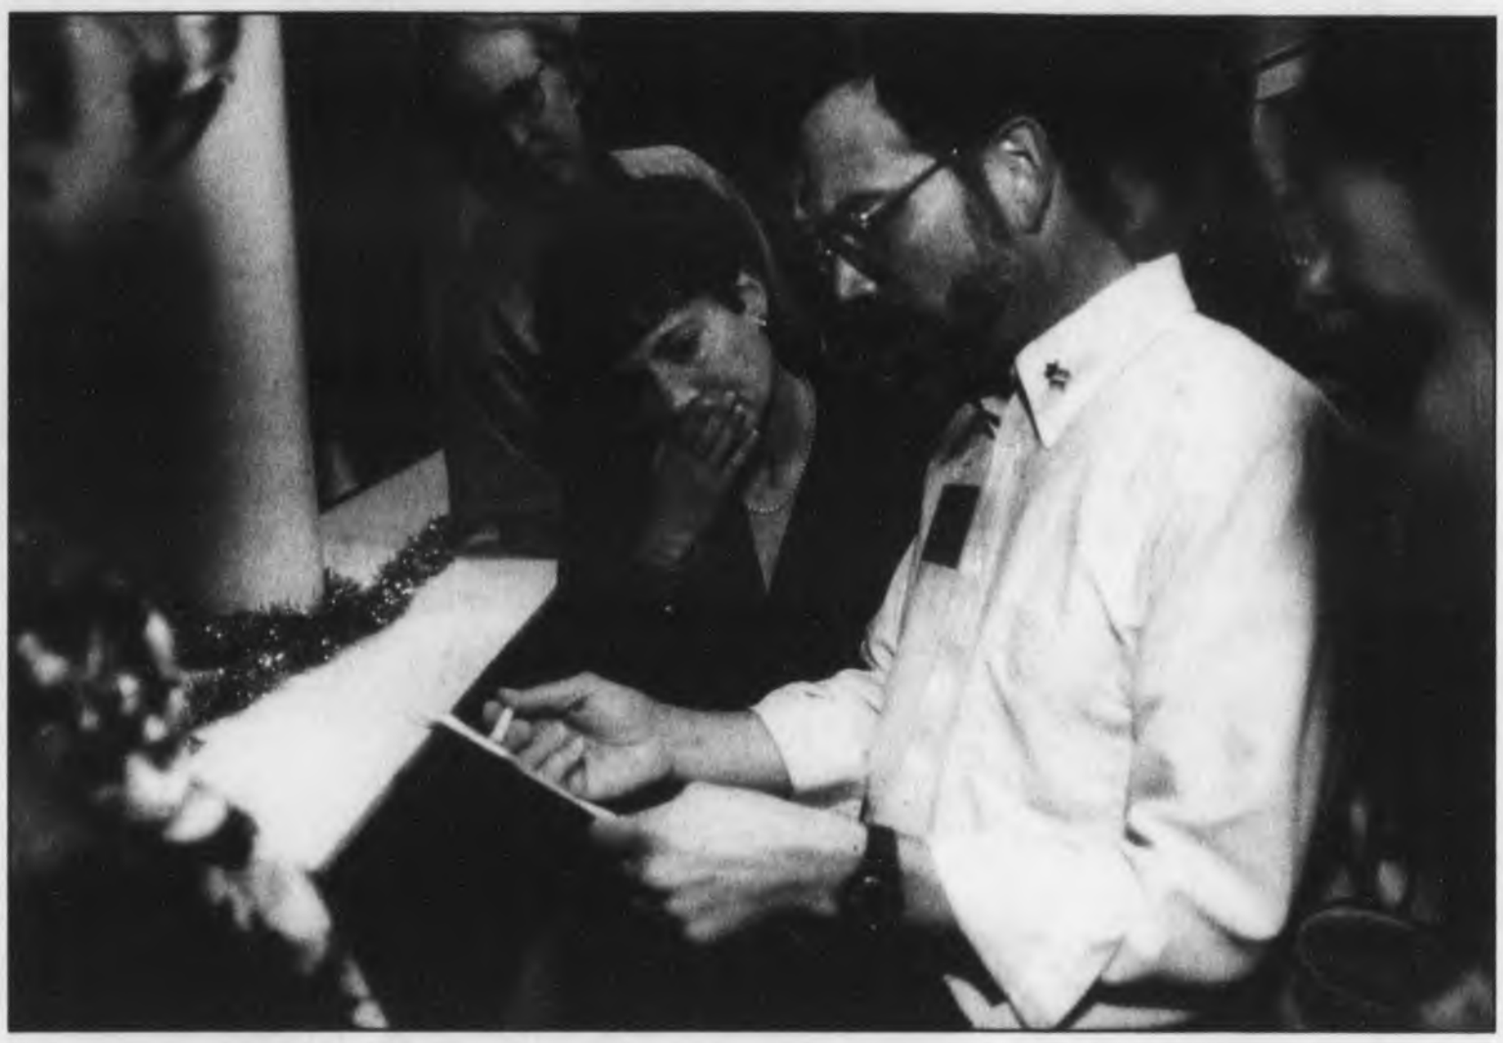
"I know it sounds like sour grapes, but for the way the community voted, and it looks like the state, I'm not going to be sad for not being there," she said.

Since many Democratic candidates were defeated in state and local elections, Hochhauser said it would be harder for Democratic views to be represented.

"I think it's a very conservative vote. It makes it hard for the community to believe the government can do positive things," Hochhauser said.

"I feel like we ran a very positive campaign. We tried to focus on our record and our accomplishments and compare that to Mr. Peterson's."

Jill Sink, campaign strategist for Hochhauser and junior in political science, said she was surprised with the results of the election.



"I thought Sheila continuously showed being the stronger candidate," Sink said.

"The community will just have to live with the results. But there will be another election in two years."

As far as running for office again, Hochhauser said she has not thought that far ahead.

Hochhauser received a master's degree in public health at the University of Michigan and received her law degree at the University of North Carolina.

She moved to Manhattan 11 years ago when her husband, David Margolies, took a position as a professor with the entomology department at K-State.

SHEILA HOCHHAUSER, Democrat for the 66th House seat, looks shocked when husband David Margolies shows her election results. Hochhauser lost to Republican Jeff Peterson in the House race.

"I will involve the communities around Manhattan and devote time to service and volunteer organizations to develop community awareness," Peterson said.

Those who heard the obligations Peterson was announcing were very supportive, especially his grandmother.

"He's going to help the elderly," Myrtle Peterson said. "It's one of his top priorities."

Peterson said the most important thing he wanted to do for Kansans was help the economy.

"Growing the economy is the most important thing, not stabilizing the government," he said. "Investment is the key for the future of this state."

After greeting his supporters, Peterson was graciously greeted by his opponent, Hochhauser, in a scene that showed onlookers this election was about more than mudslinging.

The crowd who gathered to cheer Peterson on was very supportive on his behalf.

"Jeff is a hard worker," Myrtle Peterson said.

"He can stand his own ground and get the job done and not be persuaded by others, while other candidates are all just wishy-washy."

JEFF PETERSON, state representative-elect for the 66th District, thanks his supporters at the Republican campaign office Tuesday night. Peterson won the race against Sheila Hochhauser, the Democratic candidate.

Board of education
Scott Hill, Republican, emerged victorious over Eloise Lynch in his bid for the Kansas Board of Education. Hill was opposed to Quality Performance Accreditation.

BALLOT ISSUES

Issue 1
The first local ballot issue, which would have allowed drinking establishments to drop the requirement forcing them to have 30 percent of their sales come from food, failed, with 53 of voters opposed.

Issue 2
The second ballot issue, which would have approved plans to begin building a new law-enforcement center at Seth Childs Road and Fort Riley Boulevard, passed with 55 percent of the vote.

Glasscock, Republicans get mandate from voters

MIRANDA KENNEDY
staff reporter

Kent Glasscock, re-elected 62nd District state representative, said Tuesday was a great night to be a Republican in Kansas, and especially in Riley County.

Republicans won all Riley County seats in this year's election.

"Our county has given our party a tremendous mandate," he said.

Glasscock, a Republican, beat Democrat Robert Littrell, a local attorney.

Glasscock, who is a Manhattan business owner, also thanked his supporters.

"No campaign runs on the fumes of the candidate," he said. "Every campaign runs on the backs of the party faithful."

K-State will continue to be one of Glasscock's most important interests, he said.

"Like I've said in the past, K-State and K-12 are my top two priorities, and they will be next year," he said.

Glasscock will focus on keeping money in the state's budget for K-State and other Kansas Board of Regents schools.

"At a time when there's great pressure on the budget, we've got to remain doubly vigilant to protect our budget," he said.

"That's the focus for K-State," he said. "The reality is there aren't very many regents legislators."

Karen Ruckert, College Republicans president and junior in political science and history, said Glasscock spoke at a College Republicans meeting during his campaign. She said he talked about negative campaigning.

"I think he's done a lot for Manhattan in the state legislature," she said. "I think he has Kansas State's best interests in mind."

Ruckert also said it was a good night for local Republicans.

"I'm sure everyone's disappointed that the presidential race went the way it did," she said.

But she said it looked as if the Republicans would retain their majorities in the House and Senate.

Frances Glasscock, Kent Glasscock's mother, said education is important to Kent Glasscock.

"He's committed to education of every form," she said. "I know that sounds trite, but it's true."

Frances Glasscock said their family has always been interested in politics.

"I've always had the interest, but I don't go overboard about it," she said.

She said both her sons were interested in student government when they were in school.

"I think it's a very, very healthy interest. Politics aside, government should be an interest," she said.

Despite hard work, Democrat Littrell falls to incumbent in state House race

ANDREW FRANCIS
staff reporter

Democrat Robert Littrell, state representative candidate, knew he was fighting an uphill battle against incumbent Kent Glasscock, but he campaigned hard.

Littrell's supporters were optimistic, but they knew defeating the popular opponent would be difficult.

Jill Sink, employee of the Democratic Party, said Littrell had worked hard to earn support.

"I would like to say his chances look good. He's unfortunately running against a popular incumbent," Sink said. "He has worked his tail off."

She said she did not understand why voters of the 62nd District did not respond to Littrell's door-to-door campaign.

"It's disappointing, but I was running against an individual that is very popular," Littrell said. "Voters have been generally satisfied with his representation.

"I just haven't been able to make in-roads against a very popular incumbent."

He said Glasscock has been able to have strong support of moderate voters as well as win the conservative vote, because he is perceived to be more conservative than the Democratic alternatives.

"He has been moderate, and this community demands moderate candidates," Littrell said.

Littrell said he did not think he would enter politics again. He said he has a lot of work to do at his law practice.

ROBERT LITTRELL, 66th House seat candidate, gets a hug from a supporter at the Democrat election watch at the Wareham Opera House on Tuesday night. Littrell lost to incumbent Kent Glasscock in the House race.

Littrell graduated from Manhattan High School in 1963. He earned his bachelor's degree in history in 1967 from K-State.

After graduating from K-State, Littrell joined the U.S. Army, which included active-duty service in Korea.

In 1973, Littrell graduated from the University of Kansas Law School and has been practicing law in Manhattan ever since.

His wife and brother are K-State faculty members in the music department.

His father, Harvey Littrell, is a retired faculty member from the University's College of Education.

Activities depend on local support

AMY LAGRONE
staff reporter

Local businesses are the backbone for many activities put on by K-State groups.

Greeks, clubs and organizations depend on donations and support from bars, restaurants and stores.

"We could not do it without them," Nathan Brown, senior in education and member of Tau Kappa Epsilon, said.

The TKEs use local businesses to help support their philanthropy, TKE Powder Puff. Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon is one of the many places that support this event.

Rusty Wilson, owner of the saloon, said he thinks it is important to help campus groups.

"They are our customers," he said. "We are just returning the favor."

Last Chance helps out a variety of groups by donating money, T-shirts and coupons. Wilson said he doesn't do it just for public-relations reasons. Most of the groups' activities are for a good cause.

Pyramid Pizza helps groups in a different way. Most of the time, it helps by donating pizza instead of money. Sometimes it sells its pizza at the location of an event and contributes the first $100 of profit to the organization.

Peter McKee, one of the managers of Pyramid Pizza, said the restaurant usually does this about four times a semester. It recently helped Gamma Phi Beta and Beta Theta Pi with Spiketacular, a volleyball tournament. It also helped sponsor the Boys & Girls Club of Manhattan.

"It is something we can to do to help the community," McKee said. "It also helps get our name out."

Jill Cosier, senior in psychology and philanthropy chairwoman for Gamma Phi, said they always appreciate help from businesses.

"I think it's important," she said. "It not only helps us out, but it is good publicity for them."

Gamma Phi has two options from which sponsors can choose.

They can either pay $25 and have their name printed on a big sign with the volleyball elimination-bracket information, or they can pay $100 to have their name on the back of a T-shirt and on the bracket. KMKF-FM 101.5 also did on-the-air promotions for all of the sponsors.

Pyramid Pizza was not the only sponsor for Spiketacular. Copy Co., Varney's Book Store, Wildcat Creek Sports Center and Ballard's Sporting Goods also helped in some way.

Kyla Besthorn, assistant manager of Subway, said it usually donates food also.

"It helps to let people know we're here and we want to help," she said. "It's not just about the advertising."

Yeltsin expected to regain power after successful bypass surgery

SPEED

▶ After a seven-hour operation, Russian President Boris Yeltsin could be expected to return to power in as few as two days, but could take up to two months.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Boris Yeltsin's heart bypass surgery was pronounced a success Tuesday, and surgeons predicted a full recovery, easing anxiety that has hobbled Russia for months. Yeltsin could take back his powers and the nuclear button in two days, but he might not go back to his office until the new year.

Yeltsin regained consciousness about five hours after the operation and was heavily sedated and still on a respirator to guard against postoperative complications. Doctors said they couldn't predict when he could leave the hospital.

Yeltsin

Dr. Renat Akchurin, leader of the 12-man surgical team that conducted the seven-hour coronary-artery bypass operation, said the number of bypasses significantly exceeded the three or four doctors that had initially speculated might be necessary. Doctors said Yeltsin's blood circulation had been significantly improved.

Akchurin refused to say how many bypasses were done. "I'd tell you immediately if I had his permission," he said. "It's his personal business."

Yeltsin's long illness has left Russia with a part-time leader at best and spawned power struggles among presidential wannabes. Financial markets trembled at rumors about his health, and the government, by many accounts, was near paralysis.

It could be a day or two before Yeltsin, 65, is well enough to reclaim the presidential powers, including control over Russia's immense nuclear arsenal, which he handed off to Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin before the surgery.

"He is going to decide that for himself," a weary Akchurin told reporters. "Most probably it will happen tomorrow or the day after."

Akchurin said Yeltsin would likely remain on a respirator overnight to minimize the chance of complications.

The president's postoperative treatment depends on how soon Yeltsin is breathing on his own, he said.

Yeltsin was on a heart-lung machine for 68 minutes during surgery, Akchurin said.

Yeltsin concealed a heart attack right before he was re-elected in July, then waited until September to tell the nation he needed surgery.

Through it all, Yeltsin and his men said the president was still in charge — an assertion the president's foes openly mocked.

Yeltsin issued a statement to the nation Tuesday.

"I'm not going to stay in the hospital bed for too long. I believe that I soon will be working as before — at full strength," Yeltsin said.

Akchurin said it would be five or six days before he might be willing to predict when the president can go back to work.

Dr. Michael DeBakey earlier said Yeltsin faces six to eight weeks of recovery, which would put him back in the Kremlin around the end of the year.

Program to rebuild universities

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — At K-State, engineering students eventually will have access to libraries all around the country.

At the University of Kansas, the 250-member band will no longer have to crowd into a room at Murphy Hall designed for 80 people.

At Pittsburg State University, Russ Hall, with columns that have come to symbolize the campus, will become accessible to the handicapped. The four-story structure has no elevator.

All these improvements are part of the Crumbling Classrooms Program, which the Legislature passed last session.

It is the biggest project in the history of the Kansas Board of Regents.

"In my 50 years in architecture, this is the high point," said Warren Corman, director of facilities and architecture.

The board oversees six campuses, along with the University of Kansas Medical Center.

The regents are responsible for 24 million square feet of space in more than 600 buildings statewide, with a replacement cost of $2.7 billion. Almost half of that space was built before 1960, and 25 percent before 1940.

The program includes 465 projects, with the cost ranging from as low as $5,000 to as high as $28 million over the next four years.

KU will get the largest share of the money, $44.2 million, while K-State will receive $32.3 million, Wichita State University $20.4 million, the University of Kansas Medical Center $19.4 million, Pittsburg State $16.4 million, Fort Hays State $16.1 million and Emporia State $14.8 million.

Don Rathbone, dean of engineering at K-State, said the $28.5-million expansion of the science and engineering complex will improve both teaching and research.

The state will provide $12.5 million for the project, while another $16 million will be raised privately.

"Our laboratories are insufficient for the most part," he said. "We have had tremendous increases in our research programs. We just need more space to do what we're doing."

The new facility will include a learning center and an electronic library, which Rathbone said would connect K-State students to libraries all over the country.

"The major usage will be from the undergraduates," Rathbone said.

The bonds are backed by a $15-million annual revenue stream from the Educational Building Fund and would be paid off over a 15-year period. Money going into that fund comes from a 1.5-mill statewide property-tax levy that has been imposed on Kansas taxpayers for 50 years.

Voter apathy results in low voter turnout

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Voter apathy had pollsters predicting a drop in voter turnout, but Randy Frank, a Maryland Republican, could not imagine how voters could sit out this election.

"If a scandal a week hasn't brought people out to the polls, I give up faith in the people," Frank, of Germantown, said.

Turnout was heavy in some states, such as North Carolina, where some voters waited an hour or more, and in Arizona, where 40 voters were lined up at a church shortly after the polls opened.

"We wanted our votes to be counted before the polls closed on the East Coast," said Jennifer Pletka, who voted for Bob Dole. "We wanted our votes to matter."

Yet an election expert said when the votes were counted, just over half the U.S. electorate would have cast ballots in this century's final presidential election.

"I think this year will be remembered as a return to a period of declining turnout," said Curtis Gans, founder of the Committee for the Study of the American Electorate. "Sadly, we are giving voters motivation to sit out."

Americans are turned off by campaign attack ads, consultants telling candidates what to say and misaligned political parties — one party way to the right of the American center and the other following opinion polls, while television has urged Americans to become spectators in the political process, he said.

Counselor Deanna Troi of Star Trek: The Next Generation

Hailing from London, Marina Sirtis distinguished herself there in the theater and on television in such popular British series as Minder and Hazel and by starring in such critically acclaimed made for British television films as One Last Chance. She has also appeared in feature films produced on both sides of the Atlantic including: The Wicked Lady with Faye Dunaway and Death Wish III opposite Charles Bronson; Blind Date with Bruce Willis and Richard Donner's The Thief of Baghdad. But it was her riveting portrayal of "Deanna Troi", the psychic counselor for five years on Star Trek: The Next Generation series as well as her co-starring role with Patrick Stewart in the feature film Star Trek: Generations that brought her legions of loyal fans throughout the galaxies as well as international acclaim and popularity. Ms. Sirtis reprises her popular role in Star Trek: Generations II for Paramount which began production in March. Most recently, Marina made her critically acclaimed American theatrical debut in Hartford Stage's production of Loot.

Snyder dismisses Grace

SHANA NEWELL

K-State defensive tackle Lance Grace has been dismissed from the football team for his part in a fight outside an Aggieville bar early Saturday morning.

Grace

Grace, 19 and a 6'1", 275-pound redshirt freshman from Denver, was arrested for misdemeanor battery, disorderly conduct and obstruction of justice.

Coach Bill Snyder confirmed Grace's dismissal during Tuesday's mid-week press conference, but he declined to say whether Grace would return at any point.

"That's an in-house matter," Snyder said.

Snyder met with players during practice Saturday to discuss the incident.

"I addressed our responsibility as players and coaches and other people involved with the program," he said.

Snyder said he took into consideration reports from police and witnesses before making his decision.

"I have done all I intend to do," Snyder said.

Grace played in six games this season, backing up starter Jerome Evans. He recorded six unassisted tackles and six assisted tackles, two for losses. He also had a sack.

Sophomore Joe Bob Clements, 6'3", 225 pounds, replaces Grace on the depth chart.

Senior defensive end Nyle Wiren, though reported to have been involved in Friday's incident, has not been reprimanded, Snyder said.

"Nyle's OK," he said.

Wiren, a starter, is the school's career-sack leader. He has recorded 8-1/2 sacks this season, in addition to 34 unassisted tackles and 17 assisted tackles. He also has 14 tackles for loss, two passes broken up, and two forced fumbles.

High-school teammates to college foes

■ Rheem, Knowles played with Jayhawks in high school, but then they split ways.

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

It might not inspire the awe of Notre Dame vs. Southern Cal, and it might not have the national-championship implications of Florida vs. Florida State.

But make no mistake — the Sunflower Showdown is as big a rivalry as the country has to offer. K-State has won the last three match-ups and four of the last five. It doesn't make the rivalry any less intense for either team.

"Coaches don't make rivalries," Kansas coach Glen Mason said. "They inherit them. They carry them on. And I was saying this back when you all were referring to it as the Toilet Bowl. This is a big game."

Fans will come from around the state to watch the Jayhawks take on the Wildcats for the 94th time, and many will get to see old high-school teammates take the field to win the Governor's Cup for their school.

Some, like K-State place-kicker Jamie Rheem, will even see former high-school teammates on the opposite sideline, wearing the crimson and blue of the enemy.

Rheem, who played at Wichita Collegiate High School, went to school with KU backup quarterback Hamilton Hill.

"I really didn't play with him," said Rheem, who was two years behind Hill in school. "I knew him, and I played some other sports with him. But since I transferred to Collegiate as a sophomore, we never really played football together."

Just because Rheem and Hill know each other doesn't mean the emotions are any less intense.

"It was like that with Nebraska and DeAngelo (Evans, another Collegiate graduate)," Rheem said. "You just want to play even harder against them."

Wildcat long-snapper Brandon Knowles will also get to play against a former teammate.

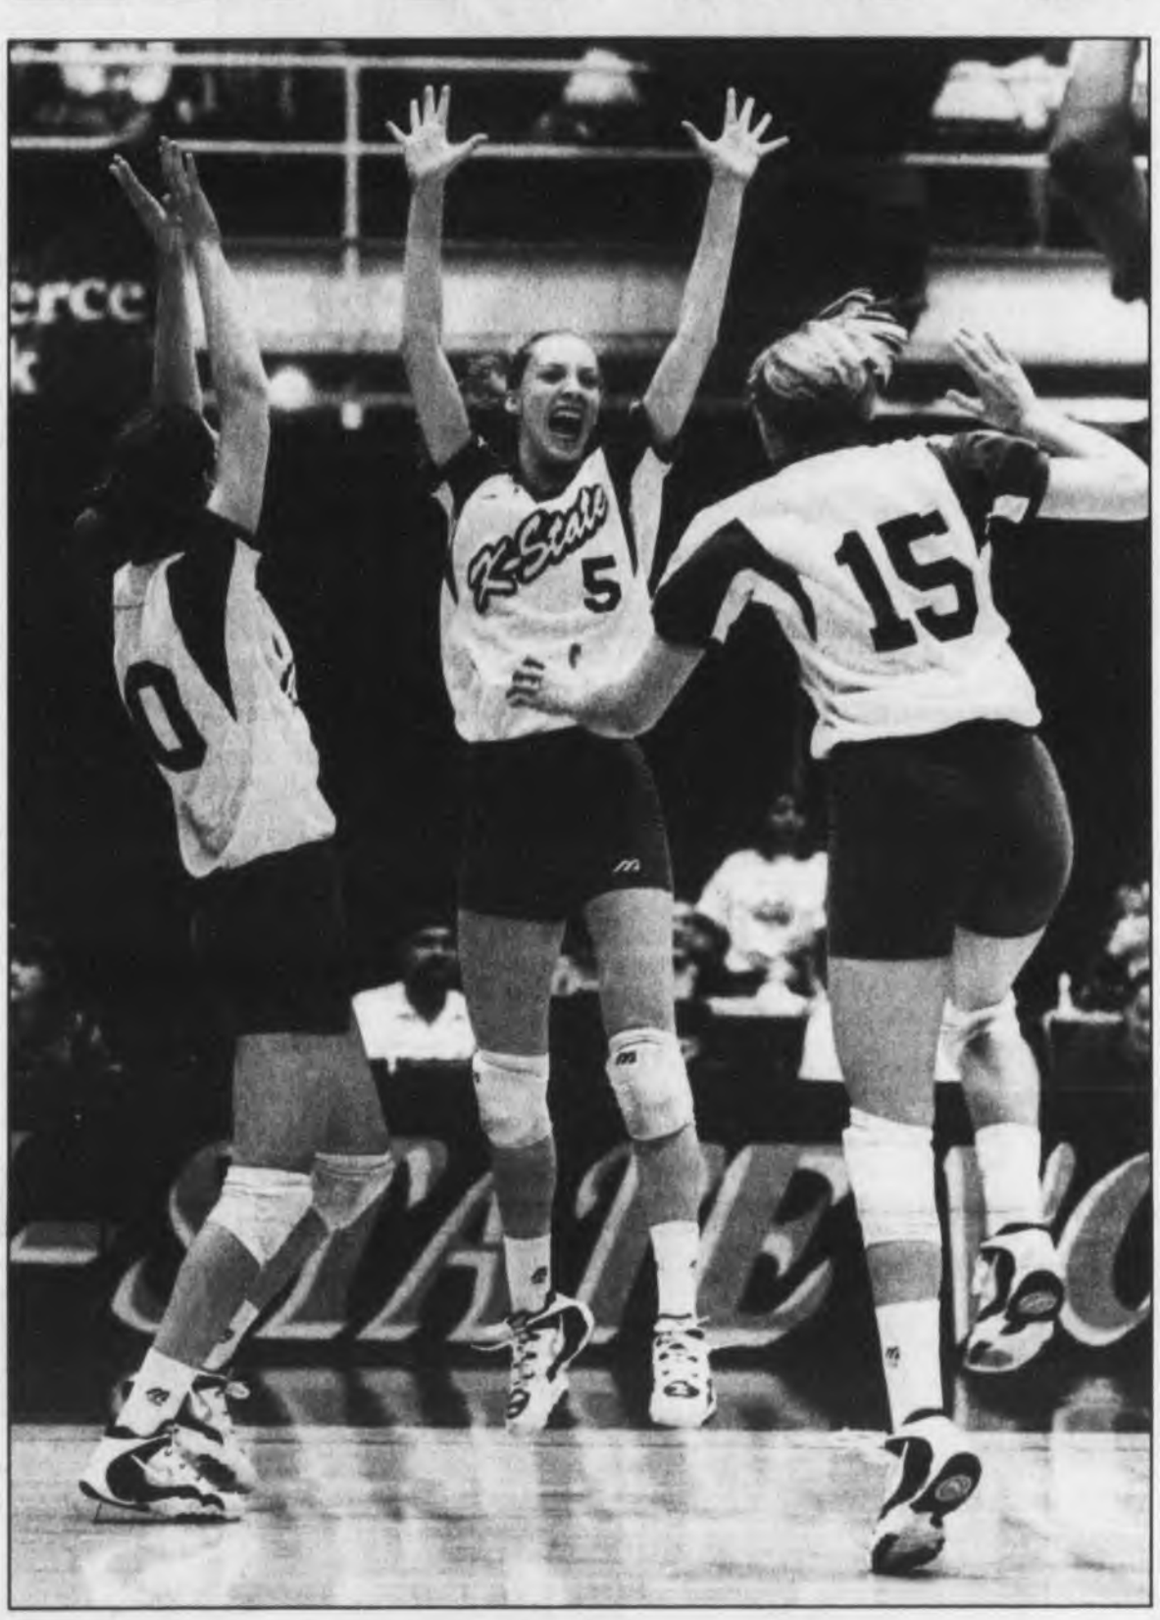
An El Dorado native, Knowles still keeps in contact with high-school buddy Eric Vann, a running back at Kansas.

"When I talk to him on the phone, we keep it pretty basic," Knowles said.

"We don't talk about what our offenses are going to do or what kind of defenses we have.

"I hope Eric has 1,000 yards against us. I hope he does well. But I hope they lose. I want him to have a good game, and I want us to win."

Their friends on the Kansas roster aside, Rheem and Knowles agreed on one thing — K-State vs. Kansas is one of the great rivalries.



"I think it's a very big game," Rheem said. "Just being from Kansas, these are the two big schools. And there's a lot of pride at stake.

"It doesn't matter what your record is before that game — it's KU-K-State."

Part one of the Sunflower Showdown this week will take place when the K-State volleyball team takes on KU Wednesday night in Lawrence.

One could draw several similarities between Wednesday's volleyball game and Saturday's football game.

Both Kansas teams come into the events struggling. The Jayhawk volleyball team comes in struggling with a 9-17 overall record and a 3-9 conference record, much like the 4-4 gridiron Hawks.

Neither the K-State volleyball team nor its football team has played to its potential consistently. The volleyball team comes into the match with a 20-5 overall record and an 8-4 conference record.

The Wildcat volleyball team also comes into the game with a No. 20 ranking in the AVCA poll.

"It's nice for the program. It's the highest we've ever been ranked," Coach Jim Moore said. "But we can't think about it too much. We need to work on putting ourselves in a position to make the NCAA Tournament."

K-State comes into tonight's contest with an added boost from wins last weekend against No. 19 Texas Tech and Baylor.

"The Texas Tech win was huge," Moore said. "Going into that game, we had no confidence. Three people really stepped up who were really struggling. They took it upon themselves to win the game, and it took a lot of character."

Senior setter Devon Ryning, sophomore swing hitter Kim Zschau and sophomore middle blocker Val Wieck led the Cats to the 3-2 decision against Texas Tech.

Zschau's efforts earned her Big 12 Player-of-the-Week honors. She tallied 19 kills against the Aggies and 21 kills against Baylor.

Kansas, on the other hand, is coming off two tough losses against Texas Tech and Baylor. The Jayhawks lost to the Red Raiders 3-0 and to the Bears 3-1.

Moore said Kansas is a difficult team to figure out.

"I was surprised they lost to Baylor," Moore said. "They're at home, and they'll fight like crazy. It's going to be a tough game."

Canty vs. Byrd: Winner gets bragging rights

BATTLE in the HEARTLAND A MULTI-PART SERIES

K-STATE CORNERBACK Chris Canty brings down Oklahoma halfback James Allen during K-State's 42-35 win against Oklahoma Oct. 26 at KSU Stadium. Canty will likely face KU receiver Isaac Byrd on Saturday one-on-one.

An age old rivalry will be renewed Saturday inside the ancient walls of Lawrence's Memorial Stadium.

While the contest will feature many interesting match-ups, one of the most important will be waged between KU senior wide receiver Isaac Byrd and K-State junior defensive back Chris Canty.

Each player is a vital member to his team (Byrd has many KU receiving records, while Canty was a 1995 All-American his sophomore year), and the two look to meet helmet-to-helmet often on Saturday.

Canty said Byrd will present quite a challenge.

"He's tall, got some speed and has great moves coming off the line," Canty said. "He's a great receiver all around."

Canty's praise was emphasized by Byrd's performance last weekend against Iowa State, when his 11 receptions tied a KU record. But while Byrd's quickness and height are a factor, Canty said the defense will not change its normal strategy against opponents.

"Each week presents a new challenge to the team and me," Canty said. "With Isaac, we're gonna try and contain him by continuing to play sound football and never letting up. If he plays physical, we're gonna play physical."

The defensive secondary will face another challenge this weekend without the services of senior Joe Gordon, who is out due to injury. However, Canty said he thought his teammates were capable of playing strong during Gordon's absence.

"We recruit guys to step up and play in these types of situations," Canty said. "We've just gotta keep it going till we get Joe back."

With not-so-experienced players starting on defense against KU, Canty said his role as defensive captain will be magnified and his match-up with Byrd will give him a chance to lead by example.

"I give them tips and advise them on what to expect in this type of atmosphere," Canty said. "But when it's game-time, I've got to play four quarters."

Canty gets his chance to shut down Byrd and the rest of the Hawks when the 94th battle between the two rivals kicks off. Gearing up for his third Sunflower Showdown, Canty, a New Jersey native, said he's developed the K-State feeling for the rivalry.

"It's a lot like high school, when you're playing for the state championship," Canty said.

"The winner's gonna emerge as the best team in Kansas, and we want to prove to everybody that K-State's for real."

Time change

While the K-State vs. KU football game will not be televised, the Wildcats' Nov. 16 contest at Colorado has been picked up by the Fox Sports Network. Kickoff has been changed to 7 p.m. CST.

Big 12 coaches say young conference promises new styles

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

The football season looks to end sourly for Big 12 programs, but the new league's basketball coaches are certain the upcoming season will bear different fruits.

With four Texas schools merging with what used to be the Big 8, the 12 schools are finding that they will have to adjust to many differences — not the least of which are their styles of play.

Oklahoma State coach Eddie Sutton, the only coach in the Big 12 with head coaching experience in both the Big 8 and Southwest Conferences, made it quite clear at last week's Big 12 Basketball Media Day that the fans would make a difference.

"When I was in the Southwest Conference," Sutton said, "Texas and Texas Tech would go on the road and have as many fans as the home team. It's not that way in the Big 8. There will be 14,000 people in Ames, Iowa, and only 50 will be cheering for you."

The general consensus by Big 12 coaches was the new conference would be a superconference, if not the strongest in the nation.

"I know what we're getting into," Texas Tech coach James Dickey said. "I'm not sure our players do. More importantly, I hope our fans do. They need to realize it will be hard to win."

The Red Raiders went 30-2 last season, 28-1 in the regular season. Texas Tech was ranked No. 7 going into the NCAA Tournament. They went 2-0 in the tourney, downing Northern Illinois and North Carolina before falling to Georgetown in the Sweet 16.

Texas, 21-10 last season, was the only Texas school picked in the top five of a Big 12 preseason poll. The Longhorns are favored to win the South Division, while Kansas, No. 1 in many NCAA preseason rankings, is favored to win the North Division.

Kansas coach Roy Williams said the league's coaches need to stop espousing their differences while coming together to share their strengths.

"I was probably the biggest culprit," Williams said. "But I believe that's a thing of the past. We're all in this thing together, and we have an opportunity to be a fantastic league."

The Jayhawks, who return every starter, will be without the services of all-American Jacque Vaughn at the start of the season. Vaughn, who broke his wrist in a pick-up game earlier this year, is projected to return in January.

Williams, whose squad went 29-5 last season, will place sophomore Ryan Robertson at the point in place of Vaughn.

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

MARCUS McCULLOUGH, K-State forward, drives the ball downcourt at the Wildcats' intersquad scrimmage Oct. 31 during Fright Night with the Cats at Bramlage Coliseum. The Cats' season begins Friday.

"He's really playing well offensively, making shots and making good decisions," Williams said. "On the defensive end, he's got to find his correct spot — how close he can get to the offensive player. That's Ryan's biggest challenge."

And that appears to be the Texas schools' biggest challenge, too. The Southwest Conference was known more for its finesse-shooting than for being physical, unlike the Big 8.

Texas A&M coach Tony Barone said his squad has already begun to incorporate more contact in practices.

"I taped every Big 8 game on TV last year, and I felt 90 percent were 10-round boxing matches," Barone said. "We'd better be ready to play a physical brand of basketball, and I mean that in a positive way. The physical nature and quickness of this league is going to be an eye-opener for people coming into this league. You'll have to be a physical player at all positions."

But the southern schools won't be the only ones accommodating a new style. Missouri coach Norm Stewart said the Texas schools' style is one that is aesthetic.

"I think everyone will be pleased with the brand of basketball played in Texas," Stewart said.

Baylor, which is picked last in the preseason polls, is looking at the ranking as a blessing in disguise.

"We're last in the polls," said Baylor center Brian Skinner.

"That's a good situation. We can be relaxed and not worry about anybody's expectations."

New conference won't mean the road will get any easier for former Big 8 programs

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

Last year, K-State won only five games against Big 8 opponents. Small wonder — the conference placed four teams in the NCAA Tournament, with Colorado, a No. 3 seed, and Kansas, a No. 4 seed, playing host to subregionals.

Think the creation of a new conference will make things easier? Think again.

"This is going to be one of the toughest leagues in the nation," Nebraska coach Angela Beck said. "Seven of these teams played in the tournament last year. And other than the Southeastern Conference, nobody can compare with that."

In its inaugural season, the Big 12 will have a chance to prove itself worthy of the title Superconference. In addition to the four Big 8 teams that went to the Big Dance, three of the newcomers from Texas (Texas Tech, Texas and Texas A&M) saw NCAA Tournament action.

The fourth, Baylor, is coached by Sonja Hogg, who won an Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women national championship in 1981 at Louisiana Tech and followed that up by winning the first NCAA championship in '82.

In all, three league coaches have NCAA national-championship rings (Hogg, Marsha Sharp at Texas Tech and Jody Conradt at Texas), two assisted on the 1996 Olympic gold medal-winning team (Colorado's Ceal Barry and Kansas' Marian Washington), and 10 have taken teams to the NCAA Tournament — every coach except rookie head coaches Deb Patterson at K-State and Sherri Coale at Oklahoma.

And with the contrast in styles between the Big 8 schools and their new southern sisters, coaching might make a world of difference.

For the Wildcats, that means taking opponents out of their game.

"Texas Tech, of course, runs that zone," Patterson said. "Their offense stems from their defensive play, and it all comes out of the zone they play. To beat them, we need to hit the outside shots and stretch their zone to allow for penetration and our inside play.

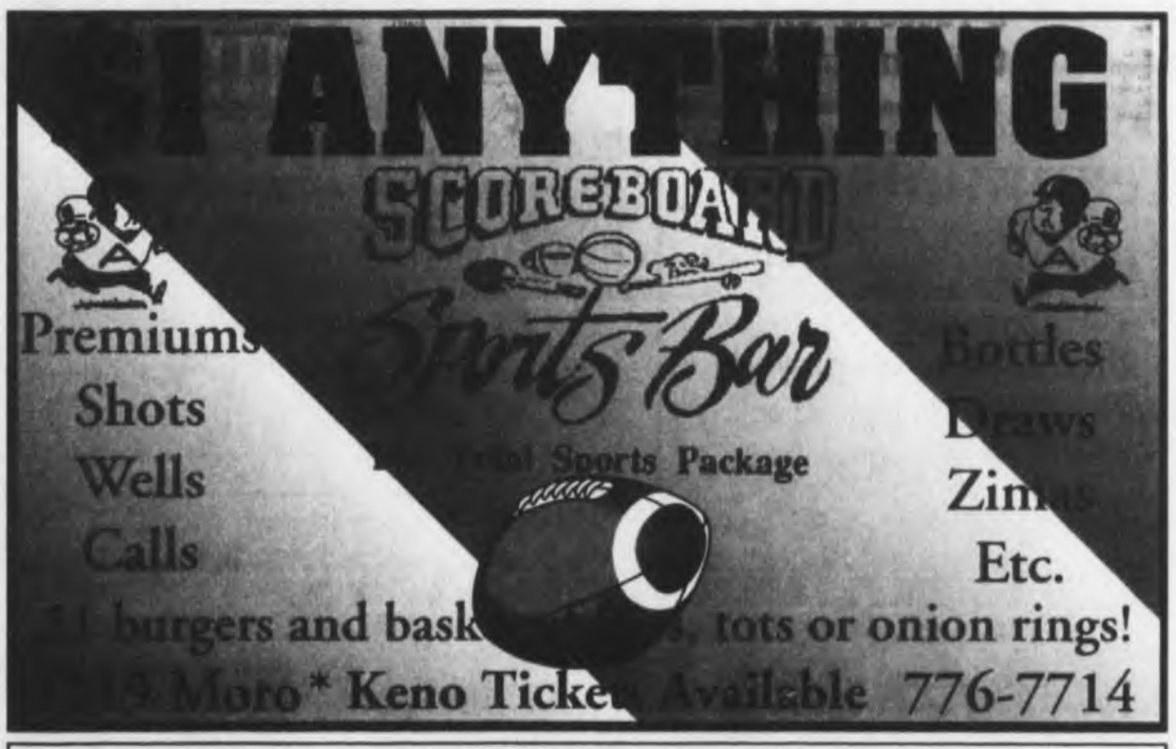
"Texas, on the other hand, is an offensively oriented team. If you can shut down their offense, it rolls over into their defense. So we need to stop their guards, seal off the inside and deny outside shots."

In general, the Big 8 was dominated by strong, physical players. The Southwest Conference was quicker, more athletic.

With an all-American front line of Erin Scholz and Reagan Scott at Colorado, sophomore standout Nakia Sanford at Kansas and all-Big 12 selection Jayme Olson at Iowa State, the North looks to stay physical.

"They like to mix it up up there," Conradt said. "That was a physical league."

Although the Big 12 preseason player of the year, Alicia Thompson, is a post from the South, the southern schools look to run and gun again. Texas is led by senior sharpshooter Danielle Viglione and point guard Angie Jo Olgetree. And even Tech said it has a perimeter-based offense.



"I think you'll see us shooting a lot more outside this year," said Sharp, who, despite keeping Thompson, lost the SWC player of the year in Michi Atkins.

And home court might be more of a factor than the Cats ever dreamed. Although Colorado played in front of an average 3,959 fans last year, that will pale when K-State plays in Lubbock. Texas Tech averaged 7,932 fans, third in the nation. Texas, whose 7,495 fans per game placed them fifth last year, visits K-State this season.

Rebel cease-fire in Zaire causes looting sprees

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GOMA, Zaire (AP) — Rebel soldiers who took control of eastern Zaire in a three-week battle handed out free strawberry sodas Tuesday to Zairians during a cease-fire.

Frightened civilians emerged from hiding spots for a glimpse of the Rwandan-backed force that drove the Zairian army west into the forests. The bolder ones took advantage of the lull in fighting to break into stores and loot even the light fixtures.

The wreckage of war was easy for all to see as looters skirted a pool of blood at a supermarket to steal shelves.

The hospital morgue was streaked with sticky blood, the wards nearly empty because people didn't want to risk their lives and stay.

Red Cross volunteers wearing thick black gloves, yellow rubber pants and masks in the past five days have collected 371 bodies, mostly men killed in battle, and piled them up at a cemetery for burial.

Walls around town are pockmarked by bullets, many of the windows shattered.

People of all ages — from small children to old men — took part in a looting spree, carting off what the Zairian soldiers left behind on their retreat from Goma like books and dishes from hotels; even light bulbs and electric cords were pried away by the crowds.

"I am happy, and so is everyone else," Musoro Bongano said of the change of power in and around Lake Kivu. "The Zairian soldiers are gone — they harassed us and stole from us. The rebels don't."

Denis Kamundu, gesturing at the street, wondered who was going to repair all the damage.

"My older sister's house was destroyed by a mortar, and her car was stolen. She will never be able to afford to get those back," he said.

Outside a tourist shop, children danced with traditional masks stolen from the store. A small boy cracked open a box to help himself to some books.

U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees headquarters looked like a garbage dump — files were strewn across soiled carpets, doors ripped off hinges and computers stolen.

Although the disciplined and organized rebels tamed the Zairian army, they could do little about the looters but occasionally fire into the air to scare them off.

Indeed, in the spirit of the day, rebel soldiers at a warehouse that others had broken into gave strawberry sodas to passers-by. They also helped distribute UNHCR rations to hungry people.

Asked about why they fought for control of areas north and south of Lake Kivu, each replied in kind in a variety of languages — English, French and Swahili. They joined the Alliance of Democratic Forces for Liberation to oust President Mobutu Sese Seko.

"Mobutu is a bad man. He is a dictator. We have no democracy," said Abele Totad, an armed and uniformed rebel outside the UNHCR. "He discriminates against people. He treats us like animals."

Pets susceptible to cold weather; owners often forget insulation

JACQUELINE BONE
staff reporter

The freshly fallen snow beckoned to the student. She snapped a leash onto her dog for a stroll in the winter wonderland. It was much colder than expected, and she hurried back to the house, ears and fingers numb. She put her dog in its kennel and welcomed the house's warmth.

The student might be toasty, but her dog could be in danger from the cold. Animals can be susceptible to the cold, especially if they are used to being in the house.

"Puppies and house dogs are not acclimated to being outside. If it's too cold for you, it's too cold for your dog," said Dr. R. J. Schuff in Dog Fancy magazine.

Pets should be monitored carefully during the cold winter months. Owners should check food and water often, making sure the water is not frozen and the animal has plenty of food.

Dr. Gerald Bond of Westside Veterinary Clinic said he recommended animals be fed free-choice or given a little more food to help them maintain energy levels. Changing an animal's food to a higher-protein diet might cause more problems, said Bond, so pet owners should keep the type of food the same.

Cold, wet conditions can cause ice and snow to build up in between pets' toes and cause sores, said Bond.

"Sometimes the ice will actually cut the pad," Bond said.

Owners should check their pets' feet and keep them clean and dry.

Tips for a warmer pet shelter

- The length of the shelter should not exceed 1-1/2 times the length of the pet.
- The width should be about two-thirds the length of the pet and the height should be about one-fifth higher than the pet.
- The door of the shelter should face south to avoid cold north winds.
- Put a flap over the opening to further guard from the chill.
- Raise the house off the ground so it is not absorbing cold from the frozen ground.
- Provide plenty of clean bedding such as straw or blankets for added insulation.
- Change the bedding when it becomes dirty or matted down.
- Insulate shelter with foam batting or foam panels.
- If the temperature falls below 20 degrees, bring the pet inside.

HEATHER HOLLINGSWORTH/Collegian

The worst problem Bond said he witnesses during the winter is neglect.

"People are just unaware of pets' needs," he said.

However, Bond complimented students, saying they were some of the best owners he sees.

"They are usually well-educated," Bond said.

Keeping fresh water available at all times is important. Schuff said he recommended heated water bowls or well-insulated water bowls for outside animals.

Pet owners should watch the weather. If the temperature is forecast to drop to 20 degrees or lower, Bond said he recommended bringing outside pets in.

A well-insulated shelter or doghouse can provide comfort to an outside pet. Shelters should be off the ground and the walls insulated with foam or straw. The structure can be surrounded by bales of hay or straw for added insulation.

Internal insulation, such as loose straw or blankets, also helps. The bedding should be kept clean and dry at all times. When the bedding is dirty or matted down, it should be changed.

"It depends on the dog," said Bond, regarding houses for dogs. "A good-quality doghouse for a big, hearty dog should be enough."

Bond said he recommended smaller dogs such as Chihuahuas and lhasa apsos be kept inside. Puppies should be kept indoors during the cold, Schuff said.

Just because animals have fur doesn't mean they won't get cold. Pets are susceptible to frostbite, Schuff said.

"They can't tell you their ears and toes are numb," Schuff said.

Animals can lose their ears because of severe frostbite. The delicate tissue does not have ample blood supply for warmth, Schuff said.

Pets are humble creatures, never complaining, always accepting. Take some time to make sure Fido and Fluffy are warm and well cared for this winter.

Movie offers chilling view of reform school

RYAN O'HALLORAN
staff reporter

"Sleepers," based on Lorenzo Carcaterra's bestseller, arrived in theaters nationwide nearly two weeks ago, and a bit of a controversy followed.

The issue is centered around the fact that when the book came out, it was listed as nonfiction, while Warner Brothers, which paid Carcaterra $2.1 million for the rights, has labeled it as only the controversial bestseller.

"It's a hoax that smears the Catholic school and church," William Donohue, head of the Catholic League for Religion and Civil Rights, told USA Today when the movie came out.

"It poisons the already-poisoned atmosphere of anti-Catholicism. We know it's a fraud."

For Catholic officials such as Donohue, the spark was lighted when the movie, as well as the book, had a priest lying. That issue and the is-it-true-or-not issue have enraged not only Catholic officials but those involved with the movie.

But for his part, Carcaterra hasn't commented on the situation, and neither has Warner Brothers.

"I would appreciate it if he would say it's just not true," Kevin Nelan, pastor of Sacred Heart of Jesus Christ, said in a USA Today Interview.

Donohue said if people like the movie for its entertainment value, it's no big deal.

"(But) my only goal is that people know it's fiction and that people don't come out of the movie thinking that's how Catholic priests act," he said.

Donohue said he and two lawyers attempted to find confirmation of Carcaterra's having spent time in a reform school or proof of a murder trial similar to the book. They were unable to come up with that information.

Director Barry Levinson, who wrote the screenplay in three weeks after reading the book on vacation, admitted confusion as to why this is even an issue in an interview with USA Today.

"I can't really debate the so-called controversy," Levinson said. "They say they can't find the court record, but that's a bogus comment. You can't find the record because you don't know the names."

Levinson said Carcaterra told him everything — names, dates, places — had been changed.

And as for the priest lying?

"What we show is an incredible, compassionate priest, a wonderful person who does so much for the community at so many levels," Levinson said.

For the screenplay adaptation, Levinson said of Carcaterra's response, "He couldn't talk. He just went off for like an hour. It's interesting that he finally writes about the experience, and people say they don't believe it."

'Sleepers' highlights lesser-known actors

RYAN O'HALLORAN
staff reporter

In a movie that features the superstar names and superstar talents of Robert DeNiro, Dustin Hoffman, Brad Pitt and Kevin Bacon, three lesser-known, less ballyhooed names make waves in the new Barry Levinson film, "Sleepers."

Although the work turned in by the aforementioned foursome is impressive as always, the performances of Jason Patric, Brad Renfro and Joe Perrino really catch the audience's collective eye.

The movie focuses on four teenage boys in the late 1960s in Hell's Kitchen. The boys are put in a reform school where Bacon comes in as the perverted guard who, along with the other guards, sexually assaults the boys.

When the four boys escape, the story fast-forwards to 1981, with Pitt and Patric taking over the lead roles of the now-adults.

Two members of the group kill one of the abusers, and a trial ensues.

The story is a little far-fetched. The out-there label comes in when Pitt's character hatches a plan to free his two compatriots.

As far as individual performances go, Patric is fantastic once he enters the picture. Renfro, who plays the younger Pitt, gained acclaim for his role in "The Client" and is clearly the boss of the group. His dialogue commands his friends' attention.

And the narrator in the first half of the picture, Perrino, is a valuable actor in his role as the young Patric.

In pre-release trailers, Hoffman's role is much dicussed. He gave a nice performance as the drunken and drugged-up attorney, but it wasn't Oscar-worthy.

Rumors of an Oscar-winning performance have also floated around DeNiro. DeNiro plays a priest who is the only main character that is cast for the duration of the film. DeNiro is great, and he deserves consideration for the big prize, but his best chance for an Oscar will probably be as a supporting actor.

I was never much of a Pitt fan before his role as a detective in last year's "Seven." His performance was another solid effort in this movie.

The verdict at the end? We won't give you that, but the verdict on the film is 3-1/2 stars.

Levinson's NBC show, "Homicide," is renowned for its camera work and dialogue that's realistic. "Sleepers" has the same impressive qualities that made "Homicide" famous.

TWA Flight 800 still a mystery

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SMITHTOWN, N.Y. — While investigators began dredging the ocean floor for the last pieces of TWA Flight 800, a source said it appeared less likely that a bomb or missile downed the jumbo jet.

The source also discounted the missile theory and said it was the least likely possibility of three scenarios investigators have recited repeatedly — bomb, missile or mechanical malfunction.

"We don't want to assign percentages to any of the three theories, but we are not seeing the type of evidence that we should be seeing if it was a bomb or a missile," the source said Monday.

"It's less likely now that it's a bomb or a missile, because we have a whole lot more of the plane."

With the bomb, there should be a sign of chemical residue or pitting marks in the metal, but investigators have seen no evidence of that, the source said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

A missile would leave a much more destructive path, with entrance and exit holes, which investigators so far have not seen, the source said.

The Paris-bound plane exploded into a fireball minutes after takeoff from New York's Kennedy Airport July 17, killing all 230 on board.

Investigators know the aircraft's nearly empty center fuel tank blew up, but they can't figure out what sparked the explosion — a bomb, a missile or an unprecedented mechanical failure.

Still missing are parts of the center fuel tank, including its measuring probes and scavenge pump, and flooring above the tank, all of which could still provide proof of a missile, the source said.

Investigators resorted to dredging after key parts remained missing despite the recovering of 98 percent of the aircraft by divers.

The diving ended Saturday, and the two 110-foot scallop trawlers began scraping the ocean floor Monday for the missing parts. Officials said they think the parts are either under the sand or have floated away.

The vessels dig into the ocean surface by towing heavy, metal plates with nets behind them. The catch will then be emptied and sifted through for plane debris, which will be taken to a hangar for analysis.

Forgotten tape downs jetliner

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Workers polishing a Peruvian jetliner forgot to remove duct tape they had put over crucial sensors, leading to a crash last month that killed all 70 people aboard, NBC reported.

The Aeroperu Boeing 757 crashed into the Pacific Ocean on Oct. 2 shortly after takeoff from Lima, Peru.

Workers had placed the duct tape over the sensors — which monitor air pressure and help track altitude and airspeed — while polishing the outside of the plane to keep polish from getting into the sensor holes, NBC reported Monday.

In Seattle, Liz Verdier, a spokeswoman for Boeing Commercial Airplane Group, said that only the National Transportation Safety Board could comment on the investigation. NTSB spokesman Allen Pollock said today that any word on the crash's cause would have to come from authorities in Lima. The NTSB is only assisting in the investigation, he said.

Minutes after the plane left the Lima airport, pilot Erick Schreiber radioed that his instruments had failed.

"What's happening? What altitude am I at? Why is my ground crash alarm on? Am I over land or sea?" Schreiber asked air traffic controllers.

In the past 10 years, at least 12 Peruvian planes providing commercial service have crashed in Peru.

The Federal Aviation Administration gives Peruvian regulation of aviation only a conditional safety rating, meaning its inspectors found areas that did not meet International Civil Aviation Organization safety standards.

U.S. considering French proposal to help in Zaire

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The United States is weighing a French proposal to send American troops to Central Africa to provide logistical support for an international force to protect and feed 1.4 million refugees fleeing chaos in Eastern Zaire, an administration official said today.

French President Jacques Chirac proposed Tuesday a force of Europeans and Americans to avert a humanitarian crisis in Zaire.

The U.S. official, asking not to be identified, said no decision has been made, but Chirac's proposal has not been dismissed.

"It's being considered," he said.

Longstanding U.S. policy would allow the United States to provide transport, communications and logistical support for an international force for Central Africa, but sending U.S. troops has been ruled out.

The crisis has worsened considerably in recent days, prompting a flurry of diplomatic activity to deal with the situation's both humanitarian and political aspects.

President Clinton's national security adviser, Anthony Lake, and Undersecretary of State Peter Tarnoff discussed the Zairean crisis late last week with French officials in Paris.

The New York Times reported Wednesday that U.S. officials see using troops as a last resort. The officials said the French proposal requires considerable refinement to answer questions of size, purpose and exit strategy, the newspaper reported.

In his first public comments on the subject, Chirac said Tuesday the force he is suggesting would ensure free travel for Rwandan and Burundian refugees to return home from Zaire.

He stopped short of advocating military intervention in Zaire and said any security force sent to the region should be rapidly replaced by an African force to keep the peace.

Smoking increasing among students despite health risks

AHLEY CELLER
staff reporter

More students are smoking at K-State, according to surveys taken on campus from 1989 to 1995.

These surveys were conducted by Bill Arck, director of Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service at K-State, who found the number of K-State students who smoke has risen from 9 percent in 1989 to 20 percent in 1995.

Watch out, freshmen. If you haven't started smoking, you just might in college.

"College is where I started smoking, because of stress and being around the partying environment. Now I find that I smoke more frequently when I have tests to study for and papers to write, because it helps me relax," Kathy Degen, junior in biology, said.

Regardless of all the information supporting the serious health risks involved with smoking, young people continue to begin the hazardous habit. Arck said this is largely due to the television and print advertising targeted toward the young audiences.

"I think advertising agencies have done a good job targeting the adolescent individual. The fact that Joe the Cool Camel is the second or third most-recognized animated cartoon character for children ages 4 to 6 reiterates that the ad agencies are successful at delivering their message to young people," Arck said.

The increase in smoking at K-State could be the result of more than just the effects of advertising. Arck said he has also noticed an increase in marijuana smoking among young people, and research indicates there is a greater likelihood those who smoke cigarettes will eventually smoke marijuana. This is not to say all people who smoke cigarettes are smoking marijuana, too. But the likelihood increases.

Arck described nicotine as a funny drug, because it has different effects on every individual, which is true with any drug. Some people use it to pick them up and get their energy level to rise, and others say it relaxes them when they feel stressed out. Students around campus said the stress of college and the environment to which they are exposed led them to begin smoking.

"When I have a project due, I take breaks and smoke. I motivate myself by having a cigarette after I get a certain amount done. My breaks seem to become more frequent," Susanne Burke, junior in architecture, said.

"I started in college because everyone around me was doing it, and it became the norm to smoke in social situations. I found that after I began smoking, I not only did it at bars and parties, but I did it when I was stressed about school. Believe it or not, it helps me concentrate when I'm studying," Melissa Waterman, junior in business, said.

The advertising campaigns, which discourage young people from smoking, attribute the problem to

A NATION VOTES: THE DAY AFTER

6 Cabinet posts to depart

▪ Clinton's Cabinet changing drastically for his 2nd term.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The anchors of President Clinton's national security team — Warren Christopher and William Perry — led a snowballing exodus of at least six Cabinet officials Wednesday in a sweeping second-term staff shakeup.

Commerce Secretary Mickey Kantor told Clinton he intended to resign to return to California. Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary, out of favor, also was quitting, officials said.

Transportation Secretary Federico Pena and Housing Secretary Henry Cisneros were expected to leave as well, administration officials said. White House officials were waging a behind-the-scenes campaign for Attorney General Janet Reno to go; she wants to stay.

As the president returned triumphantly to the White House from victory celebrations in Arkansas, Washington buzzed with leaks about resignations and speculation about successors. No formal announcements were expected before a Cabinet meeting on Friday.

Clinton brushed aside questions about his staff, telling reporters on Air Force One, "We just want to savor what happened yesterday."

There were varying reasons for the staff reshuffling. Some, such as presidential senior adviser George ANDREY OZHAROVSKII laughs while meeting Bob Dole Tuesday in Russell. President of the International Discussion Club in Moscow, Ozharovskii was visiting to observe the election.

DEMOCRATIC EXPOSURE

Visiting Russian here to observe American elections

MIRANDA KENNEDY
staff reporter

Russian voters get stickers, too.

Andrey Ozharovskii, who is visiting from Moscow to observe American elections, said many things about Russian and American elections are similar, including getting stickers when you vote.

The Russian stickers have the Russian flag on them — three horizontal stripes that are white, blue and red, and the double-eagle emblem in the middle. "I voted" is printed at the bottom in Russian.

Ozharovskii is here to learn how U.S. elections work. He will report what he learns to Russian election officials, and they will be able to use some of the ideas presented.

Ozharovskii is the president of the International Discussion Club in Moscow. It is a non-governmental voluntary organization, and one of its projects is election observation.

"First, I would like to share my experience," Ozharovskii said.

Ozharovskii said he was interested in national and local elections.

"I'm not so interested in the political issues, like who will win," he said.

He said he is more interested in procedure and techniques, and especially in referendums.

John Daly, associate professor of Russian and military history, is working with Ozharovskii.

"You know we've got propositions here on bars and food," he said. "They don't have anything like that in Russia."

Ozharovskii has been getting most of his election information here from newspapers.

He also watched Bob Dole vote Tuesday in Russell. He said he met some of Dole's family.

"It's quite a small town," he said.

But he said there are many similarities between Russian and American elections. He said candidates also use negative advertisements in Russia.

He said the polling stations here are similar to those in Russia.

Daly visited Russia in May to observe elections there.

He said the International Discussion Club has been doing this kind of political monitoring since before the collapse of communism.

"It's an unofficial pipeline where things can be implemented without the government feeling pressure," Daly said.

Ozharovskii said now Russia has regional elections — similar to those in the United States.

"The regional media plays a major role, but people are not interested in it," he said. "They do not trust that they can change something by voting for a local politician."

Daly said Ozharovskii's observations and report could have an important effect in Russia.

"I think it speaks very highly of our democratic traditions," he said. "But I think it also speaks very highly of a Russian willingness to learn."

Liquor by the drink passes in 5 Kansas counties

SPEED

▶ Liquor by the drink, an issue on the ballot in six counties, will change laws to allow selling wine, beer and cocktails with meals.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Diners apparently will be able to get alcohol with their meals in McPherson, Phillips, Mitchell, Harvey and Cowley counties, but they'll have to settle for coffee or soft drinks in Cheyenne County, according to unofficial results in Tuesday's elections.

Liquor by the drink was one of several local issues decided by voters throughout Kansas in Tuesday's elections.

Business leaders in the counties said for months that all the counties' economies could benefit from changing liquor laws to allow selling wine, beer and cocktails with meals.

In Cowley County, where voters were deciding whether to allow the sale of alcoholic beverages even in businesses that do not sell food, the measure narrowly passed.

Voters in Cheyenne County voted down liquor by the drink by a 982 to 826 count, with all precincts reporting.

In Harvey and McPherson counties, restaurants where food sales are 30 percent of gross receipts will be able to sell alcoholic beverages to customers, according to preliminary results.

In McPherson County, with 94 percent of the precincts in, 6,143 residents approved liquor by the drink, with 5,635 opposed. With all votes counted, the total in Phillips County was 1,510 yes and 1,399 no votes. In Mitchell County it was 1,932 yes votes and 1,595 no.

In Harvey County, Newton economic development and Chamber of Commerce officials said restaurant chains would not locate in the county without liquor by the drink. They also said it would enhance business for local eating establishments.

With fewer than half the votes counted Tuesday night in Harvey County, the measure was on its way to becoming law by nearly 1,000 votes.

A bi-state cultural tax that would be used to renovate Union Station in Kansas City, Mo., won in one Kansas county and lost in another. With 100 percent of the vote counted in Johnson County, unofficial results showed the plan to impose a one-eighth cent sales tax was approved by 106,122 voters, or 60.4 percent, to 69,346 against, or 39.6 percent opposed.

With 100 percent of the vote counted in Wyandotte County, the issue lost by 54.9 percent to 45.1 percent.

Jackson, Platte and Clay counties in Missouri approved the ballot issue. The proposal had to pass only in Johnson and Jackson counties to take effect. It will raise an estimated

CAMPUS

• KSU ENVIRONMENTAL PROFESSIONALS WORKSHOP. Stan Grant, Great Plains/Rocky Mountain Hazardous Substance Research Center, will lead a professional development workshop at 7 p.m. today in Throckmorton 2002. The workshop is titled "Environmental Site Assessments 101," sponsored by the KSU Environmental Professionals.

• DEPARTMENT OF GEOLOGY SEMINAR. The K-State Department of Geology will sponsor a seminar featuring Terry Plank, University of Kansas. Plank will be at 4 p.m. today in Thompson 213 to present "Inductively Coupled Plasma-Mass Spectrometry: Applications to Geological Problems."

• SOCIETY OF PROFESSIONAL JOURNALISTS LECTURE. The Society of Professional Journalists is sponsoring a lecture at 4 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union Big 12 Room. David Demers, assistant professor at the Edward R. Murrow School of Communication at Washington State University, will deliver a lecture titled "Suing the University: One Professor's Story and Advice."

Demers won a $64,000 settlement in April from the University of Wisconsin-River Falls to drop a federal First Amendment lawsuit after school administrators tried to fire him for supporting student journalists to write about student evaluations of faculty and faculty salaries.

• STUDENT CANCER RESEARCH AWARD. All undergraduate students in health-related degree programs are eligible to apply for a $500 Student Cancer Research Award. Applications are available from the Center for Basic Cancer Research in Ackert 125 and 413. Application deadline is Dec. 2.

SPORTS

• BASEBALL LABOR DEAL REJECTED. Baseball owners voted 18-12 Wednesday to reject their proposed five-year labor agreement with the players' association, instead asking the union to modify the deal.

At the end of a deeply divided six-hour meeting that included a National League rebuke to the authority of acting commissioner Bud Selig, owners voted 30-0 to give their ruling executive council the authority to ratify a modified agreement on behalf of all major-league teams.

• 1983 HEISMAN TROPHY WINNER SHOT. Mike Rozier, the 1983 Heisman Trophy winner, was shot several times early Wednesday by an assailant who opened fire on a street corner. Rozier, 35, of Camden, N.J. was listed in satisfactory condition at Cooper Hospital-University Medical Center. He was shot twice in the stomach and once in the hand.

• UCLA'S HARRICK FIRED. Jim Harrick, the second-winningest coach in UCLA basketball history behind the storied John Wooden, was fired Wednesday for an alleged recruiting violation and a false expense report.

Steve Lavin, a 32-year-old assistant, will be the interim coach this year.

• BOSTON COLLEGE SUSPENDS 13; TWO BET AGAINST TEAM. Boston College suspended 13 football players Wednesday for gambling, including two who bet against their school last month in a game with Syracuse.

Thomas Reilly, the Middlesex County district attorney, said the two players did not influence the outcome of the game, which the Orangemen won 45-17.

• DODGERS' HOLLANDSWORTH WINS NL ROOKIE OF THE YEAR. Todd Hollandsworth won the NL Rookie of the Year award Wednesday, a record fifth straight year in which a Los Angeles Dodgers player has captured the honor.

The 23-year-old outfielder led all NL rookies in hits, doubles, home runs, RBIs, stolen bases and fewest errors committed this season. After a slow start, he came on with a strong second half to finish with a .291 average, 12 home runs and 59 RBIs.

Food sales are burden to some Aggieville bars

SETH GURSS
staff reporter

Many of the bars in Riley County took a hit Nov. 5 when Issue 1 on the ballot did not pass.

If it had passed, Issue 1 would have lifted the requirement that bars make 30 percent of their sales from food.

Because Issue 1 did not pass, all drinking establishments in Riley County still have to make 30 percent of their sales in food if they don't want to be shut down by the Alcoholic Beverage Control.

Jeff Denney, manager at Auntie Mae's Parlor, said the passing of the issue would have helped Auntie Mae's and many other bars in Aggieville.

"If it would've passed, it would've taken a big burden off of us. Making 30 percent in food sales is real difficult. It's a pain in the neck," Denney said.

He also said there were many misunderstandings of what would happen if the issue were passed.

"People had a lot of misconceptions about how it will be harder to get cheap food. Actually, they're not related. They would've still gotten good deals," Denney said.

In the future, many of the bars will require patrons to buy a membership card if they want to drink.

Randy Buller, co-owner of Rock-A-Belly Deli, said memberships will be used at many of the bars.

"I think it's going to make them start forcing their membership policies," Buller said.

The membership cards will allow bars to sell what they want, because they will be considered private clubs.

Buller also said Rock-A-Belly will not be affected by the law, because it has no problem meeting the 30-percent requirement.

Mike Robinson, owner of 12th Street Pub said it would probably not change things for other bars.

"I don't know why anything would change, since it hasn't been strictly enforced in the past," Robinson said.

Marijuana-using drivers hard to detect, police say

ASHLEY WEEKLY
staff reporter

Police officers no longer just watch for drivers under the influence of alcohol. A recent nationwide survey found teenagers just as likely to be smoking marijuana as drinking a beer while driving.

The survey was conducted by an Atlanta-based anti-drug group. The survey included 129,560 students between grades 6 and 12. Of those students who use drugs, 10.3 percent said they smoke marijuana in a car while driving, and 8.4 percent said they drink beer in an automobile.

Sgt. Joe Stech, Riley County Police Department, said the number of people driving while under the influence of marijuana has increased in Manhattan in the past two years.

Stech said it is harder to detect a driver under the influence of marijuana than beer.

"It is harder to detect marijuana use. We use a urine test that goes through the Kansas Bureau of Investigation," Stech said.

Stech said officers can request a urine test if the person exhibits probable cause. Poor coordination, blood-shot eyes and an odor on the person's clothing are usually present.

Trooper Dave Corp, Kansas Highway Patrol drug-recognition expert, said the highway patrol has also noticed an increase in the number of marijuana cases in the past 15 months.

"Sixteen drug experts around the state are increasing our ability to locate drivers under the influence of marijuana through the Drug Recognition and Evaluation Program," Corp said.

Bill Arck, director of alcohol and drug education at University Counseling Services, said marijuana affects people on an individual basis.

"Anytime someone uses marijuana, the results vary according to the person. It depends on if they have smoked it before, how often they smoke marijuana and how good the drug was," Arck said.

Arck said marijuana generally affects the users' ability to concentrate and to respond quickly is slowed down, He said these symptoms can occur long after the drug was smoked.

New complex to be built

■ Already-crowded apartment market to squeeze in complex.

JESS LOUK
staff reporter

Students faced with the almost yearly college move next fall will be able to choose from more apartments.

The Capstone Co. of Birmingham, Ala., is building an apartment development north of KSU Stadium. Capstone has 15 other similar complexes in college towns across the nation, including two in the Big 12, one in Norman, Okla., and the other one in College Station, Texas.

Manhattan has 205 apartment complexes. Greg McHenery, county business appraiser, said an apartment complex is any structure that was built to be an apartment building.

"Manhattan is saturated with apartments right now. With the downsizing at Fort Riley, all the complexes in the area will be affected sooner or later," Judy Anderson, manager at Park Place Apartments, said.

The Manhattan apartment market has been tight for the last five or six years, filling at 97-100 percent of capacity, McHenery said.

"If we were to get too many more, we could be getting to the point of overbuilding," McHenery said. "It's not something that most of the landlords and investors have had to deal with before."

The Capstone complex will be located on a 16-acre site at 2215 College Ave. The apartments will be primarily aimed at students, Capstone president Michael Mouron said.

"We obviously shopped our competitors in the area, and we feel we can compete," Mouron said.

Mouron refused to disclose the projected cost of building the complex, citing competition and tax purposes.

The development will have 120 four-bedroom apartments and 108 two-bedroom apartments. Each apartment will be rented fully furnished and have a washer and dryer. Rent will be comparable to other nice student apartments, Mouron said.

The complex clubhouse will be equipped with a student activities center. The center will have computers, typewriters and a copy machine. The complex will also have a pool, ping-pong tables, basketball court, weight room, billiards, foosball tables and sand-volleyball courts.

The clubhouse won't be completed when leasing starts, so Capstone will be doing its leasing from a trailer on site.

"I'd like everyone to come out and see for themselves how nice these apartments are," Mouron said.

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

Snyder set good example dismissing player

WHY WE CARE

Defensive tackle Lance Grace was kicked off the team for an arrest. We hope Coach Bill Snyder maintains these standards in the future.

Before many students even knew a fight had occurred, or that a football player had been arrested, K-State football coach Bill Snyder did the right thing.

He took action.

Defensive tackle Lance Grace, a true freshman, was dismissed from the football team for his involvement in a fight that occurred early Saturday morning outside an Aggieville bar.

The next day, Snyder had a team meeting. In that meeting, he advised players, coaches and other people involved with the team what their responsibilities as members of the football team are. He also booted Grace from the team.

Thank you, coach.

Thank you for listening to us after past incidents with football players and members of the coaching staff.

Thank you for taking into consideration the lives of the people who have been affected by Grace's actions.

And while we thank you, we also want to make one more request.

Please maintain this high standard you just set. Make certain players won't behave in the same manner by making them understand what is at stake — their privilege to play football.

When the next football player falls into trouble, administer the same punishment as you did to Grace, regardless of the player's importance to the team. Players are replaceable. Lives are not.

And for the Aggieville bar community, we have one question: Why was a 19-year-old permitted to be in a drinking establishment at all? Perhaps if the bars in Aggieville maintained stricter policies regarding under-age drinking, the incident Grace was involved in might never have occurred.

Many students, not just football players, drink illegally. Many get in trouble because of drinking. Perhaps Aggieville could be that much safer if those unable to contain their alcohol were prevented from having it.

And remember — not all football players misbehave. Just some. There are more than 90 men on the team. Only a few are deserving of the stereotype often placed on them.

In Our Opinion, an editorial discussed and chosen by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board. For information on who is an editorial board member or how you can become a member, contact Sera Tank at (karolyi@ksu.edu).

ritual enrollment

You cannot burn, lie or cheat your way out of enrollment; get used to it

MY

Erin
MANSUR-SMITH

The legend is that Nichols Hall was gutted by fire in 1968, as a protest against the Vietnam War.

I know the truth. It had nothing to do with the war.

It was because the students were having to go through enrollment week.

Freshmen, hearing that the last section of Public Speaking taught at 9:30 a.m. still had an opening dashed in a frenzy to Willard Hall to win it.

Some poor slob, not as quick as the others perhaps, decided to torch Nichols. Perhaps it was done as a way to distract the others so this student could get to the head of the line.

Of course, all the other freshmen were wise to this slob's ploy. They knew someone would try something crazy to get them away from their spot, and they refused to budge.

They refused to give in to the urge to watch the building blaze to the ground. They were dedicated and stayed strong.

Not that it mattered. A graduating senior with a cruddy adviser who couldn't add ended up getting the class. Those poor suckers who stayed in line not only missed the chance to watch Nichols burn, they had to settle for the 4:30 p.m. on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

(The schmuck who actually lit the match was never identified. Rumor has it the slob dropped out of college and opened up a live bait shop in Florida.)

Ever since then, enrollment has been a ritual we must all endure. I have never been fond of it, and although it has gotten easier the longer I stay around and the more credits I accumulate, my dislike for the process has grown to loathing.

I always thought of enrollment as participating in a game that is a cross between a scavenger hunt and a feeding frenzy.

The first part of the scavenger hunt deals with getting that purple piece of paper with all of your vital statistics on it. That also happens to be the easiest part of it.

The hard part is keeping track of the damned thing. I guarantee you will lose it at least 10 times before you actually get to Willard.

I have found mine in the weirdest places: the freezer, the microwave, underneath the bathroom sink, and even between my mattress and my box springs. (Don't ask.)

I have made it into paper airplanes, basketballs, bookmarks and accidentally used it to line a litter box once.

By the time it makes it to the top of the pile, it's covered by so many coffee stains and sticky fingerprints that it bonds with the basket it is in like a magnet to iron fillings.

I recommend pinning it to your lapel when you get it like your kindergarten teacher did with field-trip notices to your parents.

> "I always thought of enrollment as participating in a game that is a cross between a scavenger hunt and a feeding frenzy."

The second hardest part is tracking down that befuddled and elusive entity known as your adviser. As a freshman, I was convinced my adviser had some sort of secret passage through the bookshelf in his office.

Every time I was sure he was in there and went to see him, he disappeared, somehow getting past me while I camped out in the hallway.

Not that seeing your adviser sometimes helps at all. It is easier to get advice from God via a burning bush than it sometimes is to get good, decisive advice from your adviser.

Most of the time they're tired, cranky and not up on the constant and confusing curriculum changes that go on once every five years or so.

I recommend double checking the requirements for graduation with the undergrad catalog or the department. You do not want to have to flunk Algebra twice because your adviser said you needed it, only to discover during finals week your third time around you didn't.

When you do finally get the paper and the advice and the signature, you get to go over to Willard to stand in line. Take a book and some water, because you are going to be there a while, especially if you are a first-semester student.

(If orientation week didn't teach you your status here is only slightly higher than that of dirt, this will definitely drive the point home.)

And don't plan on getting into those wonderful 11:05 a.m. classes on Tuesdays and Thursdays listed in the line schedule. There are some who assume that those dream classes are closed because people like me who have been here since the dawn of recorded time have stuffed them.

I am here to tell you it is all an illusion. There are, in truth, no classes at that time. They are just posted there to give us false hope and to make us believe some of us can actually have a class after the crack of dawn.

Resign yourself to the truth right now. It is not possible.

Most people walk out of Willard bowed and bloody, with their new schedules in hand, and allow themselves to fall into the trap of relaxing too much in relief.

Fight that urge, my friends. You may have survived the battle but the war of lines, red tape and bureaucracy has not yet been won.

Fee payment is in January.

Let's go to the MOVIES

Movie talk is as important as buttered popcorn

MY

Nikola
ZYTKOW

I admit it.

I'm one of those annoying people who talks in a movie theater.

You know, the one those sunset — "Are you going to talk during the movie?" — commercials are aimed at.

OK, so I don't just talk. I cry, scream and laugh out loud — really loud.

I never intend to make a scene. It just happens.

One minute I'm watching "The Postman (Il Postino)" and popping Gummy Bears, the next I'm sniveling uncontrollably, wiping my nose with my sleeve.

People in the back rows form support groups for me, while the Gummy Bears do the backstroke in the tear puddles at my feet.

Call me crazy (I prefer sensitive), but I don't see how anyone can stay cool during, say, "Dead Man Walking." The tragedy, the drama — I've never felt so much pity for a death-row inmate.

And what about "Mi Familia"? My goodness, just seeing the studly Jimmy Smits in so much pain is enough to drive any woman (or man?) to tears.

Oh, and remember that scene in "Bridges of Madison County" when Clint Eastwood just stands there, rain streaming down his thinning hair and withered face.

Poor guy, all he wanted was to take pictures of a couple of bridges and be on his way. Damn the ways of a woman. Damn Iowa.

By the end of the movie, I was seriously certifiable.

For those who missed these epic flicks, they are on video.

But it's not just the tear-jerkers that set me off. No, it's also the woman-power movies. Chick flicks such as "Steel Magnolias," "Waiting to Exhale" and "First Wives Club" make me want to stand up and say "Amen, sister."

> But it's not just the tear-jerkers that set me off. No, it's also the woman-power movies. Chick flicks such as "Steel Magnolias," "Waiting to Exhale" and "First Wives Club" make me want to stand up and say "Amen, sister."

Wait a minute. I usually do say that — much to everyone's dismay.

It's good to see women taking control of their lives. Don't you think?

There's nothing worse then stupidity on screen. We're all tired of the helpless woman who goes back to the cheatin' hubby, after only a bit of coaxing ("Terms of Endearment"). It makes me want to say — "No girl, don't be a fool. Make him buy you that Lexus if he wants you back."

Wait a minute. I usually do say that.

I often wonder about people who don't talk during movies. How can you not respond to the sexually violent scenes in "Sleepers"? Have we become so desensitized to violence that we are not shocked at the grisly murder scenes in "Natural Born Killers"?

Maybe it's just me. Maybe I have an overly active imagination. Perhaps I've led a sheltered life. I don't know. Maybe I'm just an exhibitionist.

Of course, I'm not talking about such disasters as "Showgirls" or "A Very Brady Sequel." Nor am I talking about such frights as "Children of the Corn II" or "Friday the 13th Part VI: Jason Lives." These movies are the epitome of stupidity.

These horrors follow some basic rules: Any people who take off any portion of their clothing will die soon (very soon). Anyone running in the woods will fall. And if you were tormented by high-school classmates, chances are you'll become a Jason or be spared by Jason. Hey, Jason might be a killer, but he's got compassion for his fellow degenerates.

I used to pretend to tolerate these primitive shows to please certain ex-boyfriends. But no more. Finito. These days I boycott these dim-witted flicks and instead force my date to endure "How to Make an American Quilt" or "The Truth About Cats and Dogs."

You know you've got a winner if he'll sit through an hour of that mushy mess.

But that's just the first stage.

Round two includes talking about the movie. Yes, women love to dissect and discuss, oh and question.

"Honey, would you ever leave me for a blond, blue-eyed beauty with large, firm breasts?" (after a viewing of "First Wives Club").

Or "Honey, would you want me to sleep with someone if it meant a million big ones?" (After viewing "Indecent Proposal").

But back to being, let's call it, expressive, in the movie theater.

Go rent a video, you might suggest.

Sorry, no can do.

There's nothing like the thrill of the big screen. Nothing like the smell of greasy popcorn and Burger King meal deals people sneak into the theater. Nothing like the sticky floor and the kindness of strangers (the lady next to me handing me a tissue — in hopes of muffling me).

But the truly tantalizing part of the movie theater experience is the crowd. Yes, the bonding experience we all share as we gasp at "The Ghost and the Darkness," laugh at "The Nutty Professor" and sigh during "A Love Affair."

Makes me just want to sniff out loud and say "Ahhh!"

Wait. I do say that.

Future Sam Malones learn drink-serving skills at Aggieville Bartending 101 class sponsored by K-State's Future Entrepreneurs of America

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

Lucky BrewGrille was the hot spot for future bartenders Sunday and Monday as the 54 people who signed up for Bartending 101 attended their first sessions.

Bartending 101 is the most significant fundraiser for the Future Entrepreneurs of K-State, Aimee Bass said. Bass is the events coordinator for Bartending 101.

"We had so many people sign up, we added a session on Sunday," Bass, junior in marketing, said.

For $35, attendees acquire a bartending manual, hands-on mixology, a certificate of completion and a T-shirt. The funds raised from Bartending 101 are helping send several members of the Future Entrepreneurs to a conference.

"We are sending seven representatives to the Collegiate Entrepreneurs of the Midwest conference in Chicago this Saturday." Sheldon Murphy, Future Entrepreneurs president, said.

Being a responsible bartender is stressed during the course of Bartending 101, Murphy said.

Brian Frazier and three friends are taking Bartending 101 together. Frazier read about the class and thought it would be fun. He can't work as a bartender until he's 21 but knows he had to have the class to be a bartender.

"I might as well take the class. I've always been interested in bartending since I started watching 'Cheers,' " Frazier, a freshman in agricultural economics, said.

The class covered a lot of the stuff people don't think about, he said, like serving certain drinks in certain glasses. He said he was surprised at how much goes into bartending.

Although Melissa Wilson is still a senior in high school, she has been interested in bartending for a long time, she said. Some of her friends are in school at K-State, and when they read about the class, they signed her up for it.

"I like talking to people, so I thought this would be a good job, kind of a stepping-stone for the future," she said.

Wilson's parents owned a bar when they were first married, and she has heard a lot of their stories. She said her mother thinks it is a good idea, and both parents are very excited.

So far, Bartending 101 has proved helpful to Wilson. When she got her manual, she learned things she never knew about bartending. She said the first class went well but got kind of slow toward the end.

"We were taught to pour drinks and had to practice over and over again," Wilson said.

One of the last people to practice pouring shots during his session, Chris Limbird, a fifth-year senior in electrical engineering and physics, said he thought he did OK. Limbird said he watched bartender Jeff Harbell, an employee of Lucky BrewGrille, as he counted while pouring a shot.

"I was counting in my head, but my three was shorter than his. I think I got the count down," Limbird said.

Limbird and three friends signed up for the class together, because they thought it would be fun to do.

"I just think every guy, in the back of his mind, wants to own a bar someday," Harbell said.

Cats for Cans prompts contest in OSAS office

ASHLEY WEEKLY
staff reporter

The Office of Student Activities and Services staff is challenging the K-State senators in a food drive to benefit Cats for Cans.

"Food drives are meaningful," said Kathleen Copple, OSAS graduate assistant and food drive coordinator. "People feel more comfortable with giving food, because it goes directly to the source. Therefore, people do not worry about where the cash goes. It is more than just pocketbook charity."

The food drive is targeted toward collecting food for infants and children.

Copple said many food drives collect food for adults, but very few target youth.

"We are targeting our collections towards infants and children. We thought we would target a certain audience to help meet the neglected area of donations for youth," Copple said.

The competition is not just between the staff and senators. The office has also challenged other functional areas including the Office of Student Life and the Women's Center.

Copple said the administration has also been sent a proposal to join the challenge, but have not yet committed.

Kelley Fink, interim coordinator of student activities, said if each challenge is met, OSAS hopes to collect about 400 items. Each group has been asked to raise either 100 cans or 55 cans and $15.

Copple said, "The competition is almost like revenge. It encourages people to donate, because most people like to win."

Aubrey Abbott, junior in political science and senate chair, said senators have the numbers in their favor to win.

"I think there is no doubt that the senators will win. Competition makes it more fun for everyone and adds incentive. It is a good cause," Abbott said.

Copple said the food drive started Tuesday and goes through Nov. 22. Anyone can donate to the food drive by taking cans to the OSAS office in the K-State Student Union.

CIA denies involvement in 1980s cocaine ring

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The CIA says it has not found any record of a relationship between itself and Nicaraguan drug dealers or others who allegedly operated a 1980s cocaine ring in California and funneled the profits to a CIA-run guerrilla army.

The intelligence agency's assertion was contained in documents filed Monday in U.S. District Court in San Diego. A copy of the filing was made available today by the CIA.

William H. McNair, the information review officer for the CIA, said a search of agency records found no evidence of any kind of operational, contractual or employment relationship with Nicaraguan cocaine dealer Danilo Blandon, Los Angeles crack cocaine dealer "Freeway" Rick Ross, former California police officer Ronald Lister or David Scott Weekly, whom Lister has named as his CIA contact.

The legal declaration was first reported in the Los Angeles Times and the Washington Post.

In the declaration, the CIA said it knew as early as 1984 that Norvin Meneses was a key cocaine trafficker. But it said a 1986 search of the agency's records at the FBI's request failed to produce any evidence of a CIA relationship with Meneses.

A censored document included in the court filing said that in December 1984 a source, whose name was deleted, reported that a Norwin (Nemeses) was apparently well known as the Nicaraguan mafia.

The document, which was headed "Three Persons Claiming CIA Affiliation," also said Nemeses was described as the kingpin of narcotics traffickers in Nicaragua before the fall of Somoza.

The CIA inspector general is investigating allegations that the agency was involved in the introduction of crack cocaine into the United States.

Inspector General Frederick Hitz has said it might take months to examine fully records of the relationship between the CIA and Nicaraguan Contra members implicated in 1980s cocaine trafficking in California.

Hitz said recently, however, that a preliminary investigation found no credible information to support allegations raised in a series of articles published in August by a California newspaper, the San Jose Mercury News.

The Mercury News' three-part series, "Dark Alliance," detailed how a Bay Area drug ring sold tons of cocaine to the street gangs of South-Central Los Angeles and funneled millions in drug profits to a CIA-run guerrilla army. The series traced the crack cocaine explosion to the two Nicaraguan cocaine traffickers, Meneses and Blandon, who were civilian leaders of the Frente Democratica Nicaraguense (FDN), an anti-communist commando group formed and run by the CIA during the 1980s.

Blandon, who is now an undercover informant for the Drug Enforcement Administration, said in federal court recently that his biggest customer was the Los Angeles dealer, Ross, who turned Blandon's cocaine into crack and distributed it to the Crips and Blood street gangs.

Media critics and other newspapers, including the Los Angeles Times, the Washington Post and the New York Times, have questioned the Mercury News' findings.

Wildcats will eat Hawks for dinner while writer dines on tasty steak

Soon — very soon — I'll be eating a steak dinner.

Three days.

A little more than 48 hours and counting.

It all comes down to one game.

One contest to decide who will reign supreme in the glorious state of Kansas, at least as far as football is concerned.

I'll wait until the annual KU sports editor vs. K-State sports editor face-off in Friday's paper before beginning to bash those football impostors up the road.

I don't want you guys thinking I hate KU or anything.

I don't go to Boston College, obviously, so don't expect me to lay down any money on the outcome of the game.

MY VIEW

Shana NEWELL

But if I had to sit down and put money on it, I would have to say K-State all the way. And not because I go to K-State. Not because I am the sports editor of the Wildcats' student newspaper. Not because I bleed purple. Not because the mere thought of being in Lawrence next week forces me to re-digest what I ate for lunch yesterday.

It's simple.

K-State has a better football team — flat-out.

The Wildcats aren't better just because they're ranked and the Jayhawks aren't.

And they're not better because they've got Bill a.k.a. God Snyder instead of Grinnin' Glen Mason at the helm, although I know people who will argue the Cats' superiority based solely on that fact and will die professing Snyder's immortality.

K-State is definitely not better because it has better fans, although I haven't heard any of our football players PUBLICLY denounce the fans.

So you want to know why I would pick K-State? Why I bet a friend of mine — a K-State student no less — a dinner that the Jayhawks will not win? (What's he thinking?)

I expected that from you, my Wildcat brethren, and in response have compiled a top-five list of reasons why K-State will beat KU Saturday.

5) Brian Kavanagh vs. Matt Johner. (Oh, excuse me, it's Ben Rutz this week, right?)

Ole Kav is No. 2 in the conference in passing efficiency, with 138.6 points, second only to Colorado's Koy Detmer. He has completed 118 of 199 passes for 1,401 yards and 14 touchdowns.

Johner — I mean Rutz — has a mere 123.5 passing efficiency.

I know, I know. It's not fair to say, because he's only played in seven games and only started one. But heck, can't he throw for more than 393 yards and three touchdowns? Not in one game.

4) Can we say No. 2 defense? That's right, folks. K-State's defensive unit is ranked No. 2 in the Big 12. The Wildcats have allowed only 2,370 yards of offense and a mere 14 touchdowns. Their opponents average 296.3 yards per game.

3) At the other end of the spectrum is KU's defense. A struggling lot of fellas, the Hawk defense has apparently lost the definition of defense.

(Oh, that's right. They don't have smarts over there in Lawrence, do they?)

> "But if I had to sit down and put money on it, I would say K-State all the way. And not because I go to K-State."

The Jayhawks have given up 3,396 yards of offense, an average of 424.5 yards per game. Only Baylor's and Iowa State's defenses are worse, plopping KU's defense solidly at No. 10 in the league.

2) A battle in the kicking game has been happening on both teams. Sometimes the kicking teams do well, and sometimes they don't. Apparently, the Wildcats do well more often than the Jayhawks. K-State is averaging 37 yards a punt on 46 attempts, while KU is averaging 36.2 yards on 44 attempts.

1) Speaking of the kicking game, it's all part of a larger scheme called special teams. And when you spell special, you only need five letters — C, A, N, T and Y. Put them together now, Jayhawks, and you get Canty — Chris Canty.

Not only can this boy defend, but he can also catch, too. Oh, and don't forget his No. 6 ranking in the Big 12 on punt returns. Canty has brought in 23 punts and has gained 242 yards off them, averaging 10.52 yards per punt.

But who can forget the 58-yard punt return for a touchdown against Missouri? I still dream about that little run.

And a final kicker. K-State has won the last three meetings with those wankers up the road, and four of the last five. What makes this year any different?

The thought of that steak dinner is already making me salivate.

Hawks, Cats clash; K-State wins 3-1

LAWRENCE — K-State extended its winning streak to three matches and maintained its dominance over KU with a 15-7, 10-15, 15-4, 15-5 win over the Jayhawks Wednesday in Allen Field House.

It looked to be a rout early, with junior setter Devon Ryning opening the match with a pair of aces, the first two points in a seven-point run to open game one. The Hawks would never pull closer than three points.

But game two was a disaster. After winning the first three points, the Wildcats let KU crawl back in.

The collapse began at 6-3, K-State. A pair of aces started a 10-1 run that gave KU a 7-13 lead. K-State would recover to score three more points. But by then the game was finished, with the Jayhawks stealing the second game 10-15.

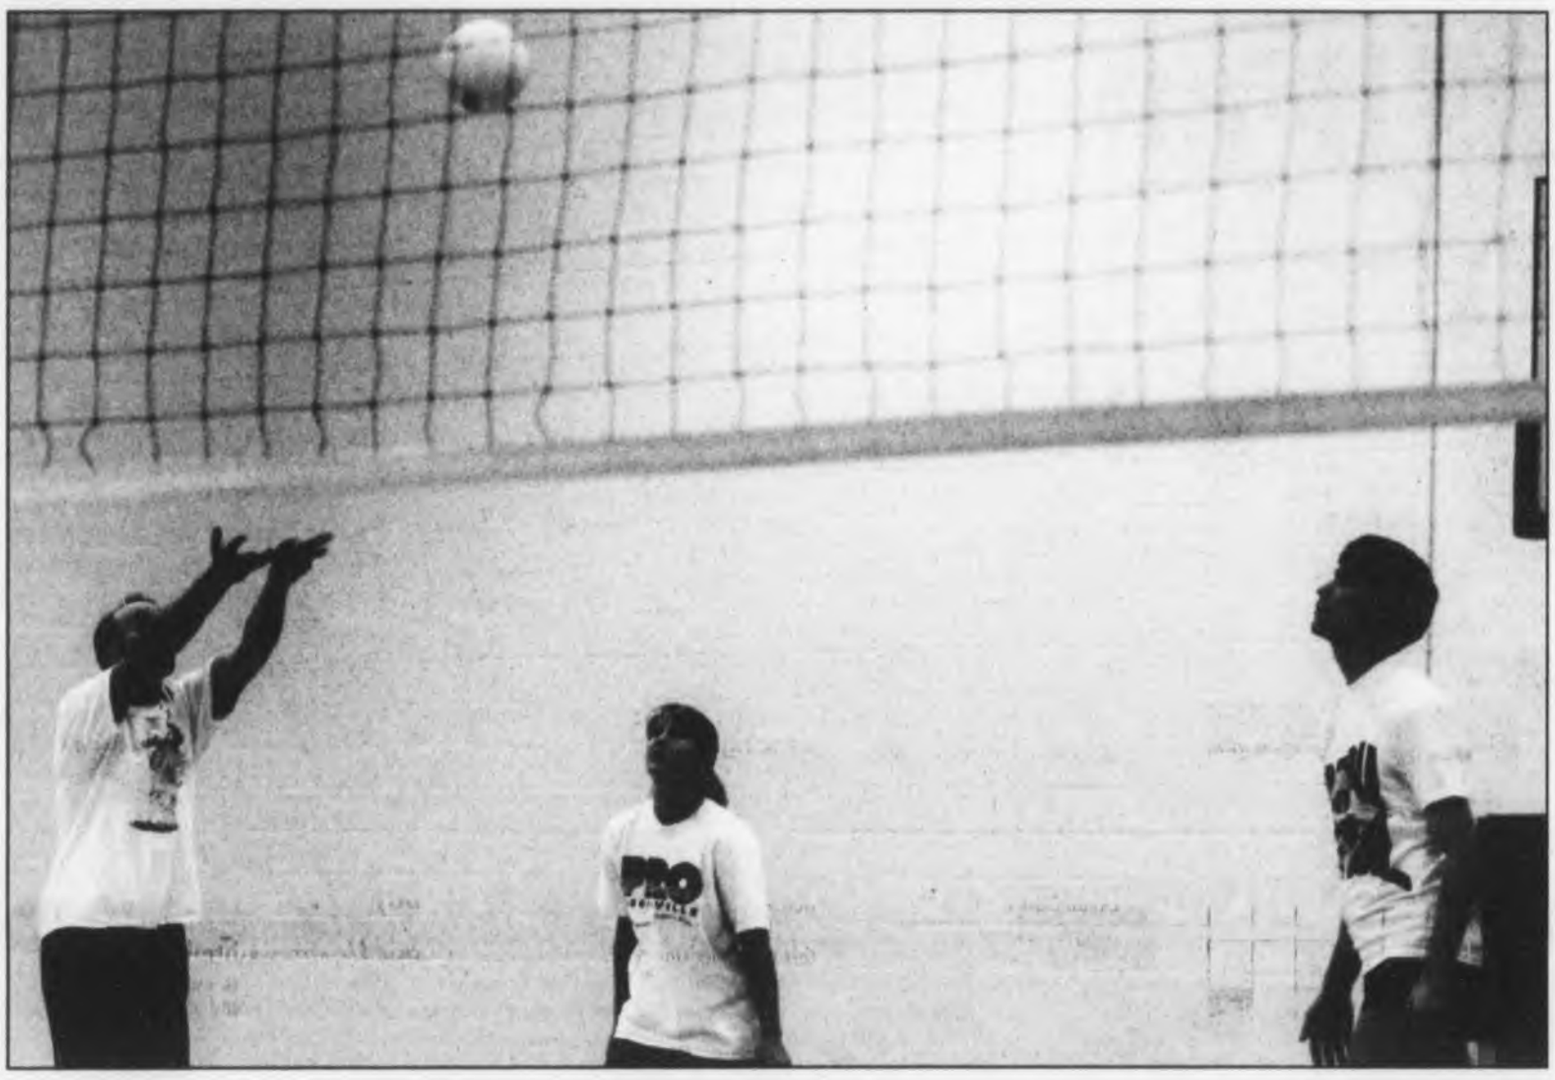
"They came out, and they were ready to play," K-State coach Jim Moore said of KU. "I said we were going to sub this game, and maybe they thought, 'Gosh, this game is in the bag.' "

But Moore said the letdown was not entirely bad.

"In a way, it's good for us," he said. "If you win and you win every game, and people just roll over for you, it doesn't do you any good at all. This was a wake-up call."

And it worked. KU scored the first point of the third game, but after that the Cats took over. K-State leaped out to a 9-4 lead before running off six consecutive points to take game three.

Game four was just as ugly. The Wildcats had match point at 14-2 before allowing KU its first back-to-back points of the game.



With K-State up 14-5, freshman swing hitter/middle blocker Mandy Whitfield stuffed an attack to seal the match.

Sophomore swing hitter Kim Zschau, who won Big 12 Player of the Week honors last weekend for her performance against Texas Tech and Baylor, led the Cats with 14 kills.

Freshman swing hitter Abbie Brown added 12 kills and led the Cats in hitting percentage with .381. Senior middle blocker Kate DeClerk also had 12 kills.

The Cats return to action Saturday, when they take on Oklahoma in Norman. Moore said K-State has been preparing for the match against the Sooners, a team the Wildcats have a history of struggling against, all week.

"Our main focus this week has been Oklahoma, It has to be," Moore said.

Intramural volleyball is set to serve and Beta Theta Pi leads the way

DAVE GUNTHER
contributing writer

Intramural volleyball began its season last week at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex.

Steve Martini, associate director of recreational services, said there are many competitive teams this year.

"We have a lot of good teams this year," Martini said. "The team that won it all last year is back with a lot of last year's players returning."

The defending champion is Beta Theta Pi, led by Sean Reynolds, senior in animal science and industry. The Beta's are undefeated in fraternity play and have only lost in all-University finals.

"We have four returning players from last year and two freshmen," Reynolds said. "We should be ranked No. 1 in the fraternity bracket."

Mike Stockton, junior in fashion design, is also on the team. He and Reynolds have played together since since high school.

"We played together in high school. Mike and I have played together for five years now. We have some good players on our team," Reynolds said.

Stockton and teammate Dave Leever, junior in interior design, are on the K-State men's volleyball club.

"We are always practicing year-round," Reynolds said. "We scrimmage teams in the preseason, and play beach volleyball in the summer. Mike and I have won the intramural doubles championship the past two years in a row."

There is also other talent in the intramural fraternity bracket. Beta Theta Pi is looking at Theta Xi as its toughest competition.

"A few of their players are on the K-State men's volleyball club. They are pretty good, and we will probably see them in the fraternity bracket finals. The winner of that game will take on the winner of the independent bracket for the all-University title," Reynolds said.

The league tournament will be after Thanksgiving, and only teams with a .500 winning percentage will get to participate.

"We are shooting for the All-University Championship again this year," Reynolds said. "Hopefully, we can beat those other teams and take it home."

Women's team receives 1st verbal commitment

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

With the fall signing period less than a week away, K-State has received its first verbal commitment to the women's basketball team.

Morgen Finneran, a 5'10" guard/forward from Granbury, Texas, chose K-State over Southwest Texas State, Texas Women's and Southwestern Louisiana.

Leta Andrews, head coach at Granbury High School, said K-State's commitment to academics and athletics helped sell Finneran on the program. But Finneran said the coaches sealed the deal.

"It was the enthusiasm of the coaches," Finneran said. "They were so fired up about the program and where they're going with it. They sold me on their dream."

Three more players visited K-State within the last week. Jackie Stiles from 1A Claflin High School came to Manhattan Friday and managed to squeeze a third-place finish in the 1-2A State Cross Country Championships in the middle of a two-day visit.

Another point guard prospect, Wichita native Kendra Jones, visited K-State Wednesday. Jones, 5'7", has helped Wichita Northwest High School win two city-league championships in three years. She averaged 17.5 points and 3.5 rebounds last year and was named to the 6A all-state team.

"Kendra's very fast, very athletic," David Royse, Jones' coach at Wichita Northwest, said. "She's probably as quick a player as I've ever coached.

K-State's lone juco prospect, 6'1" guard/forward Ewa Laskowska from Independence Community College, also visited Manhattan last weekend.

Laskowska helped Independence to the NJCAA National Championship game last year and was named a first-team all-American by Dick Vitale's College Basketball Yearbook.

Denmark ready, willing, able

Denmark

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

With Joe Gordon and Lamar Chapman sidelined, K-State's secondary needs people to step up.

Junior cornerback Demetric Denmark, at 5'9" and 175 pounds, has done just that.

Denmark, a transfer from Dodge City Community College who redshirted last season, came to K-State as a running back, although he did play some cornerback at Dodge.

BATTLE in the HEARTLAND
A MULTI-PART SERIES

"Demetric has made remarkable progress," Snyder said.

"He's gotten better through the course of the year, and he's gotten better as he's learned the position. He's a hard worker who has talent. I can't think of a day he hasn't gotten better."

Denmark has tallied 14 tackles, 10 of them unassisted. He leads the team in passes broken up with 12.

But the greatest thing about Denmark, Snyder said, is his speed. Considered one of the fastest on the team, if not the quickest, Denmark said confidence isn't a question.

"I feel very confident in myself and my abilities," he said.

Although some might expect Denmark to feel as though he were in the hot seat with pressure to perform up to Gordon's all-American status, Denmark said he doesn't.

"Not really. I don't look at it like that. I know I can do the job, and my teammates are confident I can go out and do the job," he said.

With all-Americans Gordon and Canty in the defensive backfield, K-State's secondary was dubbed an all-American one.

Denmark could soon be another notch in the books for K-State.

"He hasn't won any awards yet, that's for sure," Snyder said. "But he will. He certainly has the talent."

K-State expects KU to line wide receiver Isaac Byrd up against Denmark, rather than Canty, and Denmark said he doesn't mind.

"I will be covering him some, and I've got no problem with that," Denmark said. "They'll come after me. I want that. I'm ready. Let's get it on."

One big complaint I hear about the media is about their unresponsiveness. I'm told we never listen to our readers.

I've never been that way. Instead, I depend on my readers to tell me what is cool. This week we take a peek at the readers' recommendations.

SWOON Dating, Mating, Relating (http://www.swoon.com/)

SWOON is designed for college-aged people of both sexes.

It does a good job at presenting stories that are interesting to our generation.

They use graphics well to help make this page pleasing to the eye.

It ends up having that slick, magazine look that is popular on the Internet right now.

Most respected journalists would see this page as pure fluff. Most stories seem to promise much more than they deliver.

For example, the story "Cheap Date" only discusses one date.

Almost all stories are about individuals whom I have never heard of. It's much like reading the National Enquirer without the celebrities.

This page features a personals section that is not too bad (for personals) but doesn't have a lot of entries. (But Destiny can call me anytime!)

One of the biggest troubles I had with the page is that it is slow at times.

Its server commits errors often. This seems to happen mostly in the personals section.

The Jolly Roger (http://jollyroger.com/beaconway/jollyroger.html)

Wondering what happened to that great American culture? It has hit the high seas and is now sailing across the Net.

This is a wonderful magazine. It is usually a joy to sit down and read.

In design, it has kept it simple using animated gifs to add a little color to the page.

The stories range from some of the best to the worst, but it is always fun to find the good with the bad.

My biggest difficulty with the page is the constant political rhetoric being spewed by the page's authors.

When did literature become the chief weapon of conservatives? (I'm sure Bob Dole wishes he had used it.)

If you can deal with excessive conservatism, I recommend visiting this page, perhaps with a cappuccino.

Astronomy Picture of the Day (http://antwrp.gsfc.nasa.gov/apod/astropix.html)

If there is one site out of this week's review that I hope readers visit, it is this one.

This is by far one of the best sites on the Internet.

Each day the authors include a new picture with an explanation about what the picture is about, and its significance. It's written so anyone can make sense of what is written.

The thing that really sets this site off is its use of hypertext to help explain points.

Everything is cross-referenced. So if the explanation mentions Venus, past Astronomy Pictures Of the Day are linked.

This cross-linking allows surfers to easily spend hours looking at our cosmos.

The past APOD are contained in an archive listed by date.

I love this site. It can also be used for Windows wallpaper. If you are using Netscape 3.0 click your right mouse button on an image and pick "Set as Wallpaper."

Presto! Your wallpaper has changed.

Band's future bright with second release

ANDREW FRANCIS
staff reporter

Lyrics about lies and love are at the heart of Jackopierce's second album, "Finest Hour."

"Finest Hour" is the follow-up to the band's 1994 A&M Records debut, "Bringing on the Weather."

When "Bringing on the Weather" was released, Jackopierce was a duo with Jack O'Neill and Carey Pierce both as vocalists and guitarists.

Bassist Clay Pendergrass and drummer Earl Darling were added to the band in early 1995.

The addition of Pendergrass and Darling broadened Jackopierce's overall sound.

Jackopierce maintained an acoustic sound on "Bringing on the Weather," but now the band is more pop-electric.

Jackopierce's sound has a pop-rock feel to it that borders on adult-contemporary rock and alternative music. Listeners who enjoy bands such as Jars of Clay and the Lemonheads may think Jackopierce has recaptured an innocent sound.

"Six Page Letter," the first track on the album, has a feel-good rock sound to it that combines a fast tempo with upbeat lyrics. The track is reminiscent of the Gin Blossoms.

Although this is Jackopierce's second album, the addition of Pendergrass and Darling makes "Finest Hour" a second debut album for the band.

Overall, Jackopierce does a good job combining the musical talents of the four musicians, but there are times the talents collide.

After the band has a chance to tour and play songs for audiences on a daily basis, the talents will probably melt together.

"Get It Together" reveals how well O'Neill and Pierce harmonize their vocals, but the melody lacks originality and begs for a deeper sound.

A solo by guest artist Benmont Tench, keyboardist for Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers, attempts to broaden the song, but falls short.

The musical chemistry of O'Neill and Pierce is evident. They were able to get Jackopierce recognition as well as a second album.

Adding Pendergrass and Darling does broaden the band's sound. As with any band, it will take time for the two newcomers to jell with the songwriting of O'Neill and Pierce.

As long as Jackopierce can show its audiences its potential as musicians, its future looks bright.

The band is in the middle of a month-long tour that includes a stop at Lawrence's Granada Theater. Tickets will cost $12.50.

Stephanopoulos, made no secret of the fact they are worn out. Outgoing chief of staff Leon Panetta is considering running for governor of California. Some officials — Hazel O'Leary and Janet Reno — were nudged toward the door. In general, Clinton said he wants to reinvigorate his presidency.

Christopher and Perry are highly regarded but, after countless trips to world trouble spots, have tired of the job.

Mickey Kantor, a political warrior who helped engineer Clinton's 1992 victory, is bored at Commerce. He was believed to be interested in becoming White House chief of staff or attorney general, but now he is said to have dropped those ideas.

Reno upset the White House overseeing Waco and Whitewater. Popular in Washington, she is not considered a team player. Recognizing she would be tough to shove aside, White House officials are waging a campaign against her, noting her battle with Parkinson's disease. Her doctors said she has a mild case, and it is not a problem.

Labor Secretary Robert Reich is welcome to stay, officials said, but appears inclined to leave.

Reich told associates he'll talk about his future over the weekend with his family, which has moved back to Boston.

Federico Pena wounded himself by mishandling the ValuJet crash. Chicago Mayor Richard Daley's brother, Bill, is a possible successor.

Henry Cisneros, while popular with Clinton, is being investigated for allegedly concealing information about payments to a former mistress.

Republicans, strengthening their grip on the Senate, will have veto power over all Cabinet replacements. That raises the possibility that Clinton, in a bipartisan gesture, would install some Republicans in high administration positions.

"It's a chance for him to reach out and be very bipartisan and even appoint some Republicans in a way which indicates a real willingness to work together," House Speaker Newt Gingrich said.

Clinton's former political strategist, Dick Morris, also said it would be a good idea to put Republicans in the Cabinet.

The president also could try to avoid ugly confirmation battles by turning to readily acceptable choices, such as retiring senators.

For example, Democrat Sam Nunn of Georgia and Republican William Cohen of Maine both have backgrounds in defense issues. Former Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell also is available.

A few Cabinet secretaries appear likely to stay. Among them are Donna Shalala at Health and Human Services, Robert Rubin at Treasury, Dan Glickman at Agriculture and Bruce Babbitt at Interior. CIA Director John Deutch is a leading candidate for the Pentagon job.

Education Secretary Richard Riley said he is tired but happy and intends to speak with Clinton about his future. His job is safe if he wants to stay, White House officials said. So is Veterans Secretary Jesse Brown's job.

Christopher informed Clinton of his decision Tuesday night as they savored the president's re-election. Even so, the secretary plans to go to Cairo, Egypt and Paris next week for conferences on economic development in the Middle East and on Bosnia's recovery from war.

Perry told Clinton he wants to leave for personal reasons but will stay a few more months until a successor is confirmed, officials said.

Speculation about the next secretary of state has centered on Anthony Lake, the president's national security assistant; Madeleine Albright, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations; and Mitchell.

Other possibilities include Richard Holbrooke, who helped negotiate a settlement of the war in Bosnia, retired Gen. Colin Powell, Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., and Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbott, a long-time Clinton friend.

Former White House deputy chief of staff Erskine Bowles is considered a top candidate to replace Panetta, but he is reluctant to leave North Carolina. Deputy National Security Adviser Sandy Berger and Deputy Chief of Staff Harold Ickes also are candidates.

Democratic National Committee Chairman Christopher Dodd also said he will be leaving that post, probably in January.

$118 million in the next five years to help renovate the station and create a new Science City.

Riley County voters approved a $10.8 million bond issue to build a new Law-Enforcement Center in Manhattan. Unofficial results showed the proposal to pass a half-cent sales tax over the next four years passed by a vote of 10,153 to 8,456. The complex will include a new jail and all police facilities.

Other issues included:

• In McPherson County, Moundridge school district voters approved $4.5 million to renovate existing buildings and construct two additional buildings at the high school.

• In Harvey County, Sedgwick school district, voters approved a $3.2 million bond issue to construct additions and renovations to the industrial arts/technology building and the high school.

• In Reno County, Fairfield, $4.5 million to build or purchase an elementary school and make improvements to the high school and middle school appeared to be losing.

• Voters in Osborne and Ellsworth counties voted against allowing corporate hog production in their counties.

peer pressure, Arck said. However, at the college level, it may not be peer pressure that causes people to start, as much as it is just being around a smoking environment.

"I don't think it's a matter of pressure from your peers, because no one is pressuring their friends to smoke all the time," Diane Williams, senior in modern languages, said. "But so many students do it, and after a while, being around that environment makes people want to do it, too.

"Smoking is definitely used as a social tool. It gives me something to do when I'm drinking or hanging out with friends, and I've seen people use it as a way to begin a conversation with someone they want to meet."

Smoking in college could be due to a combination of pressures and stress. But that doesn't take away from the fact that of the effects of all drugs, the effects of tobacco products are the No. 1 killer of people in this country, taking the lives of 430,000 people a year, Arck said.

"Smoking cigarettes is legal. You can smoke them until you're blue in the face. It's your decision, but it's a very poor one," Arck said.

thrill of the HUNT

College students can benefit from wildlife/parks offer

stories by John Berggren

If you are sick of getting ripped off by out-of-state fees, the Department of Kansas Wildlife and Parks is willing to give college students a break.

If you are an out-of-state resident with a student ID, you can buy an in-state hunting license for $15. That's quite a break from the $65 non-resident hunting license.

Before buying a hunting license, everyone born after July 1, 1957, must have completed a hunter's safety course.

The course offered in Kansas is a free, 10-hour course that teaches the basics of hunting and gun safety. Upon successful completion, a certificate is awarded and is needed to buy a license.

Another blessing for K-State students is the abundance of public hunting in the Manhattan area. Tuttle Creek State Park, Milford Lake and Fort Riley all offer land to hunt on.

To hunt on the Fort Riley post, people must purchase a permit along with a hunting license. Check-points at the entrances to Fort Riley have maps to tell people where they can hunt.

Hunting at Tuttle Creek and Milford requires only a hunting license, and each offers a different atmosphere.

"Tuttle Creek is more prone to flooding and has more weedy areas," Chuck Beaver, Kansas Wildlife and Parks biologist, said. "Milford is an easier hunt, because it has smaller weeds. Tuttle has bigger weeds and therefore gets less hunting pressure and seems to produce birds longer into the season."

Hunting is also open to the public on several private lands due to a Walk In Hunting Area program set up by the state this year.

Farmers and landowners were given the opportunity by WIHA to lease their land to the Kansas Department of Wildlife for public hunting.

The land has been posted, and most counties in the state offer places to hunt without asking permission. A list of maps can be picked up at the Kansas Department of Wildlife and the State Parks office at Tuttle Creek.

Hunting can also be done on private land with permission of the land -owner.

"Tips for getting permission are to No. 1 ask first," Beaver said. "Secondly, many landowners have family or friends that hunt their land. Usually if you ask these type of people after the Thanksgiving holiday, they will be more than glad to let people hunt."

Hunting season opens statewide this weekend

Saturday marks the beginning of pheasant- and quail-hunting seasons. For many hunters, it translates to one of the most exciting times of the year.

Not much has changed regulation-wise in the sport, but population-wise, hunters will find this to be an odd year in Kansas.

Generally the southwest portion of the state is known for producing the highest number of birds, but because of a dry spring, that won't be the case this year.

"Statewide, we definitely are not classifying this year to produce good to excellent numbers," Chuck Beaver, Kansas Wildlife and Parks biologist, said.

"Last year, we were in the fair range around the Manhattan area, and this year should be as good as last. We have an improved quail population in this general region," he said.

"This is not prime pheasant range, but the pheasants here have done OK. In the southwest portion of the state, the numbers look to be as bad as they've been in 20 years," he said.

The low bird numbers in southwest Kansas are due to the drought-like conditions weathered in the spring. Winter wheat was poor in the southwest portion, the primary nesting habitat for pheasants here.

The rest of the state, however, is predicted to produce a normal number of birds.

"The better hunting is going to be in the northeast and north-central parts of Kansas this year," Beaver said.

2 military trainers charged with rape

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Army has brought charges of rape and sexual harassment against two military trainers at the Army Ordnance Center at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md.

The Pentagon said Thursday it had identified more than a dozen victims — all female recruits in their second eight weeks of military training.

Up to 1,000 women, who trained at the military facility, are being interviewed by the Army to determine if there are additional victims.

Maj. Gen. Robert D. Shadley, commander of the Ordnance Center, said one captain and two drill sergeants were charged.

Details of the allegations were released at a news conference at Ft. Monroe, Va., headquarters of the Training and Doctrine Command.

"All of us in the Army are deeply troubled by the allegations of sexual misconduct and rape," said Gen. Dennis Reimer, Army chief of staff.

"We have zero tolerance for that type of thing," he said at a brief Pentagon news conference.

A senior military official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the investigation is continuing.

"Hundreds of interviews have already been conducted," he said, adding "they are going to go back for two years and interview every female that has been through that training."

He described the victims as in "their initial entry training of their military occupational specialty."

Reimer contended that such cases might not been limited to what occurred at Aberdeen.

"It can't ever be assumed this has not happened someplace else," he said.

The Army said as Capt. Derrick Robertson was charged with rape, conduct unbecoming an officer, obstruction of justice, adultery and having an improper relationship with a recruit.

Staff Sgt. Delmar Simpson was charged with rape, forcible sodomy, adultery and obstruction of justice, the Army said, and Staff Sgt. Nathanael Beach was charged with obstruction of justice and disobeying an officer.

The investigation began in September when a recruit alleged sexual harassment.

At this point, the military official said the Army has identified more than a dozen victims and is in the process of interviewing 900-1,000 women who have been through the training course at Aberdeen.

He said additional trainers are being investigated.

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Warren Christopher's prescription for a successor as secretary of state: someone who is forceful and has stamina.

Basically, he said Thursday, diplomacy involves plowing ahead, and not letting the ups and downs get to you.

Christopher

Why is he leaving? "The time simply has come for someone else to pick up the baton," the self-effacing Christopher said in an interview.

Later, at a White House ceremony Thursday, President Clinton hailed Christopher as America's elder statesman and said he would be hard to replace. "Time and again, I have reached out to my friend for his counsel and support," the president said.

Clinton said he would solicit Christopher's advice in picking a successor, but had nothing further to say about a new secretary of state right now.

"I owe Warren Christopher a debt that extends beyond the broad range of his responsibilities," Clinton said as they stood together with Vice President Al Gore in the Grand Foyer.

Seated before them were Christopher's wife, Marie, senior State Department officials and Madeleine Albright, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, who is considered a possible successor.

"Being secretary of state is to take part in history's relay race," Christopher said. "It's been a great privilege to me to have run this challenging leg over the last four years."

Earlier in an interview, the 71-year-old Christopher said he was satisfied that during the past four years he had helped make the United States "safer

HEROIC SCHOLARSHIP OFFERS

Graduate students receive scholarships in honor of diplomats

MATT SPURGIN
staff reporter

Two K-State graduate students received scholarships last night in the name of two heroic diplomats. The diplomats made a difference by standing up for what they believed.

Scott McKinney, graduate student in political science, received the first scholarship in the name of Raoul Wallenberger, and the second scholarship, the Nicolas Salgo Scholarship, went to Karen Dunaway, graduate student in history.

Though the Swedish Ambassador was unable to attend, Steve Swanson, assistant professor of engineering at K-State-Salina, spoke on behalf of the Swedish Embassy. Swanson and his family spent several years in Sweden. He appeared in the traditional Swedish academic garb, which unlike graduation gowns in the United States, consists of a tuxedo with tails and a top hat.

"This scholarship is an especially significant way to honor the memory of Mr. Wallenberg. We know of no other scholarships in his honor," he said.

Nicolas Salgo, the former U.S. ambassador to Hungary, also spoke at the awards ceremony. He stood up to the disapproval of the communist government of Hungary and had a statue of Wallenberg put up in front of the U.S. Embassy to honor the efforts of Wallenberg.

Salgo spoke about Wallenberg and his efforts to find out his fate. He said he had hoped with Gorbachev's perestroika of the 1980s he would be able to get information on the whereabouts of Wallenberg. Those attempts were unsuccessful.

He said he now thinks Wallenberg will never be found. He was born in 1911, so there is little chance he is still alive.

Dale Herspring, head of the Department of Political Science, said with the help of Ambassador Nicolas Salgo he can now fulfill a vow he made to recognize those who did something to prevent the death of Jews during the Holocaust.

"Wallenberg, in essence, represents to me that kind of person who, when faced with the most hideous evil, stands up and says, 'I'm prepared to be counted,'" Herspring said.

Raoul Wallenberg might be unknown to many people, but to the thousands of Jews whom he saved from concentration camps, he is a hero.

In 1944, when President Roosevelt established the War Refugee Board to try to save the remaining Jews in Europe, Wallenberg went to Hungary as a Swedish diplomat to rescue doomed Jews.

Wallenberg issued passports to many Jews to get them away from the Nazis and into Sweden.

When the Soviets moved into Hungary, Wallenberg was arrested and sent to the Soviet Union, never to be seen again.

"The past is something we cannot excuse," Herspring said. "Especially when that something is the Holocaust."

Mail-in fee payment to start spring semester

KELLY KIEFER
staff reporter

For students receiving financial aid next semester, attention to the new mail-in fee payment system procedures might keep schedules from being dropped.

Statements for tuition and fees will be mailed to students the first week in December with a payment deadline of Jan. 8, when schedules are dropped. Statements should include any financial aid students expect to receive, with a few exceptions.

"Most of the aid that a student has been awarded and has accepted will be printed on that statement," Larry Moeder, director of Student Financial Assistance, said.

Moeder said students expecting Stafford Loan or private scholarship checks, however, will not find a credit on their statements.

Those students will be required to pick up checks at the K-State Student Union after Jan. 10.

Students needing a Stafford Loan or private scholarship money to pay tuition and fees by Jan. 8, should contact the Office of Student Financial Assistance for a deferment.

Deferments will activate students' classes, so schedules aren't dropped. Once checks are available, students can pick them up and use them to pay tuition.

Senate authorizes council to help fund speech team

NICOLE KIRBY
city/government editor

The third time was a charm for Student Senate's funding of Speech Unlimited Thursday night.

Senate voted two weeks ago not to increase the group's funding and not to allow the Arts and Sciences Council to make up the difference.

Thursday a majority of the senators agreed to go ahead and authorize the Arts and Sciences Council to allocate the $2,000 necessary.

This amount would bring Speech Unlimited's allocation up to $5,758.15 to help defray competition costs.

Many senators didn't even want to debate the allocation again.

Arts and sciences senator Sean Tomb said it didn't make sense to discuss the bill when the Senate had already debated in a previous meeting. He said if senators didn't agree with it before, they wouldn't agree this time.

Others said they felt obligated to hear the bill and give it a chance.

"I think it's our job as senators," Maggie Keating, arts and sciences senator, said.

Senate needed a two-thirds vote to Friends, family remember BSU secretary killed in weekend automobile accident

A somber group gathered at All Faiths Chapel Thursday evening to honor the memory of Stacey Hall.

Hall, a junior in social work, was in a fatal car accident last Friday and taken to a hospital.

Her family decided to terminate her life support early Saturday afternoon. The funeral was Tuesday morning in Lawrence, Hall's hometown.

Hall was the secretary for the Black Student Union and was involved in Helping Hands. She also had worked as a preschool teacher for the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department.

Don Fallon, a chaplain at All Faiths and K-State coordinator of religious activities, led the service. He said he was grateful to have many members of her family there.

"We are here to share our stories of Stacey and to celebrate Stacey's life," Fallon said.

Dwain Archer, adviser to BSU, said it was fitting to acknowledge Hall was a Christian.

"We are going to miss her, but someday we are going to see her again," he said.

Archer led the group in prayer. Following the prayer, Marcella Burks read Psalm 23.

United Black Voices, an African American gospel group, sang "Just in Case, ('Til We Meet)." After the song, the participants were welcome to share remembrances of Hall.

"Stacey was a kind of sister to me," said Kyndra Jones, a friend of Hall's.

Freeman Davis, one of the coordinators for the Multicultural Student Organization, said Hall frequented their offices this semester.

"She was always friendly, pleasant and respectful," Davis said.

Hall had told Davis she had a burning desire to finish her degree and get on with her life.

"When she talked about getting on with her life, her smile would spread across her eyes and cheeks," Davis said.

Those who knew Stacey knew her smile, said Marcus Jones, Kyndra Jones's father.

"I don't think she knows how much people loved her. I think she's looking down now and smiling," he added.

Kyndra Jones said something that stuck in her mind was Hall telling her she had a burning inside to help people. She was always a support for other people, Jones said.

Jones sang "Tears in Heaven."

Reverend Rene Brown, Hall's minister, spoke about the special feeling he had in his heart from listening to everyone share their special memories of Stacey.

"This is a joyous occasion," Brown said.

Reading from the Bible, Brown reminded the group about Jesus' telling his disciples they would be in his father's house someday, where there are many mansions. Mansion means many rooms, he said.

"Stacey has changed rooms. She is in a new room now," Brown said. "There is one • PLANE MISSING WITH 141 ABOARD. A Nigerian jet carrying 141 people was missing Thursday after losing contact with air-traffic controllers en route to Lagos. A search was under way. The Aviation Development Corp., owner of the missing Boeing 727, said the plane lost contact with the Murtala Mohammed Airport in Lagos at 5:05 p.m.

• RWANDAN REFUGEES DYING WITHOUT WATER. A tiny band of Hutu refugees managed to make it back to their homeland Thursday. Dozens of their compatriots died of thirst back in eastern Zaire, they said, and others were surviving by sucking water from roots.The survivors told their story to U.N. aid workers. The U.N. refugee agency said it has had no contact since Saturday with the refugees, who have fled camps in eastern Zaire to escape fighting between Zairian army troops and rebels. Most were believed to be without food or water.

• YELTSIN MAKING GOOD PROGRESS. Impressing doctors with the speed of his recovery, President Boris Yeltsin was up on his feet Thursday and proclaiming he was back at work two days after a quintuple heart bypass. The Kremlin portrayed the 65-year-old president as a man eager to be back at the helm of leadership and pursuing all his presidential duties — something his surgeon said could happen in 10-12 days.

• SINN FEIN LEADER HURT IN CAR CRASH. Sinn Fein leader Gerry Adams canceled his appointments Thursday after being hurt in a car accident. Adams was a passenger in a car that collided late Wednesday with another vehicle on a country road in County Louth in Ireland, near the border with British-ruled Northern Ireland. Adams, his driver and the couple in the other car all suffered whiplash and bruising. Adams was treated and released.

• KACZYNSKI TO APPEAR IN COURT. Theodore Kaczynski rejected an arraignment by video and will be brought to New Jersey to enter a plea to Unabomber charges that he murdered an advertising executive. The former Berkeley math professor, also under indictment in Sacramento, Calif., could face the death penalty in either the California or New Jersey cases. Kaczynski is charged with eight bombings in six states that killed three and injured 23 over 18 years.

• RETURN TO MARS. A Delta rocket carrying the Global Surveyor lifted off on time at noon — one day after high wind scuttled the first launch attempt — and propelled the boxy, 10-foot spacecraft toward Mars at 24,000 mph. The spacecraft will reach Mars after a journey of 10 months and 435 million miles. The Global Surveyor will begin mapping the Martian atmosphere and virtually the entire surface of the planet. The survey will last 687 days, or a full Martian year. It will send images and other data back to Earth within 20-40 minutes. The images will be posted on the Internet for public viewing within a day or two after that. One of the main objectives of the $230 million mission is to scout for landing spots for future landing missions.

• SECOND MAN CONVICTED IN SHOOTING DEATH OF RESTAURANT OWNER. A 22-year-old man was convicted Thursday in the 1994 shooting death of a Wichita restaurant owner. Phouc Nguyen, whose hometown was unknown, was found guilty of federal robbery and murder charges in the death of Barbara Sun. A jury will determine Nguyen's sentence after a hearing that begins Wednesday. Prosecutors are seeking the death penalty. Nguyen was the second man to be convicted in Sun's death.

• MAN FOUND DEAD IN GARDEN CITY. A man found dead in the basement of his home was shot to death, authorities said. William Powers, 38, was found dead in a basement utility room Tuesday. He died of multiple gunshot wounds. Police investigators said they did not have any suspects. Powers died sometime Monday night, said John Andrews, chief investigator in the Finney County sheriff's office. The body was found about 10 a.m. Tuesday, when a friend was unsuccessful in trying to reach Powers.

SPORTS

• GRACE PLEADS INNOCENT. K-State defensive tackle Lance Grace pleaded not guilty Thursday for charges stemming from a fight that occurred early Saturday morning outside an Aggieville bar. Grace's lawyer, Troy Huser, who represented him in Manhattan Municipal Court, was unavailable for comment. A trial date has not been set, although the court designated Nov. 21 as a status-check date.

• MAY PICKED UP BY CARDINALS. Former K-State quarterback Chad May, released earlier this season by the Minnesota Vikings, has signed with the Arizona Cardinals. May takes the roster spot of starter Kent Graham, who sustained a knee injury in the Cardinals' loss to the New York Giants last week. May will be third on the depth chart this week ,when Arizona faces Washington. Boomer Esiason will start for the Cardinals and will be backed up by Stoney Case. May, led K-State to its 1993 and 1994 bowl games.

• MISSOURI DEFENSIVE BACK SUSPENDED. Missouri defensive back Shad Criss was suspended for the remainder of the season Thursday, two days after being arrested for harassing and assaulting a 20-year-old woman who had a protection order against him. Criss was booked on suspicion of misdemeanor assault. The police report said he had grabbed and shoved the woman.

Professor criticized for backing students

BETH HUSTED
staff reporter

The scenario: Several students want to have salary and evaluation information about their university's faculty published.

A professor at the same university is willing to help those students.

The information gets published, and the students are ecstatic. But now more professors than one are in a lot of trouble with their employer.

That's not so surprising. It could happen at any number of universities in the United States.

In this case, it really did happen.

David Demers was a professor at the University of Wisconsin at River Falls. Thursday night he visited K-State to give a lecture titled "Suing the University: One Professor's Story and Advice."

He was labeled university troublemaker, and his circle of friends at the university quickly dwindled.

Demers was a professor who had committed a university cardinal sin. He sued the University of Wisconsin at River Falls, the institution that was employing him.

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

DAVID DEMERS, assistant professor of journalism at the Edward R. Murrow School of Communication at Washington State University, speaks Thursday afternoon in the K-State Student Union Big 12 Room.

During the 1993-94 school year, Demers was an adviser for the Society of Professional Journalists and a professor for an advanced reporting class.

"I guess I first started making trouble when I assisted students in filing a freedom-of-information lawsuit," said Demers, now assistant professor at Washington State University.

The students wanted to have information on faculty salaries and faculty evaluations published. The case went to the attorney general, and they were successful.

"I could hear the students roaring for joy when I reported the results to them," he said.

But the trouble was not over for Demers.

"It really got me into trouble for the publication of faculty salaries," he said.

Things started to change for Demers. He quickly found his job in jeopardy. Administrators were trying to fire him for helping the students in his journalism class gain access to, and publish stories about faculty salaries and students' evaluations of the faculty.

For Demers it was time to fight back. He filed a First Amendment lawsuit against the university.

When it comes to suing an institution such as a university, there are several things one should keep in mind, Demers said.

"I can't guarantee that the same methods will work for anyone else, but there are some things that you should do in order to make winning a lawsuit more achievable," he said.

First, don't expect to please everyone. Second, document everything. People lose lawsuits because they lack documentation, Demers said.

Demers said there are other things people to remember: At the first sign of trouble, hire an attorney. Do not file a lawsuit if money is the driving force. Do not file unless your job or the principle is important to you. Take every means possible to collect evidence for the case. Use media to help fight your case. Be prepared to settle out of court. Whatever action you take, keep the students in mind, Demers said.

"It's a difficult institution to defeat," Demers said. "But I wouldn't have obtained a very satisfactory solution without the courts."

Woes of parking

1995 parking revenue more than $1 million

HEATHER HJETLAND
staff reporter

Almost $400,000 in parking citations were issued at K-State in the 1995 fiscal year, according to a Parking Services statement of revenues and expenditures.

About 250 tickets are issued per day during the fall and spring semesters, said Peggy Winkler, acting director of Parking Services.

Winkler said this money goes toward supporting Parking Services, because its funding is from permits, citations and meters.

Some K-State students said they are unhappy with the citation system.

"I think $15 for a ticket is entirely too much," Teryl Hixon, senior in life science, said.

One student couldn't understand why students have to pay to park at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

"Parking Services is absolutely ridiculous," Stacey Chapman, junior in elementary education said.

> "Parking Services is absolutely ridiculous. I can understand the reserved places for faculty, but why do we have to pay to go to the rec? Even people who work there have to buy a permit."
> • STACEY CHAPMAN
> JUNIOR IN ELEMENTARY EDUCATION

"I can understand the reserved places for faculty, but why do we have to pay to go to the rec? Even people who work there have to buy a permit," she said.

Winkler said she rationalizes paying $60 dollars per year for a parking pass by stating that with a permit, it costs students $1.15 per week. She said this is much cheaper than a meter, which is 50 cents per hour, or tickets that range from $5 to $100.

When compared, the cost of K-State's parking citations are similar to the parking-citation costs at University of Kansas.

About 25 people work in Parking Services, including 10 students who issue the citations.

Winkler said measures are being taken to improve the parking situation at K-State. Two such actions are expanding the shuttle service and building a parking garage.

She said there is a five-year plan to build a parking garage. Traffic patterns are being monitored around the University, and the exact location of the garage has not yet been established.

Parking Services had $1,336,720.63 in revenues in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1995. Citations were $377,292.40, and $834,100.21 was from the sale of permits. Meter receipts totaled $84,693.28.

This revenue goes toward employees' salaries; contractual services, such as postage and printing; commodities, such as office supplies; and capital outlays that include land and building improvements.

Parking Services had an excess revenue of about $190,000. Winkler said some of it was used last summer for renovation of parking lots. It also budgets for snow removal, and some years have more snow than others. This money is saved for expenditures in future years.

Winkler said the 1996 financial statement has not yet been figured, but it should be similar.

Appeal system changes beneficial to violators

CHRIS DEAN
staff reporter

There are still options available when you are the new owner of a parking ticket.

About 50 percent of all parking tickets are appealed through the Parking Citations Appeal Board. About 10 percent of those appeals are approved.

"People assume the parking situation is always wrong, so their appeal is justifiable." Chico Crichlow, appeals clerk, said. "In their thinking, they don't believe it's their fault. I get 25 appeals per day, and most of them, you can see through the lines, and something is not right. If you ask them again, you get a different story."

There are several reasons why a person would appeal a ticket.

"Some appeals are filed because 'I don't have the money.' It gives them a little time," Peggy Winkler, acting director of Parking Services, said.

Although no appeal is ever denied, legitimate reasons can include parking in an illegal spot in the case of an emergency or parking at a malfunctioning meter.

However, Winkler said not knowing the rules is not a legitimate excuse.

"Most people don't know a rule until they get a ticket," Winkler said. "One point of getting a ticket is that getting it does stress the rules and regulations and you think, 'Oh, I shouldn't do that again.'"

The actual appeals process has undergone several changes since the last update of the official appeals procedures documentation and is being reviewed by a sub-committee again this year.

These changes do not affect the way a student appeals a ticket but do affect the way the appeal is heard.

One of the changes is who reads the appeal. If a tie-breaker is needed, the appeal goes to a third judge instead of the entire board.

In-person re-appeals are no longer used unless they are OK'd by the chair of the board. Re-appeals are handled through paperwork instead.

Because of these changes, University attorneys said the document included with the appeals packet should be updated.

"These are fairly important changes. Whatever committee it is probably needs to update this," Richard Seaton, University attorney, said. "The student needs to be correctly informed."

Winkler said although the new system has not caused problems, students are encouraged to send questions or comments via e-mail or to the Parking Services office.

Appeal that ticket

1. To appeal a parking ticket, pick up and turn in your appeals packet at the Parking Services office in Edwards Hall no later than eight business days after the ticket is issued. Fill out the necessary information and reason for the appeal, and attach the citation and a self-addressed, stamped envelope.
2. The parking citations officer will add a statement of his own to the appeal.
3. The appeal is duplicated and delivered to two members of the Parking Citation Appeals Board (PCAB). Each appeal is first seen by one student and one faculty member. Judges have four weeks to make their decision. If the two decisions match, the decision is final. If not, the appeal is given to a third judge. The third judge's ruling is then final.
4. The decision is mailed back, and the appellant then has eight days after receiving the decision to pay the ticket with no added charges. No late fees or appeal charges are added to properly appealed tickets.
5. If you still disagree with the decision and think there is information the judges did not have in their possession at the time of the ruling, you may re-appeal. A re-appeal must include information that was not in the original appeal. After filing a re-appeal with the parking services office, the chair of the PCAB decides whether he will hear the case. This decision is final.
6. Only two people have the authority to override these proceedings and void tickets. They are the director of Parking Services and the president of the University.

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

Just when you figured it out, fee payment changes

Instead of standing in the freezing cold, waiting to pay fees at Ahearn Field House, you can pay tuition and fees by mail.

Now that K-State has made fee payment a convenience for students, students need to pay attention to the new process.

WHY WE CARE

Wait! Don't throw away that purple piece of paper you got when you pre-enrolled. It explains the new mail-in fee-payment system.

Do not ignore those purple sheets you got when you pre-enrolled. If you want to keep those classes you enrolled in, pay attention to what the purple sheets are telling you.

If you do not meet the deadlines, your schedule will be dropped.

The statements will be mailed to students the first week of December, and the payment deadline is Jan. 8.

You need to make sure your address is current at enrollment. If you do not get a bill by Dec. 10, call the cashier's office at 532-6317.

If you do not get a bill, it is still your responsibility to pay fees by the deadline.

The time to start thinking about this process is now, especially if you have financial aid.

Although most financial aid will be included in your statement, some aid will not be available until later.

For more information on paying fees or to get a fee deferment, contact the Office of Student Financial Assistance at 532-6420.

The Academic Management Services payment plan is still an option.

There will be four payment installments, and the first one will be due Dec. 20.

You can also pay by mail, in person or by credit card.

The mailing address is P.O. Box 68, Manhattan, KS 66506.

You can pay in person in Anderson 212 or at the drop-box at Anderson Hall's north entrance.

To pay by credit card, call 532-FEES.

Detailed payment instructions will be included with the bill.

If you do not owe anything, you still need to respond to the bill.

There will be an opportunity for students to pick up their financial-aid checks for credit on their bills and some financial aid Jan. 10 at the K-State Student Union.

In Our Opinion, an editorial discussed and chosen by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board. For information on who is an editorial board member or how you can become a member, contact Sera Tank at (karolyi@ksu.edu).

Miscommunication and unresolved anger can build up and ruin a friendship

Greg and I are good friend. Heck, we're roommates. But every once in a while our general chit chat taps a well of undiscovered emotion.

It all started with the Dave Matthews Band.

With an acoustic version of "Dancing Nancies" from the album "Recently" playing in the background of our dorm room, our conversation danced along the edges of musical tastes.

"This is good music," I matter-of-factly said. I wasn't exactly talking to anyone in particular I think I was just voicing an absolute truth.

"Not to some people," he said.

I was stunned. To me, there seems to be something obvious about good music like this. It jumps out and grabs your mind and doesn't let go.

The music of Israel Kamakawiwo'ole, a Hawaiian ukelelist, did this to me. It transcended just simple sound and turned itself into base emotions. Is there something intuitive in the music that means everyone should enjoy it?

Obviously not.

Greg said the music we were listening to just wasn't something he enjoyed. "But this is good music!" I cried.

Could he not feel the emotion of this band? The soul which pours from its fingers and hearts?

I was almost speechless.

Greg broke the silence. "Dave Matthews is an incredible artist, but I just don't care for his music."

"What?" I questioned. How could this be possible? If there is something beautiful in the music, how can one help but hear it? "It just does not appeal to my tastes," he said. Then he told me how he had a compact disc of Dave Matthews and how the songs just never grew on him. At least he gave the band a chance.

Yet he didn't care for it, and this was a fact I had to live with. The beautiful music goes unappreciated.

The next thing I realized was that, even though Greg heard the same sound waves as I did, we listen to different things.

We were both in our high schools' bands, and we both even played the trumpet.

So how could I be hearing this beautiful music, and how could it not knock Greg off his feet?

Too many times I have seen this miscommunication go unresolved. Greg and I, we can communicate — but I have seen other relationships, friends and otherwise, dissolve.

Take my brother and me, for example. He is a year younger than I am, and we have lived with each other for more than 20 years.

During these 20 years, sometimes, our immature and stubborn minds would not compromise. They almost could not give in and bridge any gap in communication.

Most of the time we only listened to what we wanted to hear and did not even attempt to listen to what was said.

Yet, after we left for college, even though we study across state borders, I think we could start to hear each other's side a little better.

As brothers, we lived in the same house, but as almost opposites.

Now we live apart, and our lives have changed, moved toward what we always avoided. Our experiences have changed our perceptions.

The idea is obvious but never taken to heart. I first really listened to this idea when I heard it from my sociology teacher, Sean Noonan, and a historian, David McCullough. They said the past sets the foundation for everything we people and what they do.

It is a strange notion, but what one listens to is very much based on how one has lived.

College has expanded our lives unknowingly into each others' lives, and our relationship has followed.

In fact, my brother has introduced me to so much cool music, it's unbelievable. Strangely enough, music was the original topic with Greg.

In a way, Greg and I are sort of opposites, but he has the right to prefer certain things.

The chasm that divides our interests and our perceptions and hinders our communications is experience, yet this is necessary, because it makes people individuals.

MY

Rhett
HARTMAN

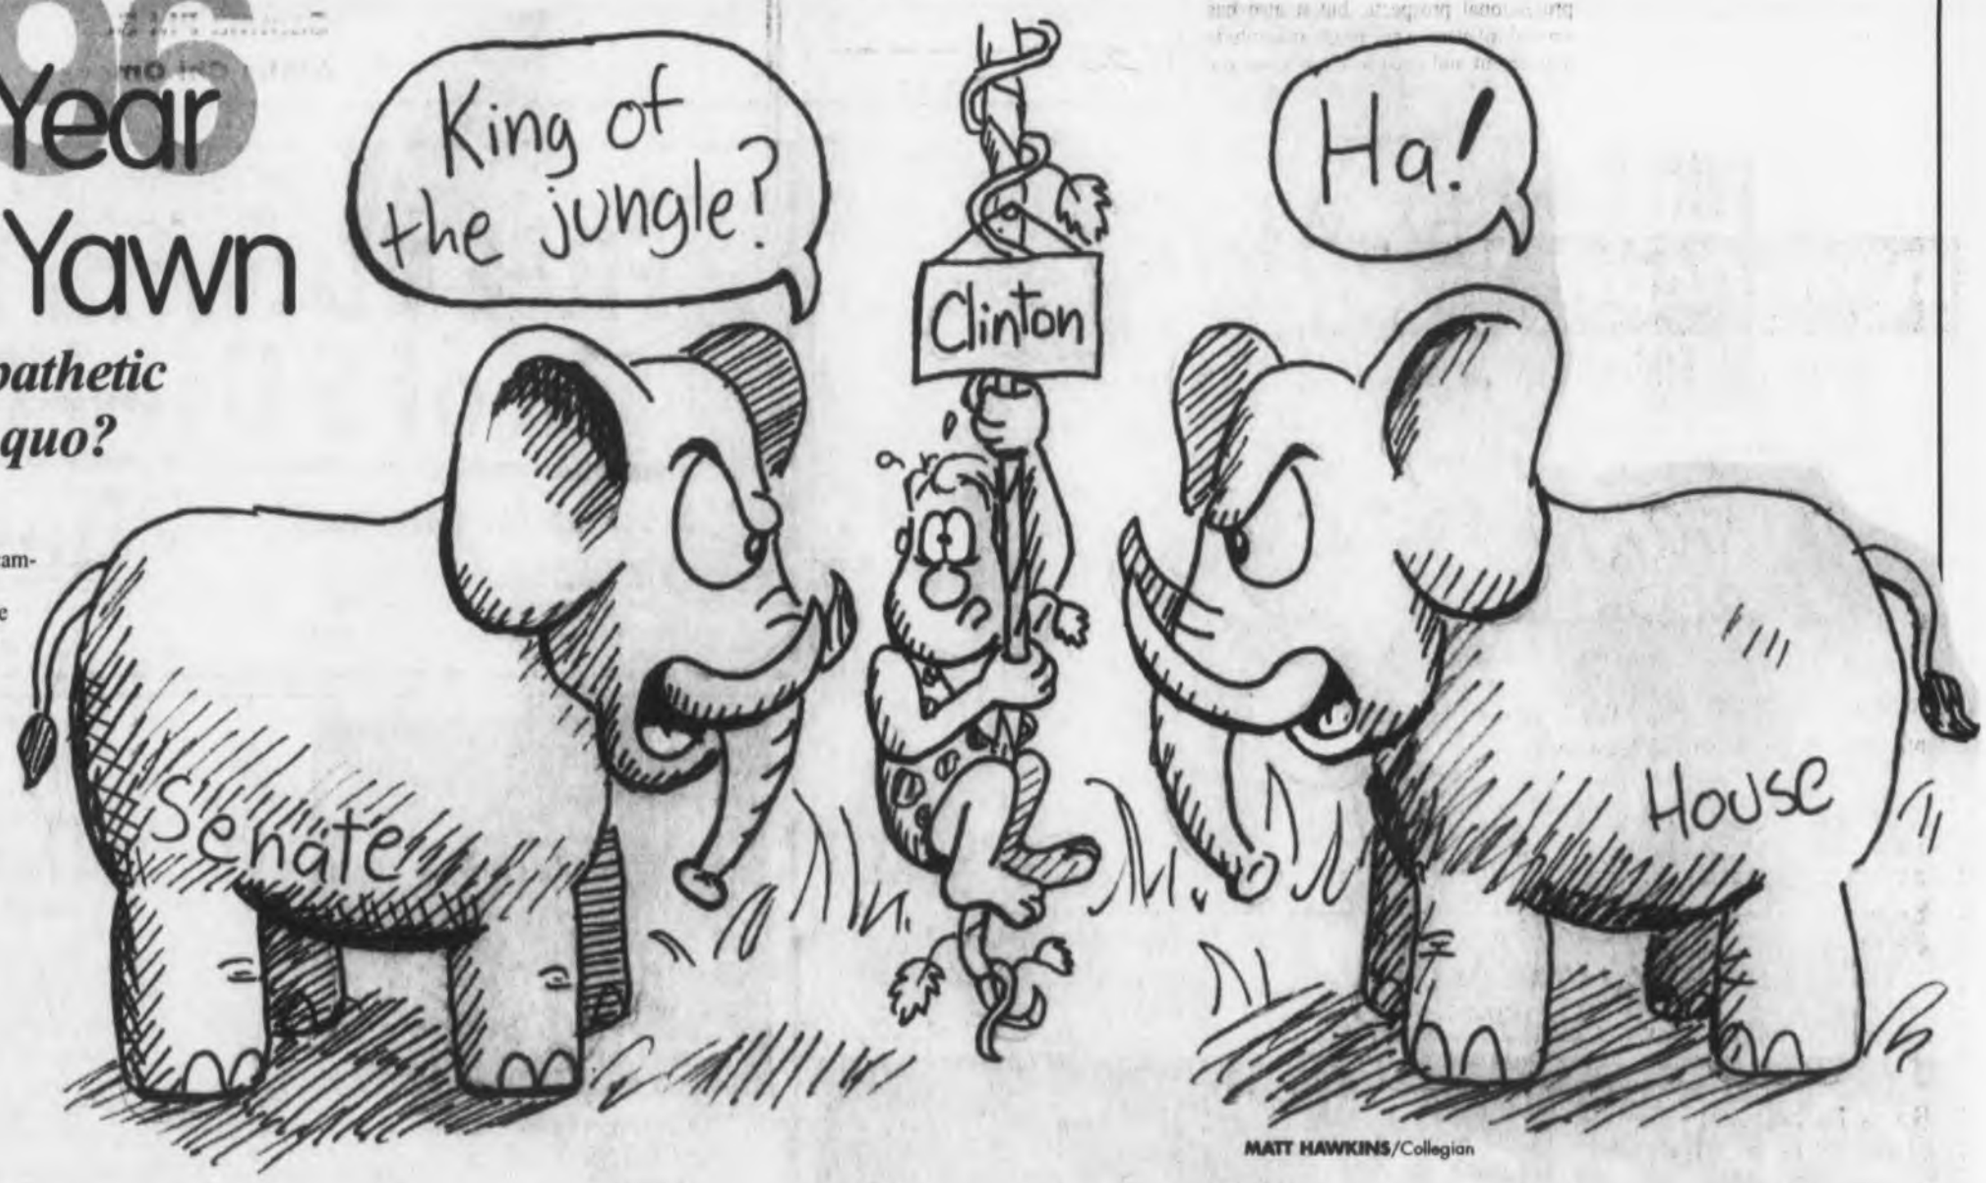
Without anything falling out, Greg's mind is an open one, so I don't doubt eventually he might feel the beauty I hear from the Dave Matthews Band.

Yet if this is so simple, why can't everyone be happy? The Middle East, Bosnia, some of the K-State football team — why must they fight so? Much like my brother and me, when the going gets frustrating, the frustrated become frightened and angry.

For some, this anger is recognized as a negative thing.

It's seen as something controllable.

Yet when your lives and cultures are surrounded by the pressure to win and hold power, quick answers are sought, and winning at all costs is cultivated.



This environment does not allow taking time to think and does not relieve pressures. Miscommunication and anger are likely to follow.

Because I am not saying I know what the answer is, as I am still trying to figure my own life out. In the meantime, my plan is simple — to live to learn, and learn to live.

1996 The Year of the Yawn

Are voters apathetic about status quo? Whatever.

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

Bill Clinton might be done campaigning (but I doubt it).

For the first time since Franklin Roosevelt repeated in 1936, a Democrat will return to the White House for another term.

Which raises another obvious question: What will Bill Clinton do in the year 2000? Unable to run for president again and unlikely to run for governor, there is little doubt he will have a severe case of campaign envy in four years.

But what about this year?

While Clinton will control the White House for another four years, the Republicans will also return majorities to both houses of Congress. This is another first.

For the first time in more than 60 years, there will be back-to-back Republican Congresses.

Which creates an interesting state of affairs on Capitol Hill and Pennsylvania Avenue.

Look for the term gridlock to suddenly make a strong showing in the American vocabulary. Also keep in mind that a synonym for gridlock is debate, which is a term that doesn't carry all negativity of the former.

And if there's one thing we don't want in this country, it's negativity.

But why do voters seem to suffer from political dichotomy by electing Democrats to the White House and Republicans to the Congress?

As one analyst for ABC News put it, the elections this year could be characterized by one word: (Are you ready?) "Whatever."

Neither Clinton nor the Republicans received a mandate from the people to do anything. And while the national races were a dead heat for which victory would help most as a sleeping aid, local issues actually got some people's blood pumping.

In Manhattan, there were probably more people interested in the outcome of Issue 1, which would have eliminated the 30-percent food sales requirement in all bars and failed to pass, than who won the presidency.

So, in the Year of the Yawn, why would people rather watch the Weather Channel than the election results?

There's really nothing to get excited about.

> "The status quo is a hard change. That's why it's called the status quo. Voters might not be especially thrilled about the track record of the past 4 years, but they aren't especially upset about it either."

Yes, the economy is growing slower now than when Clinton took office (GDP is down more than 20 percent), there has been no tax cut for the middle class, the debt is bigger now than in any other election year, and the dollar is falling against most foreign currencies, but this doesn't affect people close to home near as much as say, Issue 1.

This is not a bad thing.

In 1992, the economy was the issue. Actually, Bill Clinton made the economy the issue.

The mission statement of his campaign read, "It's the economy, stupid." Short, quick, and to the point.

It also worked.

In 1996, there wasn't an issue. Bob Dole is a great man who has served his country well and would have brought significant change to Washington.

However, the mission statement of his campaign read, "I'm not him." Short, quick, but with no specific points.

It didn't work.

With no pressing national issue, such as an expanding Soviet bloc or double-digit inflation, voters don't perceive a need for change and re-elect the status quo, more popularly referred to as the incumbent.

For those of you who have seen Bob Dole speak during this campaign, from his acceptance speech at the convention to his concession speech Tuesday night, there is one thing that can be said about him.

He is sincere.

An ABC poll indicates that 54 percent of America does not trust the returning president or think he is honest. Yet they voted for him.

The status quo is a hard change. That's why it's called the status quo.

Voters might not be especially thrilled about the track record of the past four years, but they aren't especially upset about it, either.

Finally, the media will be right there telling you why you voted.

So while commentators in media outlets all around the state and the country, including myself, will attempt to explain every thought every voter might have possibly had last Tuesday, the real reason why voters might have voted the way they did is known only by those voters.

MY

Jeremy STEPHENS

Explaining voter activity is easy when you use really neat words.

Status quo. Gridlock. Impeachment. Medicare. Balanced Budget. Tax Cuts.

These are not the lyrics for another Billy Joel song, but the labels used to explain why voters voted the way they did for president and even Issue 1.

The media stays in business because of talking heads.

And while they might speak eloquently, they might not speak correctly.

In reality, all voters know why they voted. Or didn't vote at all.

Solution offered to increase decling basketball ticket sales

Editor,

As a concerned K-State athletic fan, I am writing in regard to the support of the basketball program. It is obvious that the students are not giving the basketball team the support it deserves. This year the men's basketball team is young but talented, and support from the students could go a long way.

If we could get even half the students who have season tickets for football to buy basketball tickets, the problem would not be as apparent. Granted, the football program is one of the best, and it is an exciting team to watch, but it achieved this superior status through great coaching, players and fans.

Carol Adolph, a representative from the ticket sales office, said this year there were 9,600 total student football season ticket holders, while last year's basketball ticket sales for students totaled 2,600.

One solution would be to model the sale of student season tickets according to that of the University of Kansas. The head of ticket sales information at KU, Diana Grover, explained how they combine the sale of student season tickets for basketball and football.

If this were the case, those students who buy football tickets would also have basketball tickets. This combination includes basketball, football, and tickets to the relays for $85, which is cheaper than here at K-State.

If we could get the Athletic Ticket Sales Committee to agree with this policy, there would be an instant positive result. It is time we show some support for the basketball players, who work extremely hard and have earned our respect. I'm sure that all of those at the Fright Night on Halloween would agree that something needs to be changed.

Football players need to show class both on and off the field

Editor,

I'm sure everyone would agree with me that the K-State football team is a class act.

Coach Bill Snyder has brought a losing team to several top-25 finishes, but most of all he has built a team with a respectable reputation that has a lot of dignity and class. At least that's what I thought.

Not only does K-State have several professional prospects, but it also has several players who need an attitude adjustment and need to think about the future of the team and its reputation instead of their egos.

Granted, I know when a team has a record such as we have, there is always potential for some bad apples to exist and create some problems off the field.

Although I've always been taught that a winner isn't always defined by what you do on the field, but it's what you do off the field that makes you a true winner. Call me old-fashioned, but I think most would definitely agree.

I bring this up is because I see several players letting the team's success going to their egotistical heads.

For instance, I like to celebrate K-State's victories down in Aggieville, and as we all obviously know, our players tend to celebrate with us.

So, let me give everyone an example: Last week I was celebrating our victory over Oklahoma University, and I was at a bar where several players joined me. I started to talk to a friend who is a player.

Then suddenly, another football super stud pushed me aside and told my friend that they don't associate with people like myself.

I don't know why he said that, and I don't particularly give a damn. All that incident showed me was that our players' heads are getting bigger than they can handle.

If I can recall, it seems that when K-State had to look forward to play the University of Kansas for a win, our players didn't act as if they were the only people in Manhattan.

I would think that because Snyder spent so much time getting the reputation K-State has right now, the players would have enough respect for their coach — if not themselves — to start acting as if they have class off the field.

Finally, it took half a decade to get the respect we deserve. Does it have to take another decade to teach our players to be winners off the field instead of just on the field?

Alum commends E-Collegian

Editor,

I was pleasantly surprised recently to discover of the Electronic Collegian.

I graduated from K-State last year, and I am working on my master's degree in another state. It is such a comforting feeling to start my day by reading the Collegian as I had done for the last five years. I enjoy keeping up with all the campus news, especially the sports and editorials.

The Collegian World Wide Web site is first-class, with fine graphics and easy access to all sections of the publication. Students should not take for granted the genuine publication that they have available to them.

They have a regional and international newspaper run by and for the students of K-State. Thanks to the Collegian Web site I can start my day with coffee and the campus police reports.

Keep up the good work.

Collegian writers, editors lack knowlege ability write reviews

Editor,

I wish that the Collegian staff, especially those who write reviews, would make an effort to become informed about the subject they are writing about.

After the last KSU Orchestra concert I was disgusted when I read the review. The lack of knowledge shown by the writers and editors was disheartening.

To anyone who has ever been to an orchestra concert, it would have been painfully obvious that the pianist was not an accompanist. Accompanists are not on stage in front of the orchestra. Furthermore, as a violinist, I laughed at the review of Midori's performance.

With the exception of Itzach Perlman, who was crippled by polio, I have never seen a violin soloist sit during a performance. Orchestra members sit, because if they didn't no one would be able to see the rest of the orchestra, and members couldn't see the conductor.

As for the lack of physical movement involved in the playing of the violin, I urge the Collegian staff to watch any performance of violinists on PBS or here at K-State, and they will quickly learn otherwise. Sit close and pay attention to the close-ups, because that sweat on their brow is not from nervousness.

Also Midori did not play a song for her encore. Songs are sung by vocalists. Pieces are played by instrumentalists.

The reason I am sending this letter is because, as a music education major, it is discouraging to see misinformation about music passed off as the truth.

The Collegian could have done better to print, "Midori played real well."

At least then the uninformed public would not have received misleading information about how classical music is performed. In short, know the subject before you write and print a story.

Reader presents Collegian Voters' Guide with an award

Editor,

It is my great pleasure to inform you that the Collegian is hereby awarded the Deception in Layout Award — Halloween Tricks Division, for 1996. You are no doubt aware that this award is not made every year.

To be eligible, a publication must pretend to be bipartisan, or even nonpartisan, in its policy, for which you qualified by declining to publish letters to the editor during this campaign.

The publication must then produce a page so flagrantly favorable to one political party that there can be no doubt it was editorial policy to encourage voters to vote for candidates of that party.

The members of the committee who believe you have sincerely earned this honor are experienced in magazine and newspaper layout for the purpose of influencing readers.

Therefore, congratulations are in order for your Voters' Guide of Oct. 29. In every case, the Democrat's picture is in first place. Each Democrat is quoted first on the issues. Even the device of giving the Democrats black boxes around their names enlarges the picture size and emphasizes visual attention from the reader. You didn't miss a trick!

Because it is usual, fair and expected, newspapers practice alternate or alphabetize candidates' names and pictures, your layout is also entitled to receive the Consistency in Spin Certificate.

Your awards may be picked up at the Republican headquarters on the Wednesday after election. Congratulations!

Cathy Mowry
vice chairwoman, Republican Party, 2nd Congressional District, Kansas

Election coverage commended

Editor,

I commend your efforts in presenting the results of the 1996 presidential election. After finding the coverage of my local newspaper to be scant and unrewarding, I was extremely surprised to find your excellent presentation on the Internet. I urge you to maintain this excellent service that you provide to Wildcats around the country.

Readers says column lacked substance and a point

Editor,

This in response to Roopa Swaminathan's column, "Life is short; complain hard."

A good quarter of the column was dedicated to Swaminathan rambling about how good she is. And because she has a column to write, that gives her the right to brag about herself. I think not! She also offended several people using of foul language.

I would expect more from a graduate student in mass communications. I would think she would know how to write a column that dealt with issues others would relate to.If she has nothing better to write about, she should not write. It just wastes our time.

If you get nothing out of this letter, at least you will have something to complain about.

kansas state COLLEGIAN

Unlike any other intrastate rival, K-State battles against KU draw crowds and spark conversations about which team is the best. Here is your pre-game analysis for the state's annual story by shana newell • art by matt hawkins

SUNFLOWER SHOWDOWN

In every battle, the leaders must have a plan of attack. For those leading the K-State and KU troops into the Sunflower Showdown Saturday, the plans vary as much as night and day.

For Bill Snyder, general of Wildcat forces, the plan is simple — present a balanced infantry-aerial (run-pass) attack while keeping the Jayhawk defense from perpetrating through the front lines.

But Snyder said he knows scoring first and scoring often isn't as easy as it sounds.

"Jumping out in front is easier said than done," he said.

But with Brian Kavanagh, Mike Lawrence, Marlon Charles and Kevin Lockett leading the troops, the Wildcats shouldn't have much to fear against the Jayhawk defense.

Quarterback Kavanagh is ranked second in the Big 12 in passing efficiency. He has completed 118 of 199 passes for 14 touchdowns and 1,401 yards and has thrown just three interceptions.

Running backs Lawrence and Charles have combined for 952 yards on 220 attempts, averaging 4.3 yards per attempt. Together, the duo has scored 13 touchdowns. Lawrence and Charles have been splitting time at starting, depending on who has the hotter hands and who has practiced better, Snyder said.

Senior wide receiver Lockett has the Wildcats' record for career receptions with 191, second in Big 8 history. On the season, Lockett has 46 receptions for 599 yards, an average of 13 yards per reception and 74.9 per game. As the most decorated of K-State receivers, Lockett is easily Kavanagh's favorite target.

"Kevin's Kevin," Kavanagh said. "You know he'll be there."

Watch for Jayhawk defenders to wreak havoc on the Cats' offense. Turnovers are their specialty this season, having forced 20 on the year, while the KU offense has only turned the ball over 11 times.

But statistically, the KU defense is one of the worst in the Big 12. Ranking 10th in total defense, the Hawks have allowed opponents an average of 137.2 yards through the air.

Mason, in listing K-State vs. KU elements head-to-head, said the Hawk pass defense is in trouble up against the Cat passing offense.

"We're hanging on for dear life," he said.

Hanging on for dear life is just about right. The Jayhawks are battle-scarred, with a 4-4 record on the season. They are 2-3 in conference play. A loss to K-State will most likely prevent the Hawks from attending a bowl game.

In to lead the Hawks to that win is quarterback Ben Rutz, in only his second starting assignment of his career. In the Iowa State battle last week, Rutz posted numbers any quarterback would envy. He connected on 14 of 22 passes for 204 yards and a touchdown. He also rushed for 37 yards and was the engineer of the eight-play, 71-yard drive that led to the game-winning touchdown to receiver Isaac Byrd.

Byrd is the second half of KU's aerial threat. He had a school-tying 11 receptions against Iowa State for 158 yards and a touchdown. Byrd is fifth on the Big 12 rankings for receiving yards per game, just behind Lockett. He has 39 receptions for 589 yards for an average of 73.63 yards per game.

Like K-State, the Jayhawks will attempt to balance their offensive attack by establishing a potent running game. Their plan is made simply by the presence of Heisman-candidate running back June Henley.

Henley is third in the conference, averaging 145.14 yards per game and 4.7 yards per carry. He has tallied 15 touchdowns on the season for the Hawks.

But K-State will bring the heavy artillery to the Showdown, a talented, explosive defense that could silence the Jayhawk weapons.

While the Jayhawk defense is one of the league's sorrier squads, the Wildcat defense is second on the list. Its strength lies in its pass-efficiency defense. The Cats have allowed opposing quarterbacks to complete only 88 of 225 passes for 1,051 yards and eight touchdowns. They've snagged 11 interceptions, including four by Canty.

The battlefield is set. The troops are prepared. The leaders are ready. The fans have traveled in droves.

The 94th annual Sunflower Showdown is about to begin.

Coaches partially responsible for sunflower rivals' victories

Dan Lewerenz
staff writer

The Jayhawks have gone to war behind 34 different men over the years, and few have won as many battles as Glen Mason. Bill Snyder is the 32nd leader of the Wildcat hordes — none have been more successful.

Kansas and K-State were once seen as two of the weakest forces in the nation. Now they are forces to be reckoned with.

Their leaders espouse the same philosophy — aggressive defense and a balanced attack. But their approaches, and the outcomes, have been dramatically different.

Mason, named Kansas commander-in-chief in 1988, has brought to the Jayhawks a grind-it-out approach led by a stellar cavalry. The school's all-time leading rusher, Tony Sands, began his career with Mason in '88. And running back June Henley, Kansas career leader in touchdowns and all-purpose yards, is finishing his senior campaign in Lawrence this season.

But for the cavalry to succeed, the infantry (holding down the offensive line) must also excel. And that, Mason said, is one thing his troops need to work on.

"Any running back needs good blockers," Mason said, "and we haven't been performing well up front."

To balance his offense, Mason looked last year to his field captain — quarterback Mark Williams — and an artillery barrage that found flankers Isaac Byrd and Ashaundai Smith a total of 92 times.

But Williams and Smith are gone, leaving Byrd with the responsibility of maintaining the aerial attack.

Snyder's troops, on the other hand, sport one of the most vaunted aerial attacks in the nation. The record books are sated with Snyder's troops in the passing categories — most yards in a season, Chad May; most touchdowns in a season, Matt Miller; most touchdowns in a game, Paul Watson and Brian Kavanagh.

On the receiving end is Kevin Lockett, the most prolific receiver in school history.

But Snyder knows the artillery means nothing if his captain is overrun on the ground.

And so he has assembled one of the finest infantry forces in school history, led by captain Jason Johnson. And that squad opens the gates for a young cavalry force led by junior Mike Lawrence and sophomore Marlon Charles.

"You have to establish the running game first," Snyder said.

The difference between the two — defense. Last year Kansas was defenseless against Snyder's artillery, while the Wildcat held the Kansas cavalry to just 19 yards on 30 attempts.

THE SUNFLOWER SHOWDOWN: SPORTS EDITORS AT WAR

Weary Wildcat sports editor wants KU to prepare to back up those words

It's a no-brainer, please.

Frankly, I'm tired of reading about how KU will trollop K-State this season.

I'm tired of hearing how KU has had such a sorry season that it has to devote all of its energy to one opponent, K-State.

After looking at past Collegians, I'm tired of reading how KU students are so great, while K-Staters are backward rednecks.

Puh-leese. I'm as city as they come.

When Bill Petulla, the sports editor at the University Daily Kansan, contacted me about exchanging columns, I was all for the idea. Hey, it's tradition, right?

But as I sat down to write my column, I found I didn't have much to say.

How can I sit here and berate KU's football program? Their fans do enough of that. After Chickenhawk lineman Scott Whittaker's lambasting of KU fans was printed in papers far and wide, Aloha Bowl officials would probably have to think twice about inviting KU to their game. As if the Hawks are even going to qualify for a bowl.

Perhaps one KU fan said it best when he wrote to the UDK, "So, I suppose what I'm trying to say is that you should stop pointing that fat finger of yours at the fans and point it at your football team. You guys are pathetic and embarrassing, you are offensively inept, and your defense is obviously below par."

Couldn't have said it better myself.

K-State will follow the example of KU running back June "I-wish-I-was-good-enough-for-a-Heisman" Henley, who insulted his girlfriend this last summer by not paying child support. The Wildcats will launch their own physical insult on the Jayhawks Saturday in Lawrence.

Make no mistake about it, folks. This is war. It has been written everywhere that the Chickenhawks can salvage their season by beating one team, K-State.

If only they spent the same amount of time preparing for every opponent. Perhaps their sports editor might have something better to write than how quarterback Ben Rutz is so wonderful. Perhaps he would be able to speculate where Jayhawk fans might be spending New Year's Day.

While Petulla enjoys Grandma's ham dinner, I'll be basking in the warmth of Dallas, San Antonio, San Diego, or, if the bowl gods smile brightly on K-State, Phoenix.

It's nice to be able to contemplate

• See K-STATE Page 7

Jayhawk sports editor discovers more than Wildcat weaknesses to bash

In years past, the aim of this column has been to find weaknesses and shortcomings of the K-State football team and spend 15 inches of space exploring those faults. But why limit myself by singling out such a small group when I can attack an entire backward institution?

But first, let's start with football and branch out, shall we? K-State, a program rich in football tradition, amassed 22 total (yes, total) wins in the decade of the 80s. This was before Bill "Monte Hall" Snyder got the head job. Snyder visited every juvenile detention center and prison from Philadelphia to Phoenix (for you Wildcats, those are two U.S. cities) with fat envelopes, telling recruits, "Let's make a deal."

The Wildcats are led on the field by Brian "The Canine Crusher" Kavanagh, who by my records is the only college-football quarterback in the land to have been charged with assaulting a dog.

Getting away from the gridiron for a second, let's talk about your simple-minded school. So without any further delay ...

From the home office in Lawrence, here are the top 10 ways you can tell a K-State student:

10. As a K-State couple drives by a trailer park, the man will glance over at his girlfriend and say, "Someday, baby, someday."

9. Your football team boycotted all of the James Bond movies, because it thought 007 was a crack about its GPAs.

8. Graduating means you get to hang your diploma next to the Arch Deluxe display.

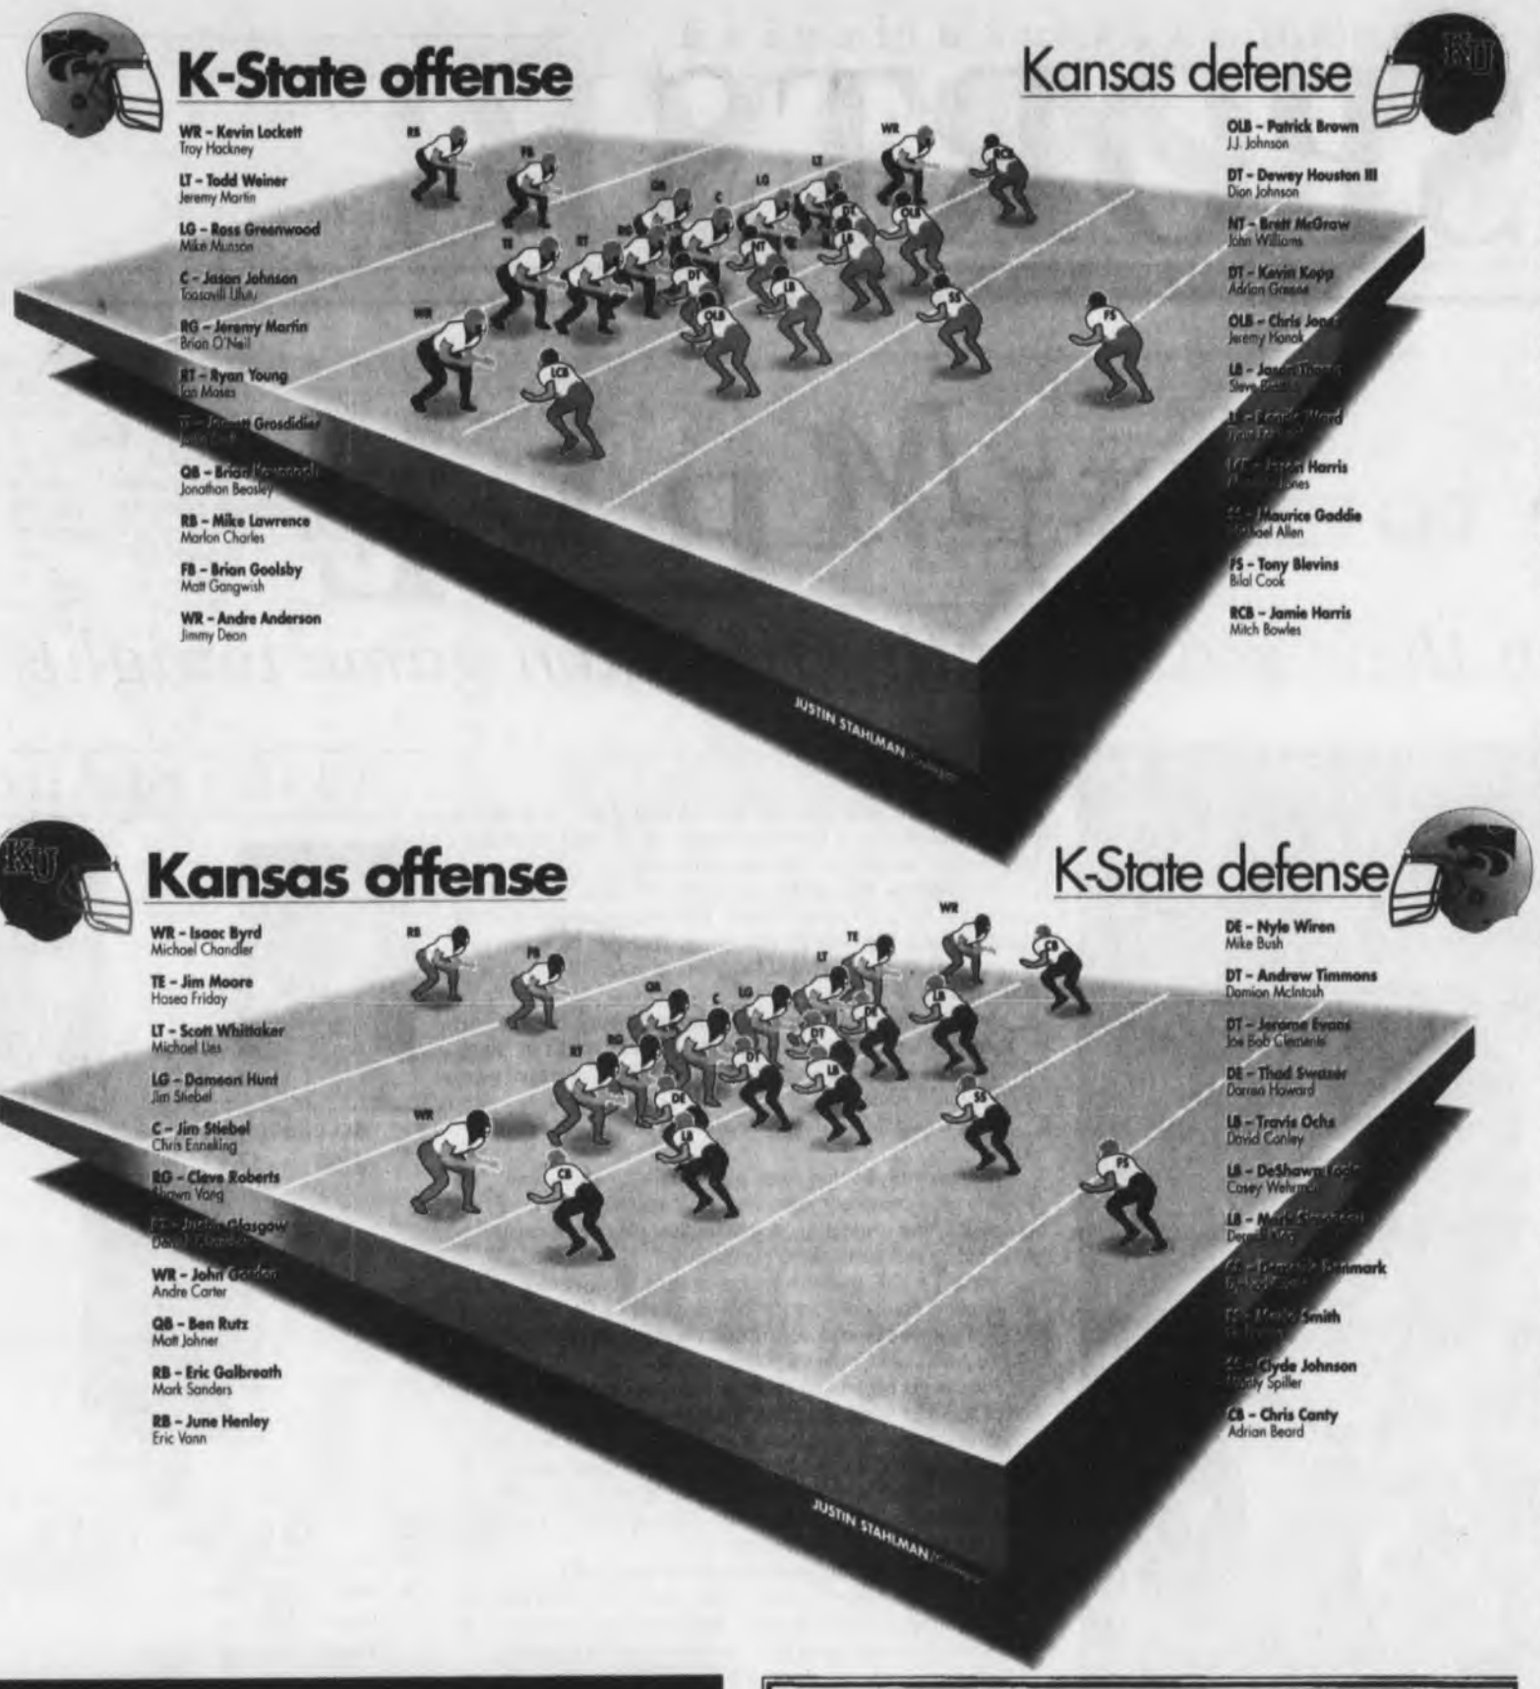
7. Your cheerleaders are so fat, their blood type is Ragu.

6. Your idea of plush wallpaper consists of monster trucks and Dukes of Hazzard posters.

5. Your football team's offensive line averages 280 in weight and SAT scores.

4. Your dad walked you to third grade every day, mainly because he was in your class.

3. Honor students are those who recite the alphabet with the fewest pauses.



2. Mind readers charge half-price in Manhattan.

1. Today you call KU students stuffy, preppy and snobby. Tomorrow you'll be calling them boss.

All kidding aside, K-State does run a top-flight football program.

In fact, they're No. 1 in my book ... and I've got proof:

• See KU Page 7

K-State

where the Wildcats might be going. Too bad Jayhawk fans are quickly turning their attention to basketball season.

But basketball is not the point here, is it? Football is the word, and football is the game. The rest is just details.

Unfortunately, Glen "I-can't-make-up-my-mind" Mason doesn't know how to coach football, and details appear to be eluding him.

First, Mason decides to take the head coaching job at Georgia. Then he reneges and crawls on his hands and knees, begging KU to give him back the job. Like they'd found anyone to take the job. Who would want to coach at Snob Hill, where football is practically a club sport?

K-State's win this Saturday was sealed Dec. 26, 1995, when KU rehired Mason.

Continuing his trend of indecisiveness, Mason couldn't decide which quarterback to start at the beginning of the season. The decision was made easy when Rutz went down with an injury. Who knows what would have happened if Rutz had remained healthy. Mason probably would have done the Missouri thing, interchanging quarterbacks as frequently as you change a baby's diaper.

Imagine that, comparing Missouri and KU. I can see the similarities, the biggest of which is the two teams' ineptness.

I guess I need to spell it out. D-E-F-E-N-S-E. Pardon me, Wildcat fans, while I clear this up for the Hawks.

Chickenhawks, when you put those letters together, they spell defense. (Could whoever is reading this column to the KU football team please explain what spelling means?)

Now that you've explained spelling, let me explain defense.

It means letting your opponent score as few points as possible. Ranked No. 2 in total defense in the Big 12, K-State will show Chickenhawk fans exactly what defense means Saturday. Just like the Wildcats did last year.

If anyone of you KU students have a problem reading this, you can e-mail me at (twobag@ksu.edu), and I will try to put it in simpler terms for you.

KU

Number of arrests made on football players in Manhattan this week (don't forget this column was written on Monday) — one.

Number of times Bill Snyder kicked off a no-name backup from the team, but turned the other cheek concerning three-year starter Nyle Wiren's involvement in the same incident this week — one.

Number of times your sports editor, Shana Newell, said the Wildcats could beat Nebraska this season — one.

Number of times Kav-Doggy-Dogg was benched against Nebraska after a horrid 34-yard and two-interception day — one.

Number of times Snyder went crying to the Big 12 office because it had originally scheduled the Wildcats to open up with Texas A&M, instead of eventual opening team Texas Tech — one.

Now come the promises.

Oh, yes, the Jayhawks will win tomorrow.

Yes, the Purple Pussycats will walk home with their tails between their legs.

Yes, Ben Rutz will throw for 315 yards, and June Henley will rush for 250 yards.

And yes, no goalposts will be torn down by anyone wearing the effeminate purple.

Sorry. I know they look like large pitchforks, but they have no farming use. The postgame ride back to your respective mobile homes and trailer parks will be made a bit more somber by the fact that you failed to best the Jayhawks in the only sport you have a legitimate shot at winning.

And in winning this interstate rivalry, the Jayhawks will experience a happiness so glorious, so splendid and so magnificent, the kind of happiness that is felt by all clear-thinking people in the country when they see the armpit of America (Manhattan) in their rearview mirror.

In the unlikely event that you K-State students plan on traveling to a more thriving and modernized metropolis like Wabaunsee or McClouth, you can e-mail me at (sports@kansan.com).

It's time to RUMBLE

The Wildcats begin their season with exhibition game tonight

JOHN BERGOREN
sports writer

Friday night, while everyone in Wildcat land will be dreaming of a football win over Kansas Saturday, the K-State men's basketball team will play its first preseason game.

The Wildcats will throw everyone they have on the floor against the NBC Thunder Camps with the exception of three players. Coach Tom Asbury announced Thursday he would redshirt Marcus McCullough and Joe Leonard in addition to transfer Duane Davis.

McCullough, a 6'5" junior guard from Danbury, Conn., came to K-State after two seasons at Olney Central College in Olney, Ill. McCullough led his team to a 24-9 record and averaged nearly 20 points a game.

Asbury said McCullough needed to develop some of his skills.

"He needs to develop some guard skills," Asbury said. "He needs to get a consistent jump shot. He's athletic as the devil, but he doesn't have a shooting range. He may play some small forward, but he still needs some guard skills."

Leonard, a 7'0" freshman center from St. Louis, averaged 8.9 points and 7.3 rebounds per game while shooting 60 percent from the field in high school. Leonard also averaged five blocked shots a game and totaled 98 blocks his senior season.

"Joe can get bigger and stronger and needs to learn some post moves and how to run the floor," Asbury said.

Davis, a sophomore transfer from Arizona State, will sit out to comply with NCAA regulations. He will have three years of eligibility remaining with the Wildcats after playing last year with the Sun Devils. Davis averaged 10.5 minutes and 2.5 points a game last season as a true freshman.

Asbury said he could have used Davis this season.

"He's a great player," Asbury said. "He'll get in and battle in the midst next year, and the other guys will have to be ready to go, because he's nipping at their heels everyday in practice."

With the NCAA rule that redshirts must be announced before the first game, Asbury took it to the line.

"They weren't easy decisions," Asbury said. "They're real difficult to know how they'll shake out down the road. Both (Leonard and McCullough) were real close to call, because I think both can help the team, and both of them can benefit by redshirting. That's why we waited as late as we did.

"It was a progressive decision. We told them from the beginning that they could possibly redshirt. We wanted them to think about it. We didn't force it on them. They both decided that redshirting would be best. We wanted them to see the big picture, and they'll both be better fifth-year players."

The rest of the team will suit up tonight against NBC Camps Thunder, a team of former college players who travel the world holding basketball camps for youth.

Ironically, the Thunder is coached by former K-State great Danny Beard. In Beard's playing days, he was voted as the Southern Illinois athlete of the year, first-team all-Midwest regional, along with being named as an honorable mention all-Big 8 as a starter for top-10 ranked K-State.

Asbury said the most important thing the team will get out of tonight's game was to see how the team acted in different situations.

"We want to take a good look at everybody on the team in game-like conditions against a team that is more mature and stronger," Asbury said. "In the two exhibition games, we won't spend a lot of time for preparation."

Wildcats finish 7th in last fall tourney

JON BALMER
sports writer

The K-State men's golf team pulled out a seventh-place finish at the Arlington Awards Invitational in Texas Wednesday.

But the team had more to celebrate as junior Chad Buckridge shot a 216 in three rounds to take first place at the Invitational. Combining course rounds of 68, 76 and 72, Buckridge finished even par and shot one stroke below Texas Lutheran's Jeff Lamp, who took second place. It was Buckridge's first-ever collegiate tournament win.

"He got off to a great start," Coach Mark Elliott said. "It had to have been a huge confidence booster for him. He was hitting shots when he had to."

The Cats team score of 907 was 18 strokes off tournament champion Oral Roberts, who shot a total of 889.

Buckridge's first-place finish was his best performance this season, and it was the highest any Cat has placed this year. His previous best was a 150 score in two rounds of play at the Red Raider Intercollegiate, Oct. 21–22 in Lubbock, Texas.

The Wildcats will not resume competition until the spring. Until then, Elliott said, they will be taking some time off to relax before working on conditioning.

Cats attempt to extend 3-match winning streak

JOHN BERGOREN
sports writer

The K-State volleyball team will try to put together back-to-back winning weeks with a win at Oklahoma Saturday. A win would extend the Wildcats' current winning streak to four matches.

Oklahoma sits at 13-10 on the season with a 4-8 record in conference play. Last week, the Sooners defeated Colorado 3-2 in Norman,Okla. Melissa Peterson tallied 28 kills, while Patrice Arrington and Sunny Spoonland chipped in 26 and 25, respectively.

Moore said the Cats would have to play well to beat Oklahoma.

"We're going to have to go in and and play some of our best ball to win," Moore said. "They're not going to be an easy team to beat."

The last meeting between the two schools saw K-State romp the Sooners 3-0 in Ahearn Field House.

K-State will carry the momentum of a win over Kansas Wednesday into the ballgame. The Wildcats downed the Jayhawks 3-1 in Allen Fieldhouse.

Kim Zschau led the team for the second straight game in kills. Zschau had 14 kills in the Kansas contest and 21 against Baylor.

Chiefs' defense needs to control Packers' Favre

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Just putting Brett Favre on the run might be the worst thing Kansas City could do.

Home underdogs for the first time in more than two years, the Chiefs figure they'd better get the Green Bay quarterback all the way to the ground, early and often Sunday.

"He's almost more effective when he's running than when he's staying in the pocket," Chiefs defensive tackle Joe Phillips said of the NFL's top-rated passer. "You've got to get to him and get him down, because that's the only way to stop him."

The Packers (8-1) have not embarrassed anyone who picked them and the Chiefs (6-3) as this season's Super Bowl entrants.

The Packers' five-game winning streak is their best in four years, and their 8-1 record is their best in 33. Green Bay is tops in the NFL in points (29.8 per game) and scoring defense (13.0).

K-STATE VS. KU: THE PEOPLE WHO GO TO WATCH

Sunflower rivalry draws crowds from Manhattan area

BATTLE in the HEARTLAND
A MULTI-PART SERIES

JON BALMER
sports writer

As the Sunflower Showdown gets ready to rumble Saturday, more and more fans eagerly await the chance to witness the battle in Lawrence.

Jayhawk supporters won't be the only ones to attend the in-state grudge match. Many K-State fans plan on descending on Lawrence to spread purple mayhem and back the Cats.

While countless K-Staters will be attending the clash in small numbers, certain groups plan on hitting Hawkville with a full-scale assault of purple-clad fans.

"About 10 guys from my house are heading down to the game," said Caine Kreimendahl, sophomore in business marketing and Phi Kappa Theta member. "We didn't buy tickets, so we'll probably watch the game on the hill."

Ticket prices to the KU/K-State contest were sold for $35 this year, playing an important role in how many people were willing to shell out the dough for the Showdown. However, one Sigma Nu member said he thought the success of the team would overshadow the cost of tickets.

"With the team's success and great record, people will pay to see the Cats," Steve Laughlin, junior in graphic design, said.

Laughlin said he and about 20 other members of the house are going to the game. This group also took a road trip to College Station to support K-State against Texas A&M Oct. 19.

"We found some guys within the house interested in seeing the Cats play and hit the road," Laughlin said. "At A&M, we stayed over at their Sigma Nu house during the weekend."

One residence-hall member said he had a bunch of guys ready for the gridiron carpool.

"Me and some of my Grunyons (buddies) wanted to show the Hawks what K-State is all about," Josh Vonloh, freshman in archeology, said.

With luggage packed, gas tanks filled and traveling grub bought, many K-State students will embark en masse to the annual battle.

Although it might be home-field advantage on paper, a plethora of Cat backers will do their part to make it look and sound otherwise.

"Two years ago, Lawrence was packed with purple," Laughlin said. "This year, I expect even more."

McCain behind the scenes

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

Taking in a show at McCain Auditorium means sitting back and relaxing for most people — except for Terri Lee. Lee is the assistant to the technical director of McCain.

Before any show she lifts and hauls, rigs lights and sets up sound. When it is time to watch the show, that's another story.

"I have a hard time sitting to watch a performance," she said. "I keep thinking there's something I should be doing."

Lee worked as a student staff member at McCain in the early '80s.

She finished her degree in theater in 1993 and now works doing what she loves best.

"I've always liked the backstage area," she said. "People don't realize what's behind the curtains. There's a lot more that goes into the illusion."

There's more to McCain than meets the eye, too, Lee said. For example, the stage, from plaster line to back wall, is 34 feet, 6 inches deep.

Another 5 feet can be added by raising the pit elevator level with the stage.

The orchestra pit is actually an elevator. When it is raised to stage level, panels are placed on top of the elevator floor, providing a surface consistent with the stage.

When the elevator is lowered another level, it reaches the orchestra seating, and a section of seats can be added. Move the elevator one more level down and voilá, it's an orchestra pit.

"The elevator is very job specific. It even has its own room number, as far as I understand," Lee said.

Riding the elevator down to the basement of McCain reveals a whole underworld. Under the stage is the trap room. Traps are sections of the stage floor that can be lowered or raised during a production.

> "I've always liked the backstage area. People don't realize what's behind the curtains."
> • TERRI LEE
> ASSISTANT TECHNICAL DIRECTOR

"With the traps, you can disappear or appear at will," Lee said.

The trap room is shared with the theater department, which stores costumes there. The music department stores its coral shell. Lee said McCain stores lighting equipment and a piano in the room.

There are dressing rooms for the men's and women's chorus, as well as separate rooms for principals. There are individual bathrooms in the star's dressing rooms, but the chorus bathroom opens into the public bathrooms.

"The music room has practice rooms in the basement," Lee said. "There are doors for the orchestra members to enter the pit."

Upstairs there is a green room in the backstage area, just like on television, but it is painted white. There are more dressing rooms for principal performers, but most of the area is taken up with the backstage.

"The stage manager's console is off to one side so one person can see what is going on without being seen," she said.

The console is a small metal stand on wheels. It contains levers, dials and switches. The console controls the pit elevator and mechanical pieces in the ceiling, among other equipment.

Looking out from the stage, the light booth and sound booth can be seen in the back behind the seats at orchestra level.

Lights and sound are both essential parts of any production, Lee said.

"Dance productions are more difficult because they often have heavy lighting and so do musicals or big theatrical productions," Lee said. "A performer like Midori is simpler and does not require a lot of technical work."

Students comprise the crew, which numbers 15. They are a diverse group, Lee said.

She has students from various departments, such as music, education, archaeology, business and horticulture.

"It works better if I get a freshman," she said. "Each year we bring in some new blood, so the old students can teach the new ones. That way they share their knowledge."

One special student job is running the follow spot, in the ceiling. To reach these spot lights, a student has to do a lot of climbing and spend time far above the audience. They stand to run the lights, which are large.

"I'm past the stage of finding that job fun but fortunately I've got a few adventurous students," Lee said.

One adventure she's looking forward to is creating an ice rink for Sleeping Beauty, Dec. 8.

"On Dec. 7 we are bringing in a refrigeration unit on a truck," Lee said. "We'll set up boundaries on stage, pour crushed ice and spray water on the ice to form an ice rink."

While there will be ice on stage, Lee said the auditorium won't be cold.

"You'd be surprised how much body heat a 1000 people can generate," she said.

Heating and cooling the building are usually not a problem, but recently the lights in McCain went down shortly before a performance by the Queensland ballet. That was probably the worst experience she's had, Lee said.

"Through no fault of anyone, we lost the lights, it was just a fluke," she said. "It was touch and go for a while, but we were able to get lights."

There is a lot of pressure getting ready for a performance, Jeni Brockman said.

"It's a tremendous amount of work but none of it is difficult," Brockman, a junior in animal science, said.

The work is never boring for Jeremy Seemann, sophomore in music education. Seemann has worked at McCain since February.

"It's never boring. The hardest part is dealing with the performers," he said. "But there's always variety in the work. A lot of the people I work with are fun."

NOT TOYING AROUND

Honor society fixes assistive communication toys for children

STORY BY CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON

Assistive technologies, to most people, means developing assistive communication devices for people who can't speak or designing assistive switches.

To the members of Tau Beta Pi, it means taking toys apart and making them work better for kids who use assistive technologies. Tau Beta Pi is the honor society for engineering students. Initiates are required to do one community-service project. Some work on the toys to fulfill the requirement.

"We modify the toys to fit a switch designed for the child's needs. For some kids, it's hard to play with a toy that has a small switch. But if it's bigger, it's easier to hit, especially if someone has a limited range of movement or limited coordination," Brad Gunther, graduate student in electrical engineering, said.

Gunther said the project started after a meeting with Conn Harrison, who works with the assistive school system. The system covers a 50-mile radius around Manhattan and has a toy-lending library. Some of the toys are donated to the clients.

"I leave it to his discretion," Gunther said. "The first semester we even had a toy end up in the Soviet Union when he took it with him to demonstrate for people there."

At Christmastime the group donates 10-12 new toys it modifies. In the spring it makes repairs.

It makes sure any toy works with any switch. Switches are designed individually and plug in to the toys.

"All the switch does is bridge a gap between two wires. We take the existing switch and leave it operational," Gunther said. "It takes a little time, but it's not hard work."

The most difficult part of the job is opening the toy for the first time and figuring out how it works. Gunther said since the project began last year, only one toy has not survived.

"I suspect it was already broken. It was a talk-back parrot, which is good for a kid who has trouble speaking. They can also use them to hear what they say," Gunther said. "That parrot had an attitude. I don't know if it still works."

Last year the group gave race cars and walking animals. Gunther said the walking toys don't last a long time, but they are often well-used. The group gets a lot of repeat toys to fix, but it gets a little easier the second time around.

Assistive toys are sold in catalogs but cost about $60 because there is not a huge demand, and there is not a lot of competition. The students take a $10 toy and modify it in about 30 minutes for a cost of about $1.50, he said.

"The thing is, the toys aren't just for play. Sometimes they are used for training. The child becomes comfortable with a switch they may later use to steer a wheelchair," he said. "Sometimes it improves a kid's coordination, or gives them some control over their environment."

The chapter is funded through the dean of the College of Engineering as one of his community-service organizations, Gunther said. This is the third time he worked on the toys. Pretty much any engineering student can help, because they all are somewhat familiar with electrical circuits, he said.

"I suspect it was already broken. It was a talk-back parrot, which is good for a kid who has trouble speaking. They can also use them to hear what they say. THAT PARROT HAD AN ATTITUDE. I don't know if it still works."
• Brad Gunther
graduate student in electrical engineering

"If you stop and think about it, it's a chance to do some hands-on work. You get to see what engineering amounts to. For some people, it's the first time to use a soldering iron," he said.

One of the faculty advisers for the club, Shelli Starrett, said the group is always looking for service projects.

There are two large projects. One is painting the sign on K-Hill, which is the one everyone talks about, she said. This is an alternate project for initiates.

Architectural engineering senior Jamie Dickson said she was a little nervous at first, because she is not an electrical engineer.

"This is the first year I've been involved. This is my initiation project," Dickson said. "Everyone is really helpful. I think this is really neat."

Another initiate, Scott Heideman, junior in electrical engineering, said the hardest part of working on the toys was keeping it all neat.

Chad Hall, initiate and senior in civil engineering, said he had no experience in electrical engineering.

"When I was a little kid, I would take my own toys apart, and sometimes I'd get them back together," Hall said. "When I went into engineering, I thought I'd work on bridges, not toys, but you learn to deal with people outside your discipline."

Last year Holli Shaffer, junior in civil engineering, fixed toys to become a member of the honor society.

"Working on the circuits is difficult, because I'm a civil engineer, and I haven't had to deal with them," she said.

Law-school hopefuls cramming for Law School Admission Test

CECILY RODRIGUEZ
staff reporter

This is not your run-of-the-mill Psych 101 exam.

Law-school hopefuls begin studying months in advance for the Law School Admission Test.

"I started studying this summer and planned to take it in October," Sarah Byall, senior in social work, said. "Some people take prep courses, but I just studied on my own

LSAT info
Students interested in taking the LSAT can call Law Services at (215) 968-1001.

For students with the self-discipline to prepare on their own, there are books to help. Books come complete with shortcuts and practice exams, and can be found at the library or purchased for about $20 or $30.

Some students take a different route.

Carrie Lynn, senior in family studies and community service, enrolled in an $800 KAPLAN course. The course met four hours twice a week. The closest city offering an LSAT prep course in Lawrence, which added to expenses.

"If I hadn't taken the course I probably wouldn't have studied — it's that simple," Lynn said. "Not because I'm lazy but choosing between watching Thursday night TV and reading story problems isn't much of a choice."

She said the class helped her figure out how to break down questions and showed her shortcuts for the problems. These strategies have also helped her in her regular classes at K-State. She said she understands multiple-choice questions quicker, and writing essays is easier.

Sometimes regardless of how early a student begins studying or how much outside help they have, it isn't enough.

"I realized I hadn't studied enough and decided to push my test date back," Byall said.

It is not uncommon for students to change their test dates.

"I was registered to take the LSAT in October, but I wasn't ready, so I changed my date to December," Lynn said, "This isn't something you can do halfway. This is one of the few tests I'll take in my life that actually has some bearing on the grand scheme of things."

To change their test dates, both Lynn and Byall were charged a $24 fee.

"As if I haven't put enough money into this whole process" Byall said. "I figured what's another 20-some dollars?"

According to the LSAT/LSDAS registration and information book, fees for the half-day test total $171.

This amount covers the cost of the test and a 12-month subscription with the Law School Data Assembly Service. LSDAS sends reports to the law schools a student applies to. One report is sent for free, and each additional report costs $8. Shipping and handling charges are not included in the base fee. They start at $3 and increase from there, depending on how many schools the student needs scores sent to.

> "This is one of the few tests I'll take in my life that actually has some bearing on the grand scheme of things."
> • CARRIE LYNN
> SENIOR IN FAMILY STUDIES AND COMMUNITY SERVICE

"I'm applying to six schools, so on top of the base $200 there's another $40 to have my scores sent out," Lynn said, "and of course, there's the application fee charged by each school. The schools I'm interested in range between $35 and $85. I don't even want to mention what the tuition is at these places."

When a student is a senior, preparing for the LSAT and maintaining regular classes can be a struggle.

"I take the LSAT right before finals," Lynn said, "so I feel really stressed. I'm also battling a major case of senioritis, which doesn't help matters much."

The Who's Tommy

See it! Hear it! Feel it! Like a silver ball buffeted by flippers, this five-time Tony Award winner charts the recovery of a boy struck deaf, dumb and blind after witnessing his father kill his mother's lover. From the pinball arcades of 1960s London comes the Broadway musical that fuses the magic of live theatre with the passion of rock and roll.

Corporate Sponsor: Commerce Bank.

Friday, Nov. 22, 8 p.m.

Call 532-6428 or come to the McCain box office.

Box office hours: noon to 5 p.m. weekdays. VISA and MC accepted. Tickets also available at the usual outlets.

• CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBER OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

• CLASSIFIED AD WRITING TIPS

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Uncertainty swirls around new California marijuana law

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — As celebratory marijuana smoke curled from pipes and joints at the headquarters of Proposition 215, uncertainty swirled around the future of California's newly approved medical marijuana law.

Although the law allows doctors to prescribe marijuana for medical reasons, there is no mechanism for patients to legally obtain it. And the measure is at odds with U.S. drug laws.

"We still have a federal law that says marijuana has no medical value, and that it is against the law to grow it, distribute it and prescribe it as medicine," said retired Army Gen. Barry McCaffrey, President Clinton's drug czar. "That's a law. Not my law. That's the U.S. Congress' law."

McCaffrey said Wednesday he planned to meet with Attorney General Janet Reno and other officials to discuss how the initiative, approved by California voters 56 percent to 44 percent Tuesday, affects federal drug-enforcement efforts.

The measure legalizes the cultivation, possession and use of marijuana for health reasons. Users hailed the initiative as a compassionate way of helping ease the pain and suffering of people with AIDS, cancer and other terminal illnesses.

The controversy did not bother Dennis Peron, a leader behind the measure.

"People have smoked pot as medicine for thousands of years," he said. "It's like we've taken the wisdom of the past and brought it to the future."

Steve Kubby of Squaw Valley, diagnosed with abdominal cancer 20 years ago, said he already has a doctor's verbal permission to use marijuana.

"I told my wife Monday night that this is the last night I'll have to break the law to get my medicine," said Kubby, 49.

The law technically went into effect Wednesday, but because marijuana is still illegal to sell, obtaining it is still against the law.

"You can talk to your doctor today," said Dave Fratello, spokesman for the Yes on 215 campaign. "But I can't tell you where to get it. I can only tell you you're not subject to prosecution if it's prescribed."

hear the bill, so it failed 31-20.

However, a motion to reconsider passed 34-16-2 after some senators revealed their votes would have changed the outcome if they had been at the previous meeting.

The group then discussed whether to hear debate on the bill again.

Some thought they were wasting time.

"We can do things effectively and in a short period of time, both," Aaron Truax, first-year veterinary medicine student, said.

Others said they thought they were doing their job.

"It's our duty to serve the constituents who elected us last spring," Bret Glendening, allocations chairman, said.

Still others thought the bill was an attempt to beat Student Body President Chris Hansen to the punch.

They alluded to rumors Hansen was planning to veto the bill from two weeks ago to get the money for Speech Unlimited.

The Senate finally mustered the two-thirds necessary to hear the bill with a vote of 36-16.

When the bill finally came up for debate, many senators brought up the same points as the Senate heard two weeks ago.

"If we're saying you can double-dip, we should let everyone double-dip," Tomb said.

He said this policy would make Senate just like an open cash register where anyone could come take money.

"I hate this body being called an open cash register, because I feel in essence that's what this body is. We're supposed to allocate the Student Activity Fee," Glendening said.

When the bill finally passed with a simple majority, it had a vote of 34-15-1.

R. Douglas Ackley, assistant controller for cashiers and student loans said cashiers will be in the K, S and U ballrooms for students to pick up checks.

Starting Jan. 10, students are allowed to pick up private scholarship checks. Stafford Loan checks will not be given out until the first day of classes, Jan. 16.

Moeder said the only students affected by the Stafford Loan process will be seniors and graduate students.

"We are in the process of phasing in the Federal Direct Student Loan for all students and phasing out the Stafford Loan," he said.

If students receive financial aid in an amount greater than tuition and fee debits, they will get a statement in the mail that shows a credit balance on their account.

Even if students owe nothing, it is required that they send in the top half of the statement of account in place of a payment. This will assure the University a student is planning to attend K-State and classes will not be dropped Jan. 8.

"What the registrar wants to do is get a positive response from everybody," Ackley said.

"You make a payment or you say you're coming," he said. "Either one of those will activate your account."

Credit balance refunds will also be available in the Union on Jan. 10.

"If students don't come in to pick up their credit balance refund check, we will mail it to them the week of Jan. 20," Ackley said.

Students will receive a flyer concerning new payment procedures during pre-enrollment and a payment instruction sheet with their statement of account in December.

"The important thing about this is that students read it," Ackley said.

and more prosperous."

He offered advice for Clinton in choosing a successor: "Somebody who has the capacity to provide forceful leadership, someone who has great tenacity, someone who has a lot of endurance and stamina."

Asked to list his proudest accomplishments, Christopher cited his role in promoting a ban on nuclear weapons tests and an indefinite extension of an international agreement to curb the spread of dangerous technology.

He also recalled decisions by Ukraine and Kazakhstan to surrender the nuclear weapons the Soviet Union had stored on their territory, and the attention he gave to global issues such as protecting the environment.

"Diplomacy is so much work in progress," he said. "You simply have to keep working at a job like this. I take most satisfaction at having been steady through these four years."

Clinton is expected to decide on Christopher's successor next week. Among those believed to be under consideration are George Mitchell, the former Senate Democratic leader; Albright; Anthony Lake, the president's national security adviser; retiring Georgia Sen. Sam Nunn; and Colin Powell, the former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

United Black Voices filed on stage once again and sang "'Til We Meet." Then Fallon led the group in a final prayer. He asked the people to stand and join hands with someone near them.

"Bow your heads, and reflect on God's unconditional love and what it means in all our lives tonight to be accepted unconditionally," Fallon said. "Be aware of the hand that you are holding. God's love comes from the people who care about us.

"Remember Stacey's life again. See her face and her wonderful smile, her good mind. She is calling to you to emulate her life. We remember her with joy and happiness," he said.

At the end of the service, people slowly walked to the front of the church. They placed red and white carnations on a table, between two glimmering candles. Stationed on either side of the table were two picture montages of Stacey Hall.

United Black Voices sang "Be Encouraged" as people slowly left the chapel. Some cried, some smiled, and some hugged one another. The memorial service was over, but it was clear the memories live on.

Battery, rape occur on campus

▪ Visiting student battered near Ford Hall Saturday.

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

A student from Friends University was battered outside Ford Hall early Saturday morning.

In addition to lumps on his head, he possibly has a broken nose and broken knuckle on his right hand.

"We're taking him to the doctor tomorrow. You can tell by the scrapes on his head they hit him with more than just their hands. If we find out who did it and they are over 21, we may file assault and battery charges," the father of the alleged victim said.

The alleged victim came to K-State to visit a friend who lives in Haymaker Hall. He walked another friend to Ford Hall, at 2 a.m. Saturday.

"(The Ford resident) and her friend went inside, and these two guys just came up and started talking to me. They said I was talking to their cousins. I started to talk to the one guy, and the other one hit me," the alleged victim said.

The alleged victim said from the bumps and scrapes on his head he thought he was hit with more than just a fist.

The alleged victim was punched in the nose and has a black eye now.

"I went inside the dorm, and everybody helped me," he said. "One had blond hair, and one had brown hair. I know I hit one after they hit me. I hit the one with blond hair."

Aside from the fact that both men are white and he knows the color of their hair, the alleged victim said it all happened so fast he barely knew what hit him.

At first he was so disoriented he did not know where he was.

Some people from Ford helped him inside and called the police.

The two suspects got away before the police arrived.

"This was (the victim's) first visit to K-State, but I think he'll be back," the Haymaker resident said. "I hope he'll be back."

From the size of the knot on the alleged victim's forehead and the one on the back of his head, the Haymaker resident said he thought the perpetrators used something other than their fists.

The alleged victim had a pretty good headache Saturday, the Haymaker resident said, but they managed to travel to the K-State vs. KU football game in Lawrence Saturday.

▪ Taking safety measures lessens likelihood of rape.

BRANDI HERTIG
staff writer

Rape can occur to anyone at any time. However, there are a few precautions people can take to make themselves less likely to be the target of an attack.

Tricia Hartman, night staff member at the Crisis Center, said walking alone at night or not looking confident can make people more of a target for an assault.

"Rapists are more likely to prey on people who are looking down (sad)," she said.

Sgt. Kurt Moldrup of the Riley County Police Department said being intoxicated or in any altered state can also put students at risk.

Even if they've just had a little to drink, their responses are going to be slower than normal, he said.

Moldrup and Hartman both recommended walking with friends at night rather than walking alone. Both also said students should be aware of their surroundings.

Moldrup said having a plan in mind before a dangerous situation occurs can be helpful.

"If this is what would happen, this is what I would do," he said.

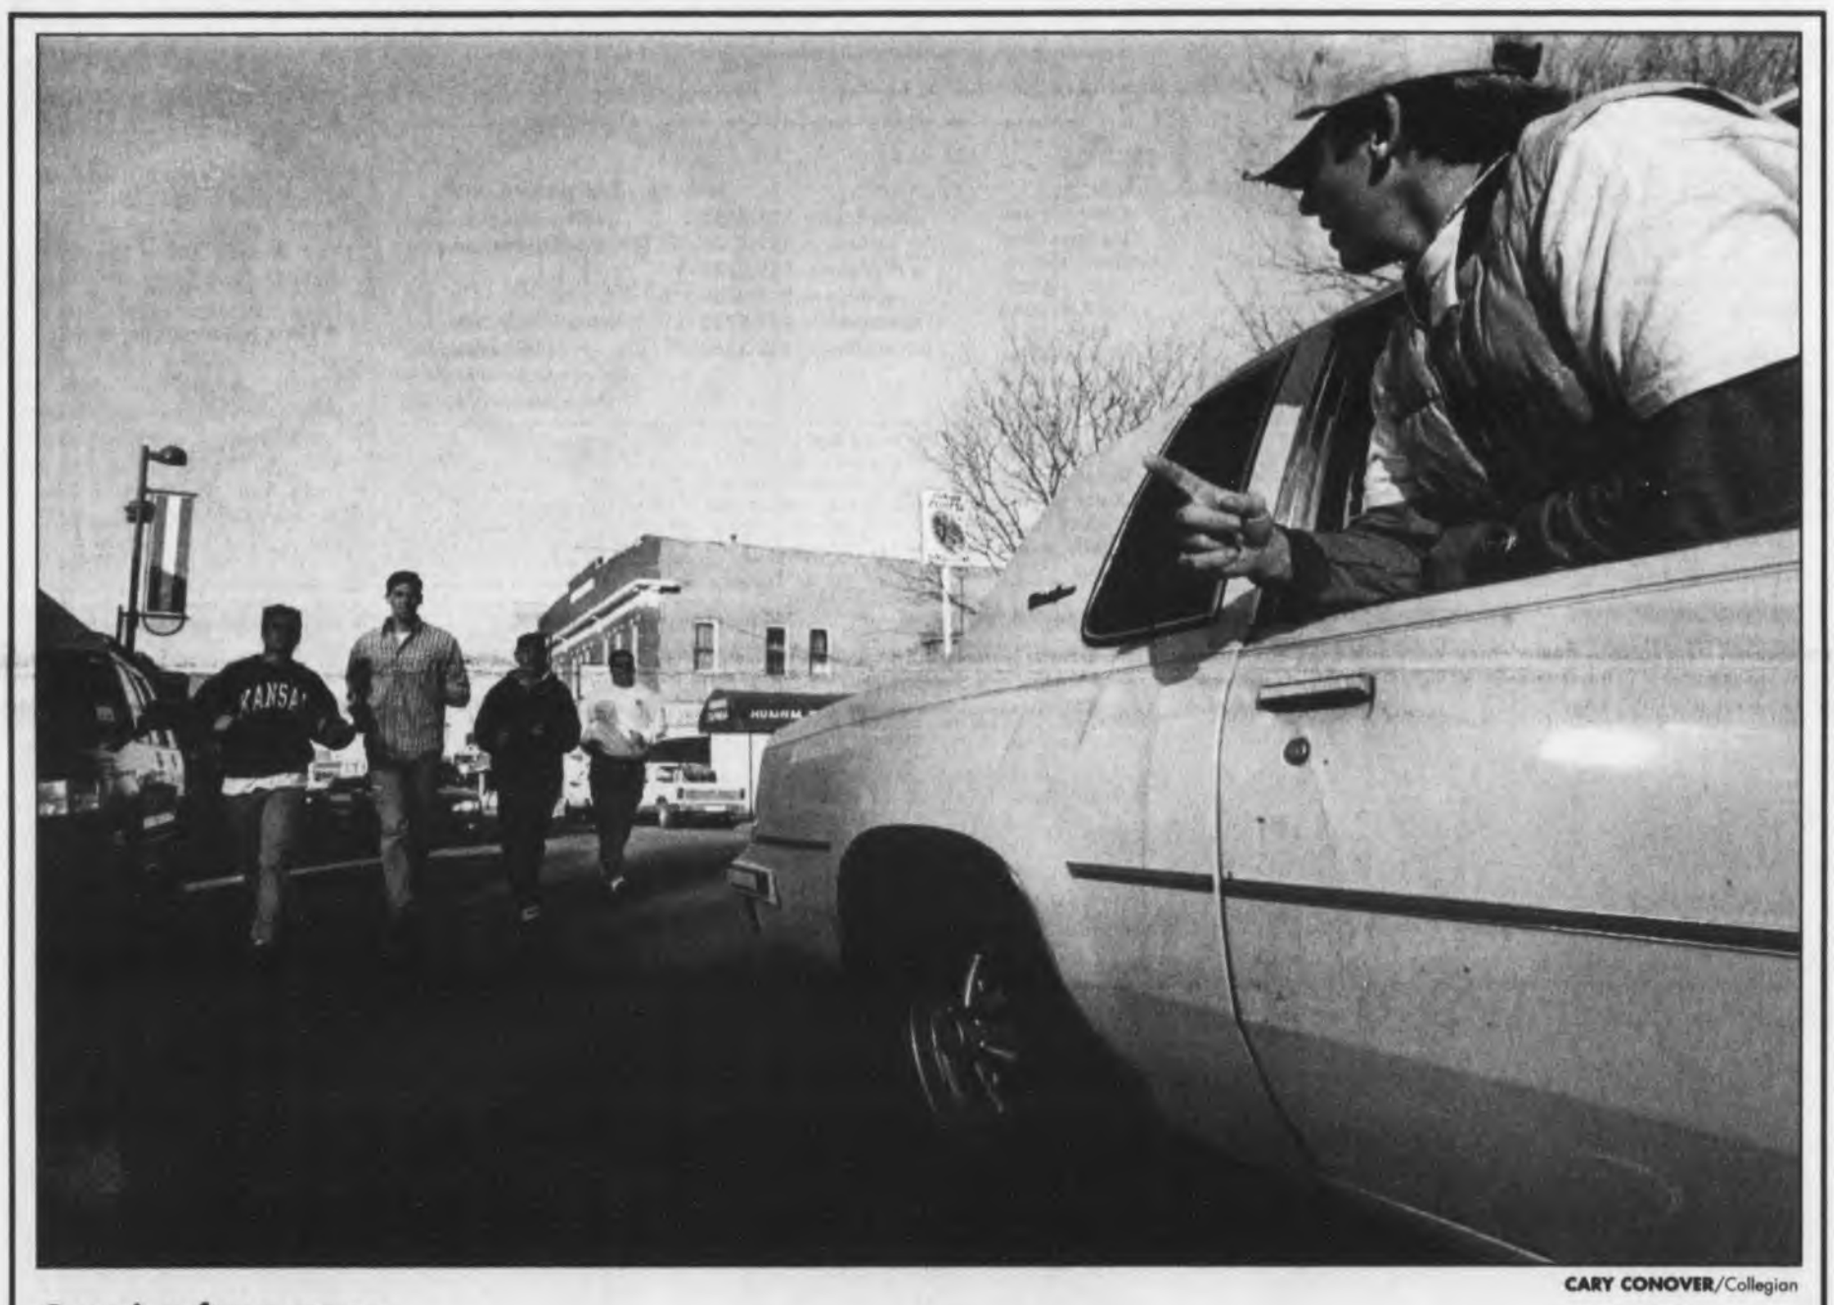
According to the Indianapolis Rape Awareness and Prevention's World Wide Web site, there are facts surrounding the issue of rape.

- Ninety percent of rapes are never reported.
- More than 50 percent of rapes occur in a residence, often in the victim's home.
- Age, ethnicity, socioeconomic status and lifestyle are not deciding factors for victims of rape.
- Up to 85 percent of rapes are committed by someone the victim knows.
- One in every three women will be the victim of attempted or completed rape in her lifetime.
- More than 80 percent of women report resisting their assailant was beneficial, with nearly 40 percent able to escape after fighting back.

The Web site also stressed the importance of victims' talking about their experience.

"Women who are assaulted need to be helped to talk out the experience. Forgetting about it can lead to further problems for the survivor."

RAPE REPORTED



K-State Police questioned a suspect Friday about an alleged rape that occurred on campus late Thursday night. The rape was reported by an 18-year-old K-State student.

Capt. Robert Mellgren of the campus police said the investigation is ongoing.

The incident took place in the victim's room at Goodnow Hall, a co-ed residence hall. The suspect, also a K-State student, lives in another residence hall.

The victim and the suspect knew each other and had been drinking, according to the Manhattan Mercury. The victim was treated at Mercy Health Center.

Help needed to raise funds for Center

ALIESA GOOD
staff reporter

The International Student Center is searching for ways to raise money to pay the salary for a clerical position in the office.

The ISC office has become increasingly busy and has no money in its budget, Donna Davis, ISC director, said.

A group of international students met Friday night to discuss the situation.

One proposal is to institute a $15 fee on all international students.

"If we charge $15 to all international students, that would generate more money than needed for the staff position. The extra money would be used to do creative things to help students," Davis said.

The majority of students in attendance were opposed to this idea. Many international students think they already pay enough money for services on campus.

The group is also considering going before the Student Governing Association to ask for a $1 fee increase that would be paid by all students.

"I like the idea of spreading out the burden of the $1 fee. It would make us aware of the fact that the ISC belongs to all of us," said William Richter, associate provost for international programs.

However, Chris Hansen, student body president, said a $1 fee for the entire student body wasn't appropriate. Hansen said he thinks the ISC has worked hard searching for places to obtain the funds.

"I think the ISC is doing a good job trying to find appropriate donors for the funds," Hansen said.

Everyone recognizes there is a problem but is reluctant to pay for it, Richter said. The international students themselves are the last group to which the appeal has been made to help out.

There are three full-time advisers for the 930 international students on campus.

The ISC is looking for architects for the expansion of the center, which will be paid for with private funds.

Revolutionaries seize Zaire land in opposition of their president

SPEED

▶ Self-styled revolutionaries continued their struggle to overthrow the Zairian president this weekend and have seized 175 miles of territory, possibly with other military assistance.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GOMA, Zaire — The rebels who have overrun eastern Zaire characterize themselves as 1960s revolutionaries who have long struggled to overthrow President Mobutu Sese Seko, whom they blame for ruining the country.

Experts agree that's what they are, but they said they wouldn't have seized 175 miles of territory and driven hundreds of thousands of Rwandan Hutus from U.N. camps without the help of professional armies — Rwanda's in particular, but also Burundi's and Uganda's.

"The Rwandans could not intervene themselves in Zaire, so they took those movements and put them on the forefront," said Colette Braeckman, a Belgian journalist and author who has written extensively on Zaire.

The conflict began last month as a regional uprising and has since broadened to include a spectrum of ethnic groups and regional rebellions.

Many view it as an extension of Rwanda's and Burundi's civil wars, rooted in Hutu-Tutsi ethnic rivalry. An influx of Rwandan and Burundian Hutus into Zaire in recent years has exacerbated long-standing tensions among indigenous Zairian peoples.

The fear is that Zaire, struggling with its own ethnic divisions and a wrecked economy, might deteriorate into a bloody mess of warring provinces. The absence of Mobutu, who has been in Europe for cancer treatment since August, has only heightened fears of instability in the heart of Africa.

The conflict started when the Banyamulenge — ethnic Tutsis who have lived in Zaire for hundreds of years — took up arms against the ill-equipped, ill-disciplined Zairian military.

The rebellion followed a campaign of harassment that began with the denial of Zairian citizenship for the Tutsis 15 years ago. Last month, they were threatened with expulsion from their homeland in South Kivu province.

The leader of the rebel movement, the Alliance of Democratic Forces of Liberation (Congo-Zaire), is Laurent Desiree Kabila, a one-time Marxist who has struggled against Mobutu for half his life.

Kabila's re-emergence has evoked memories of a series of failed regional rebellions and leftist uprising in the 1960s and 1970s against the dictatorship of Mobutu, who seized power in 1965.

Some diplomats suggested Kabila is an opportunist taking advantage of the rebels' successes or is a front for Rwandan involvement. But rebel military commander Andre Ngandu Kassasse said outsiders misunderstand the rebellion.

It is a popular uprising against Mobutu's rule that cuts across ethnic lines, Kassasse said in an interview at a commandeered house on a broad, red dirt road in Goma.

"Banyamulenge, Bahunde, Nyanga, Kasai, Nande, Bavira and the rest — we have all united to attack Mobutu's government," he said. He wore a blue beret and a scavenged Zairian army uniform, neatly tucked into buckled boots.

A strong theme of resistance to ethnic discrimination, however, runs through the alliance's doctrine, which urges Zairians "not to yield to the regime's temptation of incitation to inter-ethnic violence."

Kassasse said the rebels have no interest in seceding from Zaire or becoming part of Rwanda, and urged Zairians to fight their real enemy, the state machinery that has exploited them for decades.

Clinton calls decision to air hard-liquor ads irresponsible

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Clinton condemned the decision of the nation's distillers to end their longstanding voluntary ban on airing hard-liquor ads. He called it an irresponsible move that will make the job of raising children harder.

At the same time, Clinton applauded the four biggest broadcast networks for promising to continue to refuse liquor advertisements and called on other broadcasters to do the same.

In Saturday's radio address, the first since his re-election, Clinton also renewed his appeal to tobacco companies to stop aiming ads at children and sounded anew the themes that marked his campaign.

"It is not insignificant that in the first radio address of a second term, the president emphasized our shared common values and the importance of passing those values on to our children," said senior presidential adviser Rahm Emanuel. "The president continues to use the bully pulpit to challenge all Americans to come together in protecting children."

Clinton said the distiller's decision to air liquor ads on radio and television — a decision apparently prompted by the fear of losing market share to beer and wine — means "exposing our children to such ads before they know how to handle alcohol or are legally allowed to do so.

"That is simply irresponsible," he said.

Clinton urged other broadcasters and cable operators to follow the example set by the ABC, CBS, NBC and Fox networks to keep liquor ads off the airwaves.

"Parents have a hard enough time raising good kids these days, and all of us have a responsibility to help them make those jobs easier, not harder," the president said.

Clinton repeatedly emphasized his determination to use government to help parents "protect their children from bad influences that come from outside the home."

He centered his radio talk on the dangers posed to children by two of those influences, tobacco and alcohol.

"To tobacco companies, we should all say, 'Sell your products to adults, but draw the line on kids,'" Clinton said.

"And to liquor companies, we

• ARMY SEX-SCANDAL CHARGES INCREASE. U.S. Army instructors charged with raping and harassing female recruits at the Army's Aberdeen Proving Ground are also accused of threatening them — sometimes with death — to keep quiet. Four drill instructors and a captain at the Army Ordnance Center have been charged, three with criminal charges and two on administrative counts. They and 15 others have been suspended in the widening investigation. The five men facing charges, which range from rape to sending improper love letters to the trainees, were accused of harassing at least a dozen women in their first weeks of training. The average age of the women was 21.

• FBI INTERVIEWS DISCREDIT FRIENDLY-FIRE THEORY. FBI agents interviewed newsman Pierre Salinger at his Paris home Saturday and found his document claiming a Navy missile accidentally downed TWA Flight 800 was nothing more than Internet chatter. James Kallstrom, head of the FBI's criminal investigation, said Salinger's two-page document is the identical message that has circulated on the Internet since August. The message has spawned rumors that friendly fire was behind the July 17 explosion of the Paris-bound jumbo jet, which killed all 230 people aboard. Federal officials have repeatedly said such rumors have been investigated and disproven. And after Salinger's claim gave the theory new life, Kallstrom called a news conference Friday to label it nonsense.

• LEADERS HELD ACCOUNTABLE IN BOSNIAN WAR. The firing of Bosnian Serb Gen. Ratko Mladic could be a sign that international pressure to remove war crimes suspects from office has paid off — even though Mladic is likely to remain powerful. Early Saturday's ouster of wartime military leader Mladic, who is accused of leading some of the Bosnian war's most vicious campaigns, is the first significant personnel change among the Bosnian Serbs since the summer, when Radovan Karadzic was forced to step down as civilian leader.

The move — Mladic's staff was sacked as well — also demonstrates that the Bosnian Serb leadership might be moving further away from its former patron, Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic. In her statement dismissing Mladic, Bosnian Serb President Biljana Plavsic cited international opposition to having a person indicted for war crimes heading a formidable military force. Mladic has twice been indicted by the U.N. war crimes tribunal in The Hague, Netherlands.

• EXPLOSIONS DAMAGE MUSLIM HOMES. Explosions leveled or badly damaged nine Muslim houses in a Serb-controlled area of a demilitarized zone near where U.S. troops were patrolling, police and aid officials said Sunday. The attack, one of the worst since NATO-led troops arrived 11 months ago to separate Bosnia's warring sides and enforce peace, highlighted simmering tensions in areas where refugees want to return to their homes in areas controlled by rival factions.

• CHINA UNVEILS TRADE SANCTIONS. Turning up the pressure before a visit by the U.S. secretary of state, China said Sunday it will ban imports of American fruit, beverages and other goods in retaliation for a fine for alleged trade violations. The United States levied a $19-million penalty on China on Sept. 6 for attempting to ship garments to the United States through other countries, thereby skirting quotas and violating a 1994 trade pact. China's retaliation, the latest in a series of trade disputes that have soured China-U.S. relations, comes less than two weeks before a planned visit by Secretary of State Warren Christopher.

• ISRAEL EASES RESTRICTIONS. Israel on Sunday eased restrictions barring Palestinian workers and goods from the country. The army said 35,000 Palestinians who are married and older than 30 would be allowed in from the West Bank and Gaza Strip. The announcement followed a week of heightened security because of fear Islamic militants would attempt an attack in Israel to disrupt talks over Israel's military withdrawal from Hebron. Palestinians in the impoverished Gaza Strip praised the decision.

Alan Eugene White, 26, had been named as a suspect within weeks after the bodies of an 81-year-old woman, her daughter and great-grandson were found in the older woman's Salina home in July. White, formerly of Salina, was arrested by the FBI.

• GARDEN CITY FAMILY ON TRIAL. A man whose family was once the world's largest corn grower is due in federal court with his daughter this week to face charges that they defrauded the U.S. Department of Agriculture of $3 million. Dean Gigot and his daughter, Gina Herrmann, both of Garden City, were indicted in February, each on one count of mail fraud and three counts of making false statements. They each could face up to 45 years in prison if convicted in the trial, scheduled to start Tuesday with jury selection.

CORRECTIONS

• Because of a production error in a cutline in Friday's Collegian, the mother of Stacey Hall was identified as Ruby Davis. Her name is Ruby McDavis.

• There was an editing error in the article "Professor criticized for backing students" in Friday's edition of the Collegian. One professor, David Demers, got into trouble with his employer. The article reads that more than one professor was in trouble with their employer. The Collegian regrets these errors.

3-day course teaches artificial insemination

JANN STOUGH
staff reporter

One K-State class teaches students to mess with Mother Nature.

Last week, several students participated in a three-day training school to learn how to artificially inseminate cattle.

Artificial insemination is the process of breeding a cow without the bull present. Students learned how to place a small straw of thawed semen into the proper place of a cow's reproductive tract.

"It's a chance to take the bull out and turn the decision over to human race," Bill Jackson, animal science and industry instructor, said. "We do this for genetic improvement to benefit the beef or dairy industry."

The class uses semen that has been previously collected from a bull. The semen is processed into small straws and can be kept in liquid nitrogen for years.

The training school has been running since 1965 through the Kansas Artificial and Breeding Service Unit. This is the first year it is offered through K-State.

Jackson said KABSU offered the course as a promotional tool for it. Now that K-State has taken it over, the University can better use KABSU's professors and extension specialists to help teach the class.

The class looks at removed reproductive tracts, then spends about 10 hours practicing how to find everything inside a live cow.

"It's not easy. You can't learn it from a book. You have to know what it feels like inside without being able to look," said Eric Garcia, sophomore in animal science and industry.

Jackson said the procedure is not for the weak-hearted. The back end of a cow can get pretty messy, he said.

"Not everyone has the stomach for it. I've had people pass out, and some have thrown up," Jackson said.

During the three days, the students also get tips on how to increase conception rate by proper heat detection, semen handling, reproductive health and selecting genetically superior bulls.

Justin Trost, junior in animal sciences and industry, said the lectures will help him improve his own herd's genetic base.

"I took the class because I wanted to get the knowledge myself so I don't have to pay someone else to do it," Trost said.

Jackson said the biggest challenge for students is in their minds.

"You have to tell yourself that you can do it without looking. If you can get past that, it's easy," Jackson said.

Class notes

The class costs $225. Students have the option to take it for one hour of credit. K-State offers seven or eight classes a year, and the next one will be offered in mid-December.

IN OUR OPINION

Caution should be exercised when hard liquor is advertised

Jack Daniel's commercials might soon be dancing on the television screen alongside the latest episode of "ER" and tampon commercials.

The self-imposed restrictions of advertising hard liquor products such as whiskey and vodka has been lifted, and alcohol companies have given themselves permission to advertise on television.

WHY WE CARE

Alcohol companies have understandably lifted self-imposed restriction on TV advertising. Companies and consumers need to be responsible.

We think this is a perfectly sensible act.

In a capitalistic economy, businesses should be allowed to jump at opportunities to increase profits in any legal way possible — including advertising.

But (you knew there would be a but, didn't you?) companies that sell age-appropriate products, such as alcohol and tobacco products, should have age-appropriate advertisements to sell those products.

We are assuming no alcohol companies would be irresponsible enough to advertise Jim Beam in the middle of "A Winnie-the-Pooh Halloween," but they should keep their advertisements focused and as far away from teens and underaged drinkers as possible.

There is an appropriate target audience for these ads, and alcohol companies should remember that.

Advertising only after 9 p.m. would be one possible solution.

This is the same restriction some networks have put on other programming with mature or adult themes, such as "NYPD Blue."

It's not only the networks that should be held responsible for these advertising restrictions, though.

It is the companies that are selling the hard liquor products.

They saw the need when they made the regulation to not advertise on television, so surely they can see the need to keep the advertising appropriate.

We don't want this to turn into another Joe Camel incident, in which cigarette companies deliberately focus on teen-agers and bring teen smoking to an all-time high.

But no matter what the restrictions, self-imposed or otherwise, consumers are responsible for what they buy and what they put into their bodies.

Alcohol companies should behave responsibly in advertising.

But consumers have the final responsibility to decide what is right and wrong for them.

"All men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness' ... and the right to free cable television

I exercised my right to vote last Tuesday. I even did the parent thing and took my boys into the booth with me. We filled in the Scan-Tron ballot. Apparently, I got all the answers wrong.

Voting is great, because it gives me the right to do something else I love — complain. If you don't vote, you can't complain.

I voted in this election, so I now have the right to bitch and moan about everything the government does until the next election.

All this election-year hype compelled me to think about all the other rights we have in this country. Among them, we all have the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Normally, I'm not a patriotic person, but that's nice.

I'm particularly fond of that last one, the right to pursue happiness.

It just sounds so great.

I often wonder if that means we don't have the right to actually be happy, but just to pursue happiness.

If the government really wanted us to be happy, it would guarantee us some other, more useful stuff.

I have a few suggestions.

The right to cable television.

Cable television is not a luxury. It is a necessity here in the armpit of Kansas. It is our only connection to the outside world.

Without the wonderful people at TCI of Kansas taking our money every month and providing us with cable television, we would all be on our roofs with large antennas and industrial-sized rolls of aluminum foil, trying to tune in the public-television station from Topeka.

The problem is the people at TCI know exactly where you would be without them, so customer service and compassion do not have to be the hallmarks of their company.

If cable television were a government-given right, you could tell TCI what time to come to your house, and it could wait around outside all day for you.

The right to walk naked in the rain.

No reason, really.

It would just feel cool.

The right to ban country music from your workplace.

Don't get me wrong here.

I recognize country music as a legitimate form of musical expression. I should not, however, be forced to endure hours of this expression while I work.

The sad tales of lost loves, bad beer and breaking in new boots is proven to bring down office morale and stifle worker productivity.

The right to marry whomever you please.

If something possesses you to want to legally commit yourself to the institution of marriage, blessed be.

If you are convinced you have found someone you can stand to be with day in and day out, when they are sick and poor, never to be with anyone else, until you die, then go for it.

Cheap car insurance, towels, toasters and tax breaks for all.

Amen.

The right to eight hours of sleep a night.

The world would be a much more pleasant and safer place to live if everyone got enough sleep. Think of all the car accidents and murders that could be avoided if we were all well-rested and less moody. Productivity would soar.

> "We all have the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Normally, I'm not a patriotic person, but that's nice. I'm particularly fond of that last one, the right to pursue happiness. It just sounds so great. I often wonder if that means we don't have the right to actually be happy, but just to pursue happiness."

The right to go into restaurants without shoes. The shirtless thing I understand. I could not go into a public place without my shirt on.

But the whole shoe thing has always puzzled me. My feet are under the table. I'm not eating with them. You can't see them.

As long as the waitress isn't serving me with her feet, I could care less whether she has shoes on.

The right to free laundry mats.

Clean clothes are a necessity for the welfare of a society.

It is hard to love thy neighbor if his clothes smell like wet dog.

We should be guaranteed the right to wash our clothes for free or to be naked when we run out of clean clothes.

(Allowing public nudity would create the need for a whole new set of laws and rights regarding cleanliness.)

As citizens, we are guaranteed rights and freedoms.

I would like to be guaranteed freedom from certain things, such as freedom from religion and freedom from the press.

I enjoy and take advantage of the rights the best I know how.

I live life to its fullest.

I pursue happiness every day.

Exercise your rights.

KU sports editor's column was shallow, lacked tact

Editor,

I have just finished reading, with extreme amusement, Bill Petulla's column in "Sports Editors at War." This incredibly shallow column only exemplifies the University of Kansas' desperate attempt to get a small word in somewhere. His abusive name-calling (I'm sure Brian Kavanagh will ultimately throw in the towel after being called the Canine Crusher and Kav-Doggy-Dog) and game-show comparisons should be published in Mad magazine than a respectable newspaper.

Petulla's top 10 list was cleverly amassed from a personal meeting with Jeff Foxworthy. I'm astounded that he would stoop low enough to prove KU knows of Foxworthy. Because this was a sports column, I expected football to be the subject. Instead, it seems Petulla's cowardly attempt to find something wrong with the Wildcats had to be directed toward the school itself, calling us the armpit of America. (Ouch, that hurt.)

I just wish he could have put some facts behind his column. Two actual football stats from the Nebraska game just don't make a sports opinion. Having the class K-State has, I won't even mention the KU-Nebraska game. After 10 years of writing classified ads, Petulla will really know what it is to live in a trailer.

Columnist faces the fear of disappointing her parents while fulfilling her career-oriented ambitions

MY VIEW

Roopa SWAMINATHAN

Picture this. The year ... . (Oops! Wrong call.)

Let me start again.

Picture this. A long time ago, a girl was born to two proud parents. Because a son had been born a few years back, the arrival of the girl brought great joy to the couple, because it meant their nuclear family was now complete.

In a society that is totally patriarchal by nature, the birth of a girl in India is not exactly welcomed. Amid this, it was refreshing to see how this girl child was longed for, yearned for. As do all mothers, the mother in our story above thought her daughter was the most beautiful child in the world and christened her so. The child was named Roopa, which meant beautiful.

True mother's love indeed. Of course, this very name turned out to be an embarrassment of sorts later on. Though the child might have been beautiful, the less said about her now, the better. To this date, the mother looks at her daughter in horror and goes, "What the hell happened to you? I remember what you looked like then. Look at you now!"

The above is a true story. It is my story. With my name started an uphill battle to be what my mother wanted me to be, to what I eventually turned out to be, which unfortunately, so far, is nothing. But the struggle continues. I am still hoping. Dreaming of mega-success. Maybe one of these days ... .

> "Most parents think their child is the chosen one... . This brings with it both a sense of thrill and fear. The thrill is in knowing you are special to at least two people in the world... . The fear is in knowing that those are the very two people whose expectations you have to fulfill."

Wanting to fulfill her ambitions vicariously through me, unfortunately, I have never quite been able to fulfill any of my mother's desires.

Not that I blame myself for looking the way I do. I had no choice in the matter. She must have been hallucinating when she named me Roopa. I mean, mother's love or no love, give me a break.

Surely she wasn't blind.

Her next great worry about me is why I never wear any make-up.

Geez.

As if that would make any difference.

There are faces, and then there are faces!

I guess I could have at least tried to fulfill Mom's other expectations of me. She expected me to marry by 23 (it was the right thing to do). She could never understand why I did not. I had a simple enough reason for that. No one ever asked me. I never told her that. I just pretended (very convincingly, I might add) I was totally career-oriented. It worked. Once she accepted reality, Mom reveled in my so-called unconventionality and let me concentrate on my career. Not that she approves one little bit of my career choice.

I want to be a scriptwriter in Hollywood.

Groan.

An Asian woman in Hollywood. In an industry in which women of color are noticeable only by their absence, I have an easy career goal indeed. And then there is Mom's take on the issue. She always wanted me to use my brains when it came to choosing my career. And she is firmly convinced it does not take a lot of gray cells to write stories that pretty much say the same thing.

Good wins over evil.

The plainest of all Janes always gets the hunk (only in the movies, mind you). Or something like that.

Spoken like that, I guess I have to agree.

Still, it is what I want to do.

Life is so strange, really.

Most parents think their child is the chosen one. The special one. This brings with it both a sense of thrill and fear. The thrill is in knowing you are special to at least two people in the world — your parents.

The fear is in knowing those are the very two people whose expectations you have to fulfill. As I celebrated my birthday yesterday — away from home — the passing of yet another year hit me hard. Everything is so temporary.

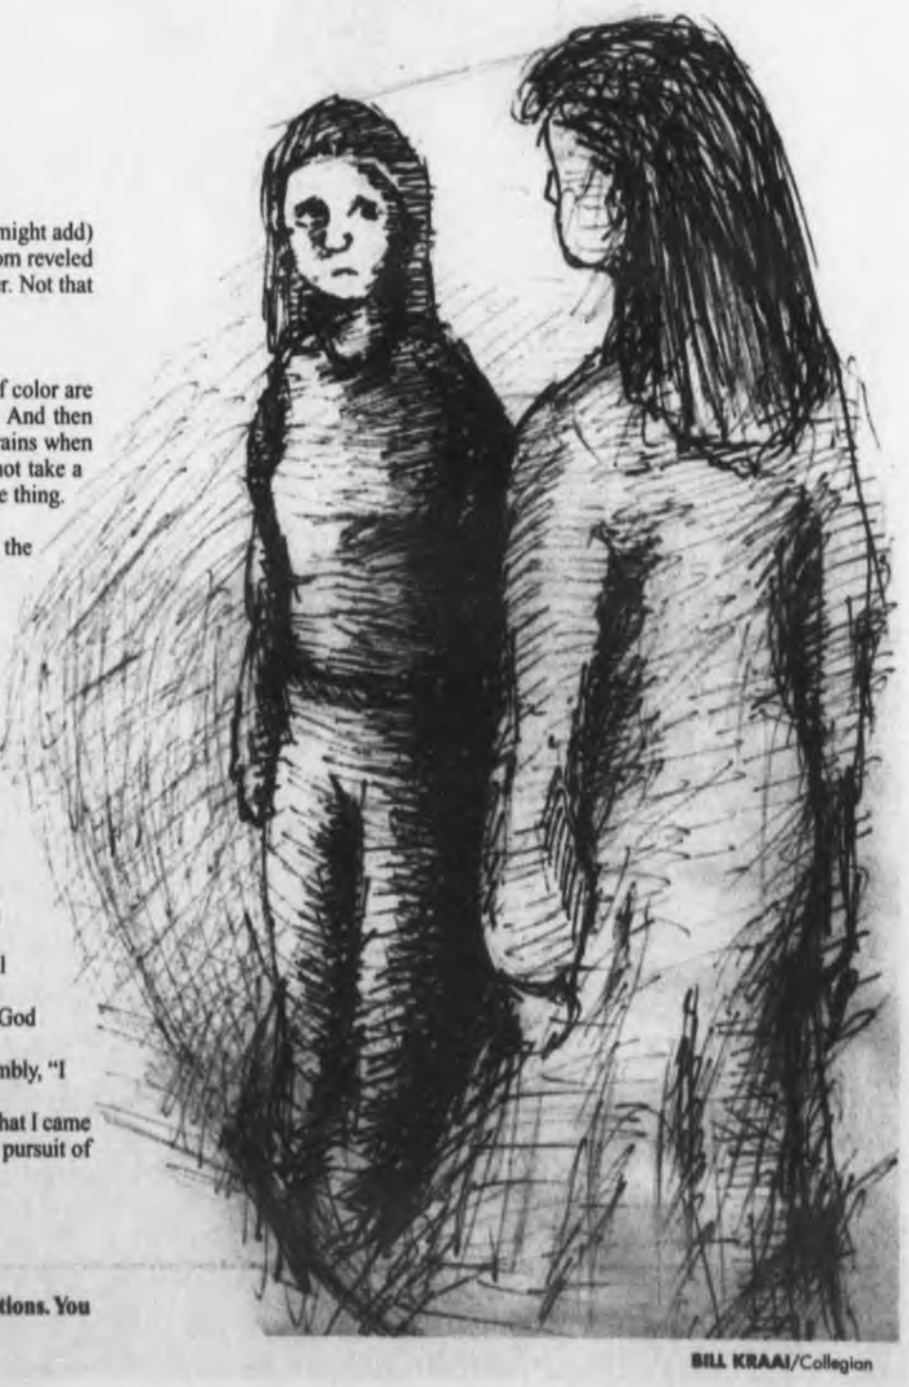
You change. People change.

You go from being called a girl to being called a lady (if you are lucky).

You go from not putting candles on your birthday cake to still not putting candles on your birthday cake.

You go from being Daddy's girl to still being Daddy's girl (thank God for that).

You go from arrogantly saying, "I am as old as I am," to saying humbly, "I am as old as I feel."



Oh, yeah. Yet another year gone. Giving me a year less to achieve what I came here for, even as I try to justify putting everything else on hold. All in pursuit of a dream.

That hasn't changed.

Success better happen to me.

Fast.

Professor researches grieving process

JANN STOUGH
staff reporter

One K-State professor is finding out how students deal with death. David Balk, professor of family studies and human services, is conducting a death survey.

For the past five years Balk handed out surveys in a human development class. What he found out surprised him.

"Almost 30 percent of the students who filled out the form have had a close friend or family member die in the last 12 months," Balk said.

Balk took this information to a friend and colleague in the Netherlands. Balk's friend, an expert in death and bereavement and professor at Utrecht University, decided to do a joint survey with K-State.

"We wanted to find out if we would find similar results on other campuses and different cultures," Balk said.

A joint survey was put together to find out how the grieving process affects students.

The survey is made up of 154 questions. It takes about 30 minutes to fill out and asks a variety of things about health, social status, belief systems and death.

"Just filling out the survey helps you realize how much stress you could have in your life. I can't imagine having to deal with someone's death and make it through school at the same time," said Jessica Pelky, sophomore in animal sciences and industry.

Balk said he hopes to use the survey to determine whether there is a need for a support base for grieving or stressed students.

"There are a large number of students on campus who, with the normal demands of academics and social life during college, also have to deal with a life crisis," Balk said. "College is not a good environment to deal with grieving. Other students are frightened by people who are grieving, and so they often feel alone."

Balk said friends often try to fix the problem, but you can't fix grief. That is why Balk's long-term goal would be for the University to set up peer services.

"There is counseling available now, but there's an old joke that you have to be crazy to see a counselor," Balk said. "I think students would feel more comfortable in a friendly, open atmosphere talking to someone who's just there to listen."

Balk said he hopes to have about 600 K-State students fill out the survey by next semester.

The results will be analyzed and compiled for presentation at a professional conference.

"The results will tell us how people deal with death and even normal pressure during college," Balk said. "It will give us a good sense of the social climate at K-State."

Literary magazine offers publication opportunities

R.J. DIEPENBROCK
staff reporter

K-State has many student-produced publications, but one that might not be widely known is the literary magazine, Touchstone.

Produced by graduate students, Touchstone provides undergraduate students an opportunity to publish their work in a professional setting.

"It gives undergraduates a chance to see their work on the same level as their peers," said Jennifer Bergen, graduate student in English and poetry editor.

Bergen said even for submitted articles that are turned down, it is still a great opportunity for undergraduates.

"It is important to submit your work," Bergen said. "This gives students the opportunity to submit work in fiction or poetry."

Touchstone, which is published during the spring semester, accepts submissions of poetry, fiction and artwork from students around K-State and from other universities as well.

Bergen said Touchstone is unique in that it accepts submissions from undergraduate students not attending K-State.

The decision-making process is left to the editors in charge of each genre — fiction, poetry and art.

"I'm not sure of my criteria yet," said Bridgett Bell, graduate student in journalism and mass communications and fiction editor. "But I will find the well-written stories."

Bell said she hoped working at Touchstone would give her the experience she needed to work at a larger magazine.

"I've already submitted articles to Essence and Glamour," she said.

Bell said among the magazines where she would like to work at, Essence, Glamour and Mademoiselle were her top three choices.

Choosing the poetry selections, Bergen said a group of two or three would sit down, read the submissions and discuss the ones they liked the best.

"We're looking for poetry comparable to the contemporary," Bergen said. "Not abstract. More concrete images."

The final say is by the Dawnielle Robinson, editor in chief and graduate student in creative writing.

"We hope to draw a wider audience," Robinson said.

"I chose a very diverse group of people for that purpose," she said.

Robinson said while there is quality talent submitting work, the lack of publicity has hurt the magazine by limiting the number of submissions received.

"This needs to be improved," Robinson said.

Laura Loveall, graduate student in English and design/production editor, said working at Touchstone will give her the experience to reach her dream of working at a major magazine publication.

She is not a stranger to the design and production process.

In the 1996 edition, Loveall was design/production editor.

"I helped design the artwork on the cover and chose what went in the magazine," she said.

"Any kind of experience is good experience," Loveall said. "I'd like to work at anything from a literary magazine to a popular magazine."

To submit work to Touchstone, leave your work in the Department of English office.

"We wanted to find out if we would find similar results on other campuses and different cultures," Balk said.

A joint survey was put together to find out how the grieving process affects students.

The survey is made up of 154 questions. It takes about 30 minutes to fill out and asks a variety of things about health, social status, belief systems and death.

"Just filling out the survey helps you realize how much stress you could have in your life. I can't imagine having to deal with someone's death and make it through school at the same time," said Jessica Pelky, sophomore in animal sciences and industry.

Balk said he hopes to use the survey to determine whether there is a need for a support base for grieving or stressed students.

"There are a large number of students on campus who, with the normal demands of academics and social life during college, also have to deal with a life crisis," Balk said. "College is not a good environment to deal with grieving. Other students are frightened by people who are grieving, and so they often feel alone."

Balk said friends often try to fix the problem, but you can't fix grief. That is why Balk's long-term goal would be for the University to set up peer services.

"There is counseling available now, but there's an old joke that you have to be crazy to see a counselor," Balk said. "I think students would feel more comfortable in a friendly, open atmosphere talking to someone who's just there to listen."

Balk said he hopes to have about 600 K-State students fill out the survey by next semester.

The results will be analyzed and compiled for presentation at a professional conference.

"The results will tell us how people deal with death and even normal pressure during college," Balk said. "It will give us a good sense of the social climate at K-State."

Literary magazine offers publication opportunities

R.J. DIEPENBROCK
staff reporter

K-State has many student-produced publications, but one that might not be widely known is the literary magazine, Touchstone.

Produced by graduate students, Touchstone provides undergraduate students an opportunity to publish their work in a professional setting.

"It gives undergraduates a chance to see their work on the same level as their peers," said Jennifer Bergen, graduate student in English and poetry editor.

Bergen said even for submitted articles that are turned down, it is still a great opportunity for undergraduates.

"It is important to submit your work," Bergen said. "This gives students the opportunity to submit work in fiction or poetry."

Touchstone, which is published during the spring semester, accepts submissions of poetry, fiction and artwork from students around K-State and from other universities as well.

Bergen said Touchstone is unique in that it accepts submissions from undergraduate students not attending K-State.

The decision-making process is left to the editors in charge of each genre — fiction, poetry and art.

"I'm not sure of my criteria yet," said Bridgett Bell, graduate student in journalism and mass communications and fiction editor. "But I will find the well-written stories."

Bell said she hoped working at Touchstone would give her the experience she needed to work at a larger magazine.

"I've already submitted articles to Essence and Glamour," she said.

Bell said among the magazines where she would like to work at, Essence, Glamour and Mademoiselle were her top three choices.

Choosing the poetry selections, Bergen said a group of two or three would sit down, read the submissions and discuss the ones they liked the best.

"We're looking for poetry comparable to the contemporary," Bergen said. "Not abstract. More concrete images."

The final say is by the Dawnielle Robinson, editor in chief and graduate student in creative writing.

"We hope to draw a wider audience," Robinson said.

"I chose a very diverse group of people for that purpose," she said.

Robinson said while there is quality talent submitting work, the lack of publicity has hurt the magazine by limiting the number of submissions received.

"This needs to be improved," Robinson said.

Laura Loveall, graduate student in English and design/production editor, said working at Touchstone will give her the experience to reach her dream of working at a major magazine publication.

She is not a stranger to the design and production process.

In the 1996 edition, Loveall was design/production editor..

"I helped design the artwork on the cover and chose what went in the magazine," she said.

"Any kind of experience is good experience," Loveall said. "I'd like to work at anything from a literary magazine to a popular magazine."

To submit work to Touchstone, leave your work in the Department of English office.

KU RECEIVER Isaac Byrd soars above K-State defensive back Demetric Denmark with a catch during Saturday's game in Lawrence. Byrd, who plays for a minor-league baseball team in the St. Louis Cardinals' organization, is able to play another sport under NCAA rules without being on scholarship. Byrd caught nine passes for 178 yards against the Cats.

K-State extends streak to 4 games with 38-12 win

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

June Henley might be the Jayhawks' Heisman Trophy hopeful, but in K-State's 38-12 bashing of KU on Saturday, it was the Hawks' Isaac Byrd who gave the Wildcats fits.

KU's starting quarterback, Ben Rutz, completed 10 of 19 passes in the first half for 195 yards and a touchdown. Seven of those passes were to wide receiver Byrd for 178 yards, including the touchdown pass, the Hawks' only touchdown on the day.

"I think he is a fine, fine receiver," K-State coach Bill Snyder said of Byrd. "He does some really nice things. He makes plays, gets himself open and catches the football. I tell you what, don't take anything away from Ben Rutz, though. Ben threw the ball into some pretty tight spots on occasion. He did a nice job being elusive, avoiding the rush and finding an open receiver."

It was KU's passing game many thought wouldn't be the Cats' problem. K-State entered the game ranked first in the Big 12 in pass-efficiency defense. The Jayhawks were fifth in the Big 12 in passing offense.

But it was KU's passing game that kept the Jayhawks within two points at the half as K-State led 14-12.

"If you can't rush the passer, which we didn't in the first half, you're going to run into some trouble that way," Snyder said.

The key phrase is in the first half.

In the second half, K-State dominated.

Byrd was allowed only two more passes for 28 yards in the second half. The second half was exactly what most K-State fans in attendance had expected to see — a K-State shutdown of the Jayhawk offense.

"In the second half, we missed a few tackles, but not nearly as many as we did in the first half," Snyder said. "That gave us a few opportunities to get a few sacks and put them in some negative-yardage situations."

ATTENDANCE – 48,800.

Henley was allowed only 14 rushes, and he gained only 34 yards, an average of 2.4 yards a rush. In essence, KU's running game didn't exist.

In comparison, K-State brought a solidly balanced attack to Memorial Stadium, spreading the offense between the passing game and the running game.

K-State wide receiver Kevin Lockett caught 11 passes for 168 yards and two touchdowns. Quarterback Brian Kavanagh completed 15 of 25 passes for 212 yards and four touchdowns. Running back Mike Lawrence amassed 159 yards on 27 attempts, an average of 5.9 yards per try. He also caught one pass for 6 yards.

Snyder said it was that balance that allowed the Cats to dominate.

"We're a better football team when we're balanced. It's the structure of our offense," he said. "If we can retain that, it will make us a better ball team."

The Cats began the third quarter with the defense rolling in high gear, forcing KU to go four-and-out. An 11-yard quarterback sack by linebacker David Conley with third-and-7 at the Jayhawks' own 26-yard line brought the punting unit in. Punter Dean Royal managed only a 37-yard punt to give K-State good field position at the Hawks' own 31-yard line.

Seven plays later, K-State tacked on another seven points on a 1-yard touchdown run by Kavanagh. Three consecutive runs by Lawrence for gains of 7, 3 and 3 yards set up the touchdown.

Two possessions later, K-State scored again, this time on an 11-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Andre Anderson. K-State 28, Kansas 12.

But perhaps the key play in the game was something K-State had no control over.

On KU's next possession, the Cats quickly forced the Hawks to fourth-and-2 at KU's own 31-yard line. Instead of punting, KU Coach Glen Mason chose to go for the first down.

"We were down three scores," Mason said. "We needed the first down."

But a quarterback sack by linebacker Darren Howard, only one of seven the Cats would have in the game, gave the ball back to K-State at the 22-yard line. Five plays later, the Cats had another three points and a 19-point lead.

"I thought that is what we needed to do at that point," Mason said. "That's why I love my job, because I can make decisions like that."

With the win, K-State (8-1, 5-1) jumps to No. 9 in the Associated Press poll. Kansas falls to 4-5, 2-4 in conference play.

Wildcats slam OU 3-0

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

The Wildcats took one step closer to the NCAA Tournament on Friday with a 15-7, 15-9, 15-10 win over Oklahoma in Norman.

K-State held the Sooners (14-11, 5-9 in the Big 12) to just .217 hitting, recording eight team blocks, including solo stops by freshman swing hitter Abbie Brown and sophomore middle blocker Val Wieck.

"We did block well that night," Coach Jim Moore said. "We blocked well, we hit well, and we passed phenomenally in game one. Kim (Zschau) was unbelievable."

K-State's offense was sparked by the precision attack of senior play-set hitter Toie Young. Young landed 12 kills on just 15 attempts, committing only one error.

"Toie played very well," Moore said. "She blocked really well, and she hit very smart. She said she figured some things out last night, so if she can do that on a regular basis, we'll be OK."

The win moves No. 20 K-State to 22-5 overall, 10-4 in conference play, with just six matches remaining. Only two of those matches are on the road (Iowa State and Missouri), and three of the Cats' next opponents are ranked in the top 10 — No. 7 Nebraska, No. 9 Texas and No. 10 Texas A&M.

With their record to date and the schedule that remains, Moore said the Cats were in good position to make their first-ever NCAA appearance.

"We have to beat Iowa State and Missouri at the end, and we may have to beat Colorado here. But it certainly puts us in a good position," Moore said.

The Cats return home Friday for a rematch with the Cornhuskers, a team K-State took to five games in Lincoln in September but has never beaten. Although Nebraska is the highest-ranked opponent the Cats face this season, Moore said his team has to concentrate on Saturday's match against Colorado, because the Cats will be favored to win.

"The Colorado match is still the most important match for us," he said. "But I know 12 players who will do everything they can do to beat Nebraska."

Cats win season opener, defeat Thunder 80-63

JOHN BERGGREN
sports writer

When K-State's basketball team defeated the NBC Thunder Camps 80-63 Friday, it showed Wildcat fans a lot of things.

The team showed at times it can shoot the ball well from the field and the free-throw line. It also showed it will make mistakes, characteristic of a young team.

The Cats went into halftime with a narrow, 44-39 lead. They were shooting 50 percent from the field while holding the Thunder to just 33 percent. The Cats also lit it up from the free-throw line, hitting 10 of 12 in the half.

K-State cooled off in the second half. The Cats finished the game hitting 48 percent from the field and 71 percent from the free-throw line. Sophomore forward Shawn Rhodes led the Cats in scoring with 15, followed by junior forward Mark Young with 12.

"In the first half, we executed our offense fairly well," K-State coach Tom Asbury said. "We threw the ball away a few times, but we executed and showed poise. Our shot selection was better tonight than it has been in practice at times."

The squad's four newcomers also left their mark in the scorebooks, each finishing with at least four points. Freshman forward Pero Vasiljevic finished with nine points, sophomore guard Chris Griffin with eight, junior center Dax Jones with six, and freshman forward Josh Reid with four.

"They were pretty nervous, but that's to be expected," Asbury said. "They're a group that's going to be pretty good for us."

Griffin said he admitted nervousness also struck him before tipoff.

"I was pretty excited and felt awkward at first," Griffin said. "It has been a year and a half since I've played organized basketball. I felt a little rusty on everything."

Although he said the win was nice, Asbury said the Cats had other goals set for this exhibition game.

"We set out with a plan, and we accomplished what we set out to do," Asbury said. "We wanted to get designated minutes to certain players in a game setting. It is good to play in a game setting to see what happens. The outcome is irrelevant. I saw some good things, and I see a lot of promise in a lot of guys."

Rusted Root's new CD will be well-received

ERICA DUNCAN
staff reporter

Rusted Root's newest compact disc, "Remember," will attract accoustic music lovers around the country. The CD highlights unusual percussion instruments and soulful lyrics.

The six-member group has 14 tracks on its latest CD. They range from slow, narrative songs to fast rock songs.

The group has a percussion sound all its own.

Drums, cymbals, tambourines, sticks, shakers, bells and woodclappers are used in many of the songs. Unique sounds produced from these unusual instruments add a dimension that is absent from most of today's popular music.

The lead vocals are clear and easy to understand. A tragedy of many songs is the inability to decipher the lyrics.

Michael Glabicki, lead vocalist, has a deep, soothing voice.

Traditional instruments, such as the acoustic guitar, piano and electric guitar, are also used, but their role is minor.

The lack of loud, overwhelming electric guitars associated with rock music will lead music lovers to Rusted Root.

Although many of the songs sound similar, the lyrics and meanings are so different a listener rarely notices the similarities in rhythm.

Lyrics play a vital role in the group's ability to draw listeners.

Unlike the case with many popular songs, you can understand the lyrics in Rusted Root's percussion-rich music.

The first track, "Faith I Do Believe," is a song about relationships, looking inside and finding the right answers.

In this song, both the people in the relationship have been hurt so many times that the man decides to look to faith for the answers to his problems.

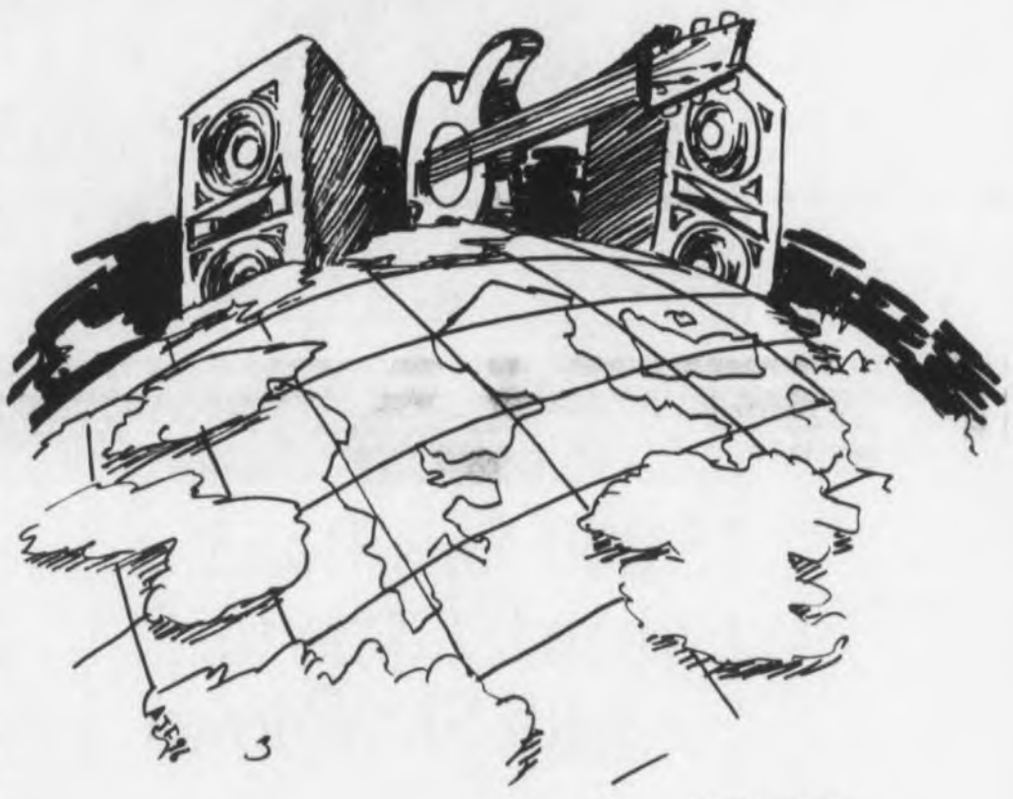
"This blind disease has hurt so many times before" indicates the man's apparent realization something is wrong in the relationship, and it needs to be rectified.

Eventually, the couple become both lovers and friends.

They figure out how to combine a sexual relationship with a communicative relationship, both of which are essential.

The song has a message that sometimes it is necessary to put your own well-being in front of others' and do what is right for you.

Many of Rusted Root's songs contain a spiritual message. Do not get spiritual and religious messages confused.



Rusted Root's songs delve into the inner self and do a lot of soul-searching.

In "Silver and Gold," Glabicki sings about losing his Bible.

The Bible is a metaphor representing his faith and spirituality, which is being taken.

He is losing contact with reality and becoming overwhelmed by his obsession with worldly possessions.

Rusted Root does an excellent job combining lyrics and instrumentals, creating a product that will be well-received throughout the music world.

K-STATELIFE

EDITOR: DAN LEWERENZ 532-6556 (BAXOJE@KSU.KSU.EDU) MONDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1996

BEHIND THE GAME

T.J. TURNER, junior in elementary education, left, raises his arms after the Wildcats score in the first quarter Saturday afternoon. Turner was watching the game from Campanile Hill with his brother, KU student Mike Turner, senior in athletic training, and his friend, K-State student Jeremy Herman, junior in management information systems.

15,000 fans flood Jayhawk home turf for 94th Showdown

STORY BY SHANA NEWELL

The day began with a warm sun shining down. But as the opposing teams of the 94th annual Sunflower Showdown took the field at KU's Memorial Stadium on Saturday, the weather began to turn colder.

With 48,800 fans in attendance, the K-State vs. Kansas battle provided K-State fans with the Wildcats' fourth-straight victory over the Jayhawks.

And with the win, K-State quarterback Brian Kavanagh said the Jayhawks should begin giving the Wildcats a little something in return.

TEN-YEAR-OLD Keenan Grosdidier, top, Brad Harris, 9, and Dustin Kennedy, 11, all from St. Paul, Kansas, watch the game action from the stands Saturday afternoon. Keenan is the younger brother of tight end Jarrett Grosdidier.

"Hopefully, we'll get a little respect now that we've beaten them four times in a row," he said.

Most of the estimated 15,000 K-State fans at Memorial Stadium would probably agree. John Normley, a Cat fan from Overland Park, said the Wildcats deserve to be respected.

"For so many years, it's been wait until basketball season," Normley said. "Now we can say 'Wait until football season' and mean it."

Michael Dunson, a 12-year-old Manhattan resident, said he came to cheer on his favorite player, Kevin Lockett.

"Kevin's my favorite, but really, all the Wildcats are," Dunson said. "And as long as they beat KU, they'll be No. 1 to me."

But it wasn't only K-State fans who said the Wildcats deserved respect from Jayhawk fans.

Some Hawk fans turned their heads west, too.

"You've got to give them a lot of credit," Christen Murdock, a KU student, said. "They came in here and stuck it to us again. Again. I can't believe it. Four years in a row."

And with the large numbers of K-Staters who made the trip to Lawrence, the football team showed their appreciation by spending some time at the Cats' end of the field before heading to the locker room after the game. Coach Bill Snyder said the fan support was incredible.

"I think it always is," he said. "We've got as great a fans as there are anywhere. This isn't a very long distance to go, but I tell you, they show up almost anyplace we go. They've been so very responsive, and I'm grateful to them. It does make a difference."

A difference indeed. When the clock was ticking down, about 90 percent of the fans remaining in the stands were colored in purple.

"It wasn't very long ago that the stands would have been empty by the middle of the third quarter," Max Unson, longtime Jayhawk fan, said. "It's incredible how many K-Staters stayed. It really shows how much they value their team."

TOP. RYAN WEIR, sophomore in recreation and park administration, left, talks to his father, Jim Weir, and brother, Marc Weir, during the game Saturday afternoon. Ryan Weir, Jim Weir and Marc Weir are current, past and future K-Staters, respectively.

MARK DIENHART (right), senior in finance; Eric Matson, senior in accounting; Eric Rapley, May 1996 graduate; and Colby Jones, graduate student in accounting, laugh outside Memorial Stadium while trying to find tickets. They had gotten involved in a minor verbal argument with a scalper who, in their opinion, was asking too much for tickets.

Advertising Design

Publication Practice MC 360

If you are interested in working in newspaper ad design/production you can earn one hour of journalism credit during spring semester 1997. Just attend class one day a week from 8:30-11:30 a.m. The instructor's permission is required. No prerequisites required.

If you are a graphic design major and can work at least 12 hours per week, you can earn three hours of credit in graphic design. Prerequisites must be met and instructor's permission are required.

The experience you earn in the spring could qualify you to apply for a paid, part-time position in the summer and/or fall.

Come to 113 Kedzie from 8 a.m.-3 p.m. for more information and syllabus.

"We are going to conquer all of Zaire and we shall restore democracy and justice, improve the economy and end corruption," he said.

Few believe Kassasse and his army, estimated at 3,000-7,000 men, will be able to march the more than 900 miles to the capital, Kinshasa, in a country that lacks a national network of roads and reliable communications.

Braeckman said she doubted that other opposition groups would join the rebels. "Opposition parties in Kinshasa ... say they are invaders, Rwanda's puppets. There is a lot of mistrust," she said.

Zaire says Rwanda, Burundi and even Uganda are behind the uprising. Uganda supported Rwandan Tutsis in the early 1990s as they began a guerrilla war to oust the anti-Tutsi government then in power in Rwanda.

Rwanda acknowledged it has provided moral support and training for the Zairian rebels, and admits some Rwandan soldiers have joined the fight. Burundi and Uganda have staunchly denied any involvement.

For more than two years, refugee camps in eastern Zaire have been havens for Hutu rebels trying to overthrow Tutsi-led governments in Rwanda and Burundi. Last month, Hutus joined Zairian soldiers attacking ethnic Tutsis in Zaire.

The camps were set up in 1994 when more than a million Hutus crossed the border to escape an advancing Tutsi-led army that now controls Rwanda. Since then, Hutu leaders in the camps have refused to return to Rwanda, fearing retribution for their part in the 1994 genocide that killed 500,000 Rwandans, mostly Tutsis and moderate Hutus.

Rwandan presidential adviser Ephraim Kabayija accused the Zairian military and the Rwandan Hutus of wanting to purge the border region of Tutsis.

"There has always been hate and resistance against Tutsis in eastern Zaire, but when the Interahamwe (Rwandan Hutu militias) went there, they heightened the hatred," he said.

should say, 'You were right for the last 50 years when you didn't advertise on television; you're wrong to change your policy now.'

"This is no time to turn back," he said. "Get back on the ban. That's the best way to protect all our families."

The liquor industry voluntarily barred radio ads promoting such products as whiskey, vodka and rum in 1936. Twelve years later, it extended the ban to television.

But on Thursday, the distillers said they wanted to be as free as brewers and winemakers to advertise on the airwaves.

Responding to earlier government criticism, Fred Meister, president of the Distilled Spirits Council of the United States, which made the decision to drop the ad ban, said, "We will do whatever is necessary to protect our First Amendment rights" to free speech.

Meister said the council's revised marketing and advertising code now has provisions to shield youngsters from the ads, including one not to use images, objects and cartoons popular with children.

Salina murder suspect caught in Boston

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — If anything about Alan Eugene White struck workers at the homeless shelter where he was staying, it was how normal he looked.

"He seemed very mild-mannered, polite. Like your all-American boy. Like the kid next door," said Mary King, a direct-care counselor at the Long Island Shelter Annex.

Then King saw another image of White — courtesy of "America's Most Wanted." It painted him as a man suspected of bludgeoning to death three members of a Kansas family.

"Oh, my God! Oh, my God! That's him! I know him!" King said she told her boyfriend when she saw White's picture on the nationally televised show Saturday night. "I couldn't even believe it, but I had no doubt it was him."

King called the show. A half-hour later, White was in the custody of the FBI.

White, 26, had been named as a suspect within weeks after the bodies of an 81-year-old woman, her daughter and great-grandson were found in the older woman's Salina home in July.

The former Salina resident had been at the city-run shelter at least two months, King said.

"We received several tips four to five minutes after the profile aired from people saying he was at some sort of shelter in Boston," said Kathy Swanda, spokeswoman for the Fox network show, "America's Most Wanted: America Fights Back."

Salina police have filed an affidavit in Saline County seeking warrants against White for three charges of first-degree murder, Police Chief Jim Hill said Sunday.

"We have circumstantial and scientific evidence linking him to the crime scene," Hill said.

White is wanted in connection with the killings of Delores McKim, 81; her daughter, Carol Abercrombie, 56, of Soddy-Daisy, Tenn.; and McKim's great-grandson, Christopher Abercrombie, 5, of Greenville, N.C. Their bodies were found July 22 in the bedrooms of McKim's east Salina home; authorities believe they were killed July 20 or 21.

White was also named in county warrants for violating parole on a burglary conviction in Saline County, Hill said.

The murders, which occurred in a prominent Salina neighborhood, gripped the attention of Salina residents.

Helen Graves, the mother of Gov. Bill Graves, lives across the street from the McKim home. She said she was relieved an arrest was made in the case.

"I am certainly not saying I think (White) is a murderer," Graves said. "But he is the only suspect we have, and I am glad they'll have a chance to talk to him."

Jack Gallagher, a retired Salina police officer and frequent actor in Salina Community Theatre productions, was one of the local actors used in the TV dramatization. He portrayed an officer who questioned White.

Gallagher said watching the show stirred emotions. The show included photos and home videotapes of the victims and interviews with family members.

A Salina police officer and an agent from the Kansas Bureau of Investigation flew Sunday to Boston, where White will probably be arraigned today on the federal warrant, Hill said.

White had last been reported living in the small north-central Kansas town of Formoso. He had been a member, along with McKim's late husband, of the Central Kansas Amateur Radio Club of Salina and had been at the McKim home.

His mother, Jo White, said Saturday night that his family spoke with him by telephone after his arrest.

"He didn't seem to know how much trouble he was in," she said, adding that he had not seen the TV show.

But King had. And that meant a quick end to White's time on the run.

"This is absolutely one of our quickest arrests," Swanda said. "Everyone is just so excited downstairs. That's why we do this. We're just amazed that he was captured this quickly."

World War II veteran fears heroic sacrifices could be easily forgotten

CECILY RODRIGUEZ
staff reporter

Because Veteran's Day is so important to Manhattan's veterans, the Manhattan community honored the day with a parade down Poyntz Avenue and a formal ceremony outside the Riley County Courthouse on Monday.

In 1946, Warren Bayer, who was in the parade, had not touched American soil in four years. He had been fighting overseas in World War II.

Now, 50 years later, he's concerned the sacrifice he and thousands of other soldiers made might soon be forgotten.

"Because there are no more formal declarations of war, there is a fading away of recognition. As regular veterans die, there'll be a time when there won't be any more veterans to honor. We don't live forever," he said.

> "I feel very sorry for your generation. You haven't had anything to really live for or die for or anything else. You're the first generation to come along like that."

Spectators were clustered along Poyntz Avenue to watch as more than 25 groups marched past the Riley County Armed Forces Memorial, which stands in front of the courthouse.

The Manhattan and Riley County high-school bands played "Yankee Doodle Dandy" while the Shriners drove figure eights in their miniature Tin Lizzies.

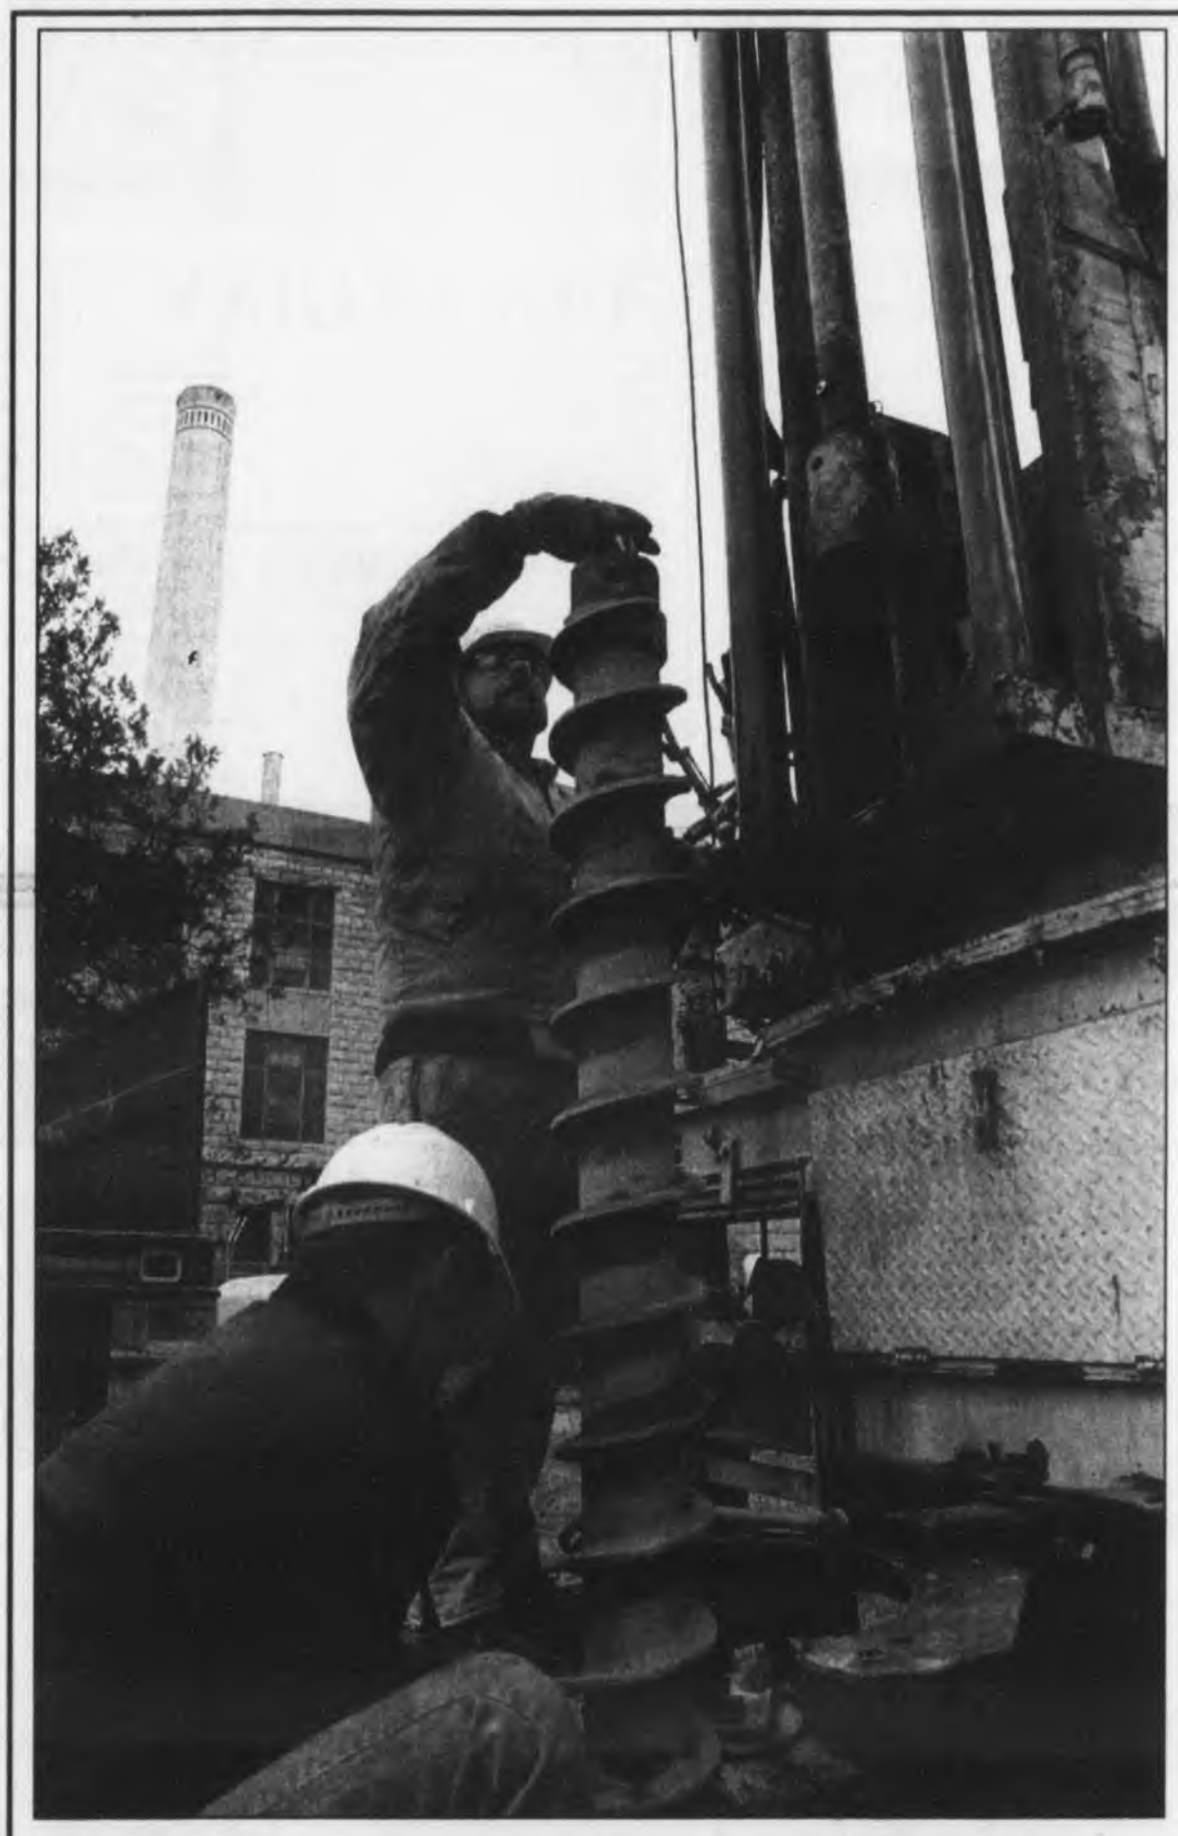
State and local representatives rode in antique Buicks while color guards and ROTC cadets marched in rows carrying the U.S. flag.

Other groups represented were the Kiwanis Club, Lions Club, Knights of Columbus, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Riley County EMS and police department and several other community-service groups.

Veterans braved the bitter November wind and gathered outside the courthouse, some dressed in full uniform and others wearing only a cap or sweatshirt bearing the name of the war they served in with their medals on their chests.

Keynote speaker for the ceremony Maj. Gen. Michael Dodson, commanding general, Fort Riley, spoke to the crowd about the valor and courage of veterans of wars gone by.

"Today we honor those who have sacrificed so much for America. The deeds of these great veterans are etched in our memories. They are the fabric of this nation," Dodson said.



He also reminded everyone not to overlook those who serve today.

"Some may ask, will they sustain the legacy of those who've gone before? I can tell you with certainty that they will," he said. "In my 25-plus years of service, I've seen them, these ordinary citizens who continue to answer our nation's call.

"I've witnessed their valor amidst the loneliness and isolation of Vietnam. They've been in Grenada, Panama, the Persian Gulf, Somalia, Haiti and Bosnia, where they serve today.

"They will endure countless hardships in the name of freedom. Some of them sadly will be honored in cemeteries or in countless foreign

Army documents reveal intimidation followed abuse

BALTIMORE — An Army instructor threatened to kill three trainees if they told superiors he was having sex with them, the Army said in releasing more details of a widening sex scandal at a training center in Maryland.

Staff Sgt. Delmar Simpson is charged with raping three female recruits and threatening them with death, according to Army documents detailing the criminal charges against Simpson and four others.

"If anyone finds out about me having sex with you, I'll kill you," Simpson was quoted as telling one of the women during a confrontation July 21. Simpson, a drill sergeant, also grabbed a woman's hair and jerked her head back after threatening her, according to the documents released Saturday.

"I'm going to knock your teeth out and get away with it," Simpson told a trainee, according to the documents.

The Army has filed criminal charges against three men and administrative charges against two more — all married — at the Army Ordnance Center in Aberdeen.

The men — four drill instructors and a captain — were suspended along with 15 other instructors who were placed on paid administrative duty.

The five men facing charges, which range from rape to sending improper love letters to the trainees, were accused of harassing at least a dozen women in their first weeks of training. The average age of the women was 21.

"It's a great, great tragedy, and our task now is to ensure that we find out exactly just how widespread it is and bring to justice all those who should be brought to justice," Gen. John Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said Mondayon ABC's "Good Morning America."

Acknowledging that the Army still has a problem with sexual harassment, the four-star Army general said the services have made great strides in ensuring that women are represented at all levels of command, a development he said would help combat harassment.

In the two days since the charges were announced Thursday and the Army set up a hotline for reporting incidents of sexual abuse at the post, 1,528 calls were received, said Maj. Susan Gibson, deputy staff judge advocate at the post.

At least 50 female callers, including many trainees, reported a variety of improper behavior at Aberdeen that ranged from crude remarks to severe sexual abuse. At least 60 other callers complained of problems at other military installations nationwide, Army officials said.

The Army is looking into whether similar incidents of sexual harassment and other improper behavior occurred at any of its other installations.

"If there are similar situations elsewhere, there might be similar violations," Army Secretary Togo West said Sunday on CNN's "Late Edition."

Gen. Dennis Reimer, the Army chief of staff, told the Washington Post in an interview published today that he pushed for going public with the inquiry because he was concerned word of it might leak and the Army would be accused of a cover-up similar to the Navy's 1991 Tailhook scandal.

"My concern was, if it leaked, people would accuse us of having kept it under cover," Reimer said. "My basic lesson learned from Tailhook is to try to make the investigative process as open

British debaters to visit, tour K-State

JESS LOUK
staff reporter

The British are coming, but they're not carrying guns this time. This time they will have their wit and intelligence ready for battle.

Great Britain's national debate champions will stop at K-State on their U.S. tour for a parliamentary-style debate against two former K-State national champions.

Rich McCollum won his national championship for K-State in 1991, with K.J. Wall following suit in 1993.

The competing teams will debate the notion that the Yankees should go home. The British will take the pro while the K-Staters argue the con.

Parliamentary-style debate is a much looser form of debate, Susan Stanfield, director of debate at K-State, said.

In parliamentary-style debate, it is not uncommon for opponents to rap their knuckles against the table or insert a counterpoint while their adversaries are speaking.

If people knock, they are letting the audience know they think the speaker is stretching the truth, Brent Siemers, assistant debate coach, said.

"They pretty much just embarrass you. They're really smart, and they have a way of turning your language back around on you," Siemers said. "They'll try to find examples that fit your definitions of what the words are and make you seemingly defend the indefensible."

K-State is just one of the stops for the British debaters. They will stop at 20-25 universities across the country, Stanfield said.

"This is a totally different experience. These debaters are very funny and very smart. I would equate it to going and seeing an hour-and-15-minute comedy on stage," Siemers said.

The debate will be at 7 p.m. Thursday at Nichols Theatre. There is a pre-debate reception at 6 p.m. Thursday in Nichols Atrium for high-school debaters and students and faculty from the Department of Speech Communication, Theater and Dance. There will be an opportunity for the public to meet the debaters from 12:30 to 1:30 p.m. Thursday in the Union Little Theatre.

Speaking of debate

- The team is ranked ninth in the country, according to information from the Cross Examination Debate Association.
- The ranking includes more than 200 universities.
- K-State debaters took three of the top 10 speaker awards and placed in ties for third and fourth at the West Point Academy tournament.
- Chad Brockman, junior in philosophy, won the award as the second best debater.
- Issac West, sophomore in speech, won the third-best debater award.
- The team was invited to Weaver Round Robin at Weaver State in Utah in January. Sue Stanfield, director of debate, said only the top 10 teams are invited each year.

Quotable comments

- "We've accomplished a lot in terms that we have a really young squad," Brent Siemers, assistant debate coach, said.

24 HOURS IN REVIEW

NATION WORLD

• AID REACHES GOMA. Small amounts of emergency food and medicine trickled into Goma, Zaire, Monday after a delay at the Zaire-Rwanda border. Tutsi rebel leader Laurent Kabila agreed over the weekend to allow aid agencies into Zaire's eastern cities, where fighting in the past month sent more than a million refugees fleeing into inhospitable forests and mountains without food or water.

• NORTH KOREA NOT INTERESTED IN PEACE TALKS. Angered by a U.S. demand that it apologize for its recent submarine mission to South Korea, North Korea threatened Monday to stay out of proposed four-way talks on bringing peace to divided Korea. In April, President Clinton and South Korean President Kim Young-sam proposed having talks.

• CLINTON PLEDGES FURTHER WORK ON GULF WAR ILLNESS. President Clinton promised Gulf War veterans Monday the government will keep searching for an explanation of the illnesses that many of them have suffered. "There are mysteries still unanswered, and we must do more," he said. During a Veterans Day observance at Arlington National Cemetery, Clinton said there were 26,000 disability cases among Gulf veterans, and they all deserve full explanations for their ailments.

• JEWS DEMONSTRATE IN HEBRON. In a prayer protest against a planned Israeli troop re-deployment, hundreds of Jews demonstrated in Hebron Monday, a day after Benjamin Netanyahu's phone call to Yasser Arafat failed to break the deadlock in talks on the city's future. Israeli soldiers, assault rifles at the ready, guarded the marchers as they passed a bustling Palestinian outdoor market.

• GUERRILLA PEACE ACCORD IN GUATEMALA. Guatemala has reached a peace agreement with the guerrilla movement that will put an end to 36 years of fighting, President Alvaro Arzu announced Monday.

Arzu said to the closing session of the Sixth Ibero-American presidential summit the final accord with the guerrillas will be signed Dec. 26, formally ending a war that took at least 140,000 lives. Arzu said word of the peace pact was relayed to him late Monday from Mexico, where talks between representatives of his government and the guerrillas had resumed a short while earlier under U.N. mediation.

SPORTS

• BULLETS FORWARD CHARGED WITH DWI. Washington Bullets forward Juwan Howard was arrested early Monday for drunken driving and is due in court next month. A District of Columbia police officer arrested Howard about 3:45 a.m. after his 1995 Mercedes was spotted speeding.

• SMOLTZ WINS NL CY YOUNG. John Smoltz ended Greg Maddux's Cy Young streak at four, easily winning the award Monday and giving the Atlanta Braves four straight winners. He received 26 first-place votes and two second-place votes for 136 points in balloting by the Baseball Writers Association of America. Florida's Kevin Brown was second with two firsts, 26 seconds and 88 points.

• OLAUWON WINS FIRST NBA OKAYER AWARD. Hakeem Olajuwon of the Houston Rockets won the first NBA Player of the Week Award of the season Monday. Olajuwon led the Rockets to six straight victories, four on the road, averaging 28.7 points, nine rebounds, three assists and 1.7 steals per game. Other candidates for the Player of the Week award were Michael Jordan of Chicago, Terrell Brandon of Cleveland, Shaquille O'Neal of the Los Angeles Lakers, Tim Hardaway of Miami, Vin Baker of Milwaukee, Anfernee Hardaway of Orlando, Allen Iverson of Philadelphia, Shawn Kemp of Seattle and Damon Stoudamire of Toronto.

Police continue query into alleged rape case

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

The investigation of a rape report filed by a K-State student is ongoing, Detective Richard Herrman of the K-State Police said Monday.

"The victim filed a rape report. She claims the suspect, whom she knows, took advantage of her in her room in Goodnow Hall," Herrman said.

Investigators talked to the suspect and reinterviewed the victim, he said. They are also trying to put together a report and are talking to witnesses.

"Hopefully, we can have the paperwork at the county attorney's office by Thursday," Herrman said. "At this point, as far as we can determine, the victim had been drinking. As far as the suspect, there is nothing to lead me in that direction."

POLICEBLOTTER

Reports are taken directly from the daily logs of the K-State and Riley County police departments. Because of space constraints, we do not list wheel locks or minor traffic violations.
